In view of all this, what is the attitude of the alliance toward Jimmy Carter after this event? Hopefully they will not again attribute the explosive character of the situation to this miserable excuse of the U.S. election campaign. All parties involved ought to have realized at long last that the 1980 U.S. election campaign is the secondary phenomenon of this year. Even if there were no election campaign, even if election day were years away Carter could not fold his hands in his lap. The Americans expect a halt to the humiliation, and soon. The thrust into the desert now offers Carter new diplomatic options. But the Iranians must expect that Carter will make history in the foreseeable future, one way or another.

The allies do not have any alternative but to stand unequivocally by Washington's side. It is impossible to steal away from this crisis, if it is slated to grasp Europe then it will, no matter how the Europeans behave. On the contrary, an unclear or even fearful attitude would only create danger. Leaving Carter alone means forcing him to take unilateral actions. The idea that the Allies could persuade Carter to leave the United States stuck in the swamp of humiliation for the sake of European convenience is unrealistic. The more cohesive the front, the more convincing the impression of Western strength and Western determination, the sooner will the Iranians yield. But if the Europeans try to evade they will learn all the sooner that the abortive mission was but a prelude.

SCHMIDT, APEL ADDRESS BUNDESWEHR COMMANDING OFFICERS

Schmidt on Military Balance

LD291730 Hamburg DPA in German 1625 GMT 29 Apr 80

[Excerpts] Trier--In view of the critical world situation, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has called on the superpowers to show readiness for compromise. He told the 24th meeting of Bundeswehr commanding officers in Trier today that the potential principal parties are talking to one another as little as did the states in the summer of 1914 before the outbreak of World War I. A further aggravation of the situation can be avoided only if there is a concrete will to negotiate. The situation gives cause for concern. Care should be taken not to let matters drift.

Schmidt issued a warning against inadvertent developments which nobody wants. In repeating his analogy with 1914, the chancellor said that nobody in 1914 wanted war. But in the end there was so much muddling and so many blunders that the conflict became inevitable. If the world powers fail to talk to each other, that would lead to misunderstanding and misinterpretations of the other's intentions. It is essential to put oneself in the position of one's opponent. Contact between the principal parties concerned must be maintained. Nobody in the West has the absurd idea of ejecting the Soviets from Afghanistan by force. But political pressure is needed to get the Soviet leadership to decide on leaving Afghanistan.

Schmidt said that the balance of military forces between East and West is not in itself a guarantee of peace. Again he pointed out that, by reason of the Soviet medium-range missiles, a situation is taking shape in which the balance could be considerably upset. The chancellor spoke of an "overwhelming superiority" of the Eastern side. The West cannot acquiesce. "That idea must be corrected."

Apel on NATO Commitment

[Excerpts] Trier--Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel has said that the politicians of the parties represented in the Bundestag are united in believing that, given the preservation of a balance, there is little likelihood of a war in Central Europe in the next decade either.

Speaking to commanding officers of the Bundeswehr in Trier today, Apel said he believed that military conflicts would increasingly shift to regions that were of great importance to Europe but which did not belong to NATO's agreed sphere of action. If the United States asked of NATO that some of its burden be shared in order to be able to take on worldwide tasks, the Federal Republic must be prepared to exercise solidarity in this regard. Apel reaffirmed that there was no question of using the Bundeswehr outside the NATO region.

Apel pointed to urgent future financial problems. "We must realize that in future, too, the financial possibilities of the federal budget for national defense will be limited to what is essential for the credibility of defense." Nonetheless, the Federal Republic will fulfill the obligations undertaken in NATO and the long-term defense program of the Alliance. Therefore, there has to be an optimal organization of the Bundeswehr's defense capacity.

The Bundeswehr is standing at the threshold of the decision on new weapons systems for the nineties, Apel said. It will be necessary "to think unconventionally, to critically examine all projects, to permit no taboos, to form a clear picture of the financial structure in the nineties and the manpower possibilities." Apel stressed that the introduction of the American Airborne Early-Warning System, AWACS, would be the last large personnel-intensive operation that could be required of the Bundeswehr. "In future we will be able to take on new tasks only when other tasks are dropped."

Apel Rules Out New Fighter

DW301018 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 30 Apr 80 p 5

[Ulrich Mackensen report]

[Excerpts] Trier, 29 April--Only after an intense debate "which will be everything but comfortable," will the Defense Ministry initiate a decisionmaking process on the arms to be procured for the Bundeswehr in the nineties. This was stated by Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel on Tuesday at the 24th commanders' meeting in Trier. About 370 high-ranking Bundeswehr officers, ranging from colonel to four-star general, participated. Apel said he wanted to begin this discussion early next year because one would be at "the threshold of decisions" at that time.

Apel said in a talk with journalists that it may be feasible to reduce the number of tracked vehicles, such as armored personnel carriers, for example, and to replace them with wheeled vehicles. They are much cheaper, less likely to need repairs, and they can be used in 95 percent of the area of the Federal Republic.

Apel pointed out categorically that no defense budget means will be made available for the development of a new fighter plane. In the view of Great Britain and France, these two countries and the Federal Republic were supposed to make DM10 billion available for the development of the TKF, [expansion unknown] of which Bonn alone would have to contribute DM 3.5 billion. Observers believe that this project has thus failed. Apel left it open, however, as to whether or not an already developed plane might be bought in the nineties from another country.

STRAUSS SUPPORTS CARTER IN NOT INFORMING ALLIES OF RESCUE BID

[Text] Munich--Franz Josef Strauss, the Union's candidate for the chancellorship, has said the election date of 5 October is an important stage on the way to resetting the course of German and European policy. A change is now doubly necessary since the whole Western world is undergoing a "dramatic period of trial," Strauss writes in the latest issue of the CSU newspaper BAYERNKURIER.

According to Strauss, "peace spokesman" Helmut Schmidt has meanwhile become the "chancellor who threatens and talks war." It is the "wrongly adopted socialist policy of detente of the Brandt and Schmidt governments which is leading to the fateful alternatives of capitulation or war." The latest "undisguised Soviet threat of an nuclear strike against the Federal Republic" shows how much pretence and reality there was in the policy of detente which was practiced for a decade.

Europe's obligation as an ally to the United States is particularly well defined at present, Strauss stressed. Words are not enough in this respect. Only "fateful political short-sightedness" can mislead people "to fall upon Carter now." Strauss also defends the U.S. President for his decision not to inform the Western Allies about the plans for what was to be an abortive attempt to free the hostages in Iran. According to Strauss, in the first place Carter "would have had to wait a long time for a response, given the familiar European perplexity in world crisis situations" and secondly, there would probably, in his view, have been details in the world press even before the planned rescue action.

STRAUSS CASTIGATES BONN'S REACTION TO APN ATTACK

DW300918 Bonn DIE WELT in German 30 Apr 80 p 3

[Manfred Schell undated interview with Franz Josef Strauss, Bavarian minister president, CSU chairman and chancellor candidate of the CDU/CSU]

[Text] Bonn--DIE WELT: Mr Strauss, Moscow has threatened that the FRG would be the target of an Eastern retaliation strike in the event of military conflict. How do you assess this development and what interconnections do you see?

Strauss: This development gives cause for three remarks: 1. This is the beginning of a threatening intimidation campaign. When something like this appears in APN, then this is the first stage, as it were. Other stages will follow, if the campaign is continued. 2. The Soviets have already made a habit of treating the FRG as a sort of political colony. It is allowed to stay in NATO, yet it may no longer live up to its tasks as an ally of the United States in NATO. 3. This threat also constitutes support for the SPD in the election campaign. Whenever criticism is leveled at the leaders of the Federal Republic, by which in case of doubt Helmut Schmidt is meant as well, it is primarily the CDU/CSU which is the target. The whole thing proves how treacherous the detente policy of the Brandt-Schmidt governments has been.

WELT: How should the chancellor react to this threat from Moscow?

Strauss: In any case you cannot react as Helmut Schmidt's press spokesman, Mr Boelling, did--namely, that this involved agitated phrases which would not go any further. This is babble. It is necessary to make it clear to the Soviet Union in no uncertain terms that the Federal Republic is a sovereign state, that it will not be dissuaded from its policy of alliance loyalty either by threats or curses. Helmut Schmidt must cease to fan a fear of war which plays into the hands of the Soviets. Our ally, the United States, must make it clear that a strike against the Federal Republic would trigger consequences which would spell true catastrophe for the Soviet Union as well.

WELT: What is your attitude toward a Moscow trip by the chancellor in view of this?

Strauss: Even more than before Helmut Schmidt must now consider under what preconditions and terms and with what chances he can embark on this trip. After all, there would only be sense in going if he brings back with him assurances of Russian readiness for disarmament negotiations, the result of which would be not only the renunciation of the deployment of medium-range missiles on NATO territory in Europe, but also the dissolution of the existing medium-range missile units and corresponding bomber units in the Soviet Union.

SHIPS LEAVE FOR MEDITERRANEAN, INDIAN OCEAN

LD291120 Hamburg DPA in German 0937 GMT 29 Apr 80

[Excerpts] Kiel--The destroyer Luetjens, the supply ship Coburg and the tanker Spessart of the Bundesmarine left Kiel this morning on a 14-week foreign cruise to the Mediterranean and the Indian Ocean. The squadron will put in among others, at ports in Pakistan, India, Sri Lanka and Kenya. According to the Bundesmarine, the trip is intended to test supplying procedures without the use of bases and the general capacity for reaction in tropical regions. It is also intended to test supplying procedures without the use of bases and the general capacity for reaction in tropical regions. It is also intended to promote interstate relations. The squadron will not go to the Persian Gulf crisis area, and firing practice will be held only in the Mediterranean.

LE FIGARO URGES WESTERN BACKING FOR U.S. ON IRAN ACTION

LD291257 Paris LE FIGARO in French 28 Apr 80 pp 1-2

[Jacques Jacquet-Francillon article: "Mission Impossible"]

[Text] Luck was missing at the Tabas rendezvous. This is a fact. Is this a reason for turning your back on an ally whose exploit you would have celebrated if he had been luckier? If they had succeeded, would the entire West not have saluted as heroes the members of the Fort Bragg commando which was entrusted with the "mission impossible" of rescuing their compatriots held captive for nearly 6 months by hysterical people in Tehran? Let no one assert the contrary:

Whether you are prepared to admit it or not, America's success would have been tantamount to success for the whole of what we persist in calling the "free world." Its failure is our failure.

Blaming the Washington government for failing to inform its Allies about its plans is sheer hypocrisy. This kind of "mad coup" involves too many risks to make it possible to share your secret with anyone. Even at the White House and at the Pentagon only a handful of people were in the know. Who could fail to understand this?

"A friend in need is a friend indeed...." This is a British proverb which the Americans like to quote often. Let us not forget it and let us adopt it as our own.

We do not doubt that Valery Giscard d'Estaing is fully cognizant of this proverb. As soon as he arrived in Luxembourg on Sunday, and even before meeting his European partners, the president stated: "France is determined to continue its efforts, just as the entire EC, in solidarity with the United States, to achieve the release of the Tehran hostages."

May God listen to him... and let us feel pleased that right from the start the President decided to place a European "summit," which initially was merely to be devoted to an honest and indispensable compromise on the Community's internal problems (a compromise which is taking all too long to achieve), under the sign of Western solidarity.

In their hour of trial the American people have just taught us an important lesson--that of unity.

A few hours after the announcement about the Tabas desert drama was made, some people on this side of the Atlantic--at least in most information media--rather hastily concluded that it would inevitably lead to a political disaster for Jimmy Carter-the-unlucky.

This showed how little they knew about grassroots America. According to the results of the first opinion polls which have reached us from the United States, 88 percent of Americans (what a leap forward!) approve of their President's action. And what is even more significant is that 70 percent of them want him again to try the "impossible."

Whether Jimmy Carter is reelected or not on 4 November is none of our business. And whether his "ill luck" plays into the hands of Ronald Reagan or any one else is even less of our business!

What counts is that if very soon, tomorrow perhaps, America--whether Carter's, Reagan's or anyone else's--again tries the "impossible"--because this will be necessary, as it was at Sainte-Mere-Eglise at dawn on 6 June 1944--this America should find its Allies at its side, ready to help it. The Americans have often helped us. We have derived some advantages from their aid. We have much more to gain if we help them tomorrow. For without them we will not survive.

Until Europe becomes what it should be, America's victory will be our victory. Any setback on its part will be a setback for us. Let us either accept this or ensure that the situation changes.

PCF'S STREIFF ARGUES CONTINUING VIABILITY OF EUROCOMMUNISM

LD281215 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 21 Apr 80 p 8

[Gerard Streiff article: "Yes, Eurocommunism"]

[Text] There is no lack of prophets announcing the death of Eurocommunism. "They are wrong or they are deceiving us," we said at our 23d congress.

In fact, what should we expect of Eurocommunism? The phenomenon belongs to the seventies: Within the imperialist world the communist parties are facing the vast problems born of the crisis, a crisis which now puts the question of change on the agenda. The parties' thinking on the nature of these changes naturally combines the lessons of past and recent experiences of the working movement, its successes, its failures, its mistakes.

It appears from this thinking that various parties, proceeding from a strictly independent approach, have been arriving at broadly convergent analyses during this period. They agree in believing that democracy has become the main field of the class combat. The solution to the crisis calls for the deepening of social, economic and political democracy. The socialist future is thus identified with an unprecedented flowering of freedoms. Eurocommunism is a democratic and revolutionary road toward socialism, a road which "can only be the work of large-scale struggles and powerful mass movements, involving the majority of the people around the working class," as the November 1975 PCF-PCI communique emphasized.

This democratic and revolutionary road presupposes the conclusion of broad alliances.

These alliances naturally contain the most diverse forms according to each country's political panorama, the common denominator being the desire to unite all the popular masses, the victims of the crisis.

Let us be clear that, for the parties, this is not a tactical attitude but an approach of principle whose origin, for the POF, for example, dates back to the 1968 Champigny Manifesto, an approach continually enriched right up to the latest congress.

Of course, this deepening of the policy of various communist parties, which make democracy the means and end of their struggles, signifies a greater diversity of roads and advances toward socialism, an inexorable phenomenon which is, ultimately, the proof of socialism's vitality.

This idea calls to mind another, namely that these parties shared a new conception of the Comintern movement. Rejecting any overt or disguised form of center--whatever it may be--they emphasize each party's strict independence of judgement and action, and the existence of possible divergences is immediately recognized and freely and peacefully debated.

Such are the evaluations which, during the seventies, have been permeating the strategies of the communist parties from Tokyo to Mexico City, Stockholm to Rome, Brussels to Paris, London to Madrid. But, naturally, no party can claim to be the standard bearer or keeper of Eurocommunism's "holy scriptures." And I do not intend listing those parties which claim kinship with Eurocommunism and those which do not. Not simply because certain parties reject the term despite being entitled to avail themselves of it. But above all because Eurocommunism is not a finished doctrine, a yardstick by which it is possible to award certificates of a greater or lesser degree of conformity. It is a phenomenon in the process of being elaborated, a long process, a slow evolution of the communist movement. And I believe that it is good that the main lines which we defined earlier now penetrate, admittedly to different degrees, all or part of the policy of numerous communist parties within the imperialist world, from Helsinki to Lisbon, and from Copenhagen to Athens.

Their increasing ability to express their profound national realities, to assert themselves as the most able defenders of democratic rights, to bring together socialism and liberty, to judge the socialist countries clearly and fraternally, to work for relations of sovereignty and noninterference between parties--all this is clearly positive. Thus, those who emptied Eurocommunism of its class content, those who employed caricature-like guesses about this term, turning it into a sort of Paris-Rome-Madrid axis, a commitment to a European integration, a disguised social democratization or even a call to unprincipled alliances risked missing the essential point.

Eurocommunism is, without doubt, an important stage in the history of the communist movement, and the call is to commemorate it lastingly. There is no doubt that it will appear even more forcefully as the democratic and revolutionary alternative to the imperialist crisis.

PCI CHARGES GOVERNMENT WITH 'WRONG' STAND ON U.S. RESCUE ATTEMPT

AU302003 Rome ANSA in English 1940 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Text] Rome, April 30 (ANSA)--The Italian Communist Party leadership today charged that the Rome government position on the Iranian-United States crisis situation in the aftermath of the aborted American attempt to free the American hostages held in Tehran, as expressed yesterday to the Senate Foreign Affairs Commission by Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, is "wrong and worrisome".

The criticism was contained in a motion passed by the PCI Steering Committee which went on to accuse the government of "backing down in relation to the Foreign Ministry's evaluation" communicated Friday, immediately after the news of the failed rescue mission was released. The Communist document also took the view that the "government conduct is uncertain and contradictory".

After underscoring the ongoing deterioration of international relations, the PCI [word indistinct] affirmed that, "Italy, for safeguarding national interests and contributing to a restored climate of [word indistinct] in international relations, must undertake a rigorous and autonomous initiative within the framework of the European Community and the Atlantic Alliance". In another section of the document, the Italian party recalled that it had "clearly and repeatedly declared its disapproval for the inadmissible capture and detention of the hostages".

BOFFA NOTES NEED FOR NEGOTIATIONS ON IRAN, INDEPENDENT EUROPE

LD301543 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 27 Apr 80 pp 1, 20

[Giuseppe Boffa commentary: "Why It Is Possible and Essential To Negotiate"]

[Text] The abortive U.S. incursion into Iran requires further consideration. If we can hope that the lesson will at least serve some purpose, this is because of the dramatic confirmation which it gave us. The affair of the American prisoners in Tehran and the whole dispute between the United States and Iran can only be resolved by persistent and patient negotiations. There is no other way, because the way of force is no solution: It can only lead to more serious disasters, even worse than yesterday's.

However, aside from being necessary, is the method of negotiation possible? Yes, it is. It is certainly not easy, but it is possible. All governments, even governments friendly to the United States, have maintained this. The very self-control which was demonstrated yesterday by the various groups active on the Iranian revolutionary scene is an indication of this. It is certainly not our intention to justify the inconsistent behavior of all the protagonists in the political struggle in Tehran. However, one fact should be pointed out: Even in the midst of so much inconsistency, the path of negotiation has never been closed by the Iranians since November. Fundamentally, amid all the problems, negotiations have continued during these 6 months. There has been no agreement, but there has always been negotiation. The Iranians have never carried out any irreparable action. The only action which was very likely to be irreparable came from the Americans the day before yesterday.

Even if an agreement is reached in time it is inevitable that the United States will have to pay some price. The very question of the prisoners cannot be regarded solely as the problem of a "violated law," in isolation from its historical context--the context of a country dominated by the United States for 25 years, where the United States used all available means to support an infamous regime, causing a resentment which is not just that of an "old emam" or of some other leader but of an entire country. [paragraph continues]

The very question of the shah and, do not forget, of the property he stole must be viewed in this context. During the Waldheim mission, the mission carried out by the committee of inquiry and in the contacts which Bani-Sadr held, what the Iranians constantly asked of the Americans was a clear condemnation of the past as proof of the intention to change course. However, that proof was never forthcoming. On the contrary, the United States resorted to force yesterday. Moreover, it came just after the recent revelations by American sources about the U.S. attempts made right at the last minute to block the Iranian Revolution by a military coup d'etat. All these developments are likely to discourage even those people in Tehran who are most inclined toward negotiation and a rational agreement.

Nonetheless--and we must stress this--there is no other way, because the alternative is an armed conflict and nobody knows if, how and when it could be limited. We still think that Europe was an important task to carry out. We can go further than that: It now has an opportunity which it cannot and must not waste without, at the very least, discrediting itself once and for all in the eyes of the Third World (not to mention the price it would have to pay if the worst happened). There is no alliance pledge, no specific interest, no historical reason why our countries, especially after the incursion into Iran, should adopt the same position as the Americans. Too many steps have already been taken recently to make this harmful identification clear in Iranian eyes.

The current world situation makes it essential for all Italian political forces in particular to make a very serious examination and we do not know whether or not, and if so when, this will be put to the test. Each force must demonstrate its autonomy, its determination not to be the satellite of any country, the intention to use its common sense and the ability to interpret appropriately the interest of its country. We have clearly indicated that we intend to tackle this examination not only with words but with facts, with all our international policy initiatives. It is up to the others to do likewise. We are fully justified in asking this particularly of a party like the Christian Democratic Party which has Donat-Cattin as its deputy secretary--a man who has said that he "supports the United States right or wrong." This behavior does not seem either useful or intelligent, even to the Americans, and it is certainly damaging for Italy and Europe.

PRESS COMMENTS ON U.S.-IRAN CRISIS, MUSKIE APPOINTMENT

[Text] Rome, April 30 (ANSA)--The mounting U.S.-Iran hostage crisis continued today to dominate Italian editorial comment which also focused on the choice of Senator Edmund Muskie to fill the vacancy left by resigning Secretary of State Cyrus Vance. The dailies analyzed at length the meaning behind President Jimmy Carter's decision to tap the Maine senator and congressional veteran and were in general agreement that the choice was a compromise solution.

Turin's LA STAMPA said that the Muskie choice falls in line with a specific Carter logic. "It resolves the problem raised by Vance's departure with a compromise between National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski's 'hawks' and Under Secretary of State Warren Christopher's 'doves'. At the same time it assures the President a large slice of congressional support at a delicate stage of domestic politics and perhaps bolsters his electoral chances".

The New York correspondent of the Milan daily IL GIORNO, on the other hand, said that the Muskie appointment weakens Carter's candidacy. "He should listen to Brzezinski in foreign policy, at least in the beginning". Considering the fact that both Muskie and Brzezinski are of Polish origin, there could be the impression that Carter's foreign policy was dominated by this ethnic viewpoint.

Milan's CORRIERE DELLA SERA said that Vance's resignation has underscored the mounting crisis of trust and credibility in the White House and that Carter's decision to face the press in last night's press conference "implies that the President is aware of the need to clear up at the earliest the climate created by the latest dramatic events".

Rome's LA REPUBBLICA also stressed Carter's haste in convening a press conference which it said "betrays his concern to buffer the 'confidence crisis' triggered by Vance's resignation. Vance's departure deprives Europe of a valid interlocutor, perhaps one of the few men left in Washington who favor a policy of equilibrium of prudence and negotiations towards Moscow and the Middle East".

The Communist Party daily L'UNITA was highly critical and said that Vance's resignation is "the terminal point of American foreign policy's slipping towards a line in which the use of military force is an increasingly decisive component of diplomatic initiatives." In the paper's view, "for at least a year now the hawks have prevailed over the doves."

The Socialist Party daily L'AVANTI voiced fear that "concern over an 'Iranian syndrome' could lead Carter along the path of uncontrollable political-military escalation with unpredictable results. For this reason, Vance wanted to resume a dilaogue with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko and tried to convince European Allies to take concerted action to secure, through economic and diplomatic pressures, the return of the hostages. For these reasons he was opposed to actions of force against Iran".

The daily IL MANIFESTO, the most authoritative voice to the left of the Communist Party said that Carter certainly feels the political need to free the hostages but the hostage problem is linked to the unresolved problem of the loss of Iran as a privileged ally in the Persian Gulf area. The Iranian regime's incapacity to stabilize itself, to respond to pressing internal problems, the alienation of emerging social actions from Islamic extremism, has instilled in the U.S. the idea that the Iranian match is still to be played".

Milan's conservative GIORNALE NUOVO claimed that another factor which in the long run could lead to unforseeable results is the morale of the American public, "forced to the brink of exasperation and abhorrence by events [word indistinct] the televised spectacle of the remains of the American Marines who died in Iran exhibited and manipulated during a grotesque press conference".

CARABINIERI OPERATION SWEEPS 18 CITIES, ARRESTS 15

[Text] Rome, April 30 (ANSA)--A coordinated police operation in eighteen Italian cities today included the arrest of eleven persons in Rome, four in Turin and hundreds of house searches. The latest police sweep began last night under the command of the Carabinieri headquarters. The charges lodged against the fifteen persons arrested range from subversive activity, participation in an armed gang and possession of weapons and explosives. The house searches uncovered large quantities of weapons, explosives and documents. The operation developed out of the complex investigation into the "Revolutionary Action for Communism" organization by Florence magistrates. The first stage of the investigation led to the arrest of 27 persons.

In other developments, the office of Milan lawyer Gabriele Fuga was searched today. Fuga represents another lawyer, Sergio Spazzali (who has defended many alleged terrorists), arrested last week on charges of acting as courier between Red Brigades members in jail and those at large. On the day Spazzali was arrested, another lawyer of alleged terrorist Edoardo Arnaldi was presented an arrest warrant on similar charges. Arnaldi committed suicide before police could bring him to jail.

SA CARNEIRO ADDRESSES NATION ON DOMESTIC ISSUES 27 APR

LD281308 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1940 GMT 27 Apr 80

[Address by Portuguese Prime Minister Francisco Sa Carneiro carried simultaneously by Portuguese radio and television--live]

[Excerpts] Good evening. This government was born during the 2 December elections which gave the Democratic Alliance a parliamentary majority, a parliamentary majority that, in a representative democracy, is a true national majority. It was based on a political agreement that represented, and represents, the greatest possible degree of political consensus among political parties. It has ensured and will continue to ensure the stability and efficacy of this government.

Around the core represented by this political agreement a national consensus of support for the government's action has gradually emerged. With not too many speeches, with few words but much hard work, our accomplishments began. We demonstrated that we meant business and we proved the consistency of our policy at the service of all the people. We do not serve, nor seek to serve a particular section of the population or social class, nor the majority that supports us. We work for the country, for the nation. Our work is being carried out on behalf of all Portuguese citizens. Therefore, we shall continue along the path of further accomplishments, consolidating the consensus that has emerged in the country, This is what we have sought to do with regard to celebrating the 25 April anniversary.

The usual political divisions were clear in the official ceremonies. These political divisions should not be ignored; on the contrary, they must be accepted in order to serve as foundations for a national blueprint. But these divisions were not reflected in the government's action because we sought to announce measures which were developed in the last 4 months and made public during the week now ending. These measures, because they are truly positive and will result in real benefits, do not reflect the political divisions that were apparent in the speeches made at the official celebrations. Instead, they reflect a true national consensus.

The government is committed to an economic and social policy that presupposes and demands great stringency. We have always described as a priority goal of social justice and progress the protection of the purchasing power of the Portuguese people and, if possible, an increase in their real earnings. For this to be achieved it is imperative to fight rising prices. We have scored concrete results in this area.

Inflation--the rise in prices--last year reached 24.6 percent. At the end of the first quarter of this year it had been reduced to 22.3 percent--by over 2 percent. This reduction will continue until the end of our term of office. Inflation will not exceed 20 percent for the whole 12 months of this year. This means that overall price rises will not exceed 20 percent. This is the figure that we shall use as the basis of our calculations to raise purchasing power. Last year prices rose an average of 24.6 percent, as I have already said, while wages rose by only 17 percent. Workers and their families were the losers. This year prices will not rise by more than 20 percent, if by that much. If wages rise by 18 percent and if taxes are reduced--as indeed they have been, beginning 1 January by 4-6 percent--it follows that, against an inflation rate of 20 percent we will have an improvement of 18 percent--higher wages--plus 5 percent--lower taxes--totalling 23 percent.

Workers and their families will therefore benefit. And for this reason we hope for, and count on the understanding of Portuguese workers and of their families for this policy. We ask that they do not allow themselves to be used as instruments by political parties seeking to take advantage of them to further their own partisan goals. Any wage increases above the figure I have mentioned would only serve to push prices up with no hope of controlling them; in the end, we would all suffer.

Throughout the week of the 25 April celebrations a great many concrete measures were announced. I will now highlight some of these measures and announce others:

As announced, the government has raised disability pensions by over 60 percent which, in many cases, means a rise from some 3,000 escudos per month to 5,000 escudos and even more.

With payments to begin in early July but retroactive to 1 May, the government has decided to raise state retirement pensions by 21 percent, with payments to begin in early July but retroactive to 1 May. Some 375,000 people will be covered by this measure.

Child allowances will also be raised in such a way as to benefit the largest families most. A couple with 10 children, for example, which until now qualified for 5,350 escudos if their income is not above 11,000 escudos. These allowances will also be extended to cover the self-employed.

The supplementary allowance for handicapped children will be raised from 250 to 300 escudos per month. The maternity, postnatal and marriage grants paid by the state social security services have been raised by 100 percent.

In the social framework of the government's overall economic policy I would like to emphasize the plan to support the tenant farmers from areas outside the agrarian reform region. This is a financial aid plan which will enable them to acquire the land they work if the owners are willing to sell. This will be a very important step indeed toward an agriculture run as much as possible by those who own the land and work on it.

This new plan will not apply to the agrarian reform region. The new plan will cost some 10 billion escudos and will be carried out within the next 2 months. It does not apply to the agrarian reform region because other rules are in operation there. The agrarian reform law must be implemented and the government has been enforcing its implementation. The question of the expropriations must be resolved by means of the right-of-retention clause and of the payment of compensation. But above all we must think of the farm workers, those who work the land but do not own it--the tenant farmers and the seasonal workers. Thus, in the strict implementation of the law the government has introduced a new facet consisting of the handing over of tracts of nationalized land to landless rural workers and tenant farmers.

Yesterday, I visited the District of Beja, Council of Moura, to attend the handing over of tracts of land to many of the 94 long-term workers of the Machados estate who had registered for this purpose. Each received several dozen hectares. It was a very simple ceremony and it is a pity that the ceremony and the discussions which followed were not shown on television. No one had asked them, nor would ask them what party they supported, what ideology they upheld. In order to qualify they only had to be long-term workers of the state and to have shown interest in receiving the tracts of land in the terms stipulated. Some of them made no secret of their allegiance to parties and forces of the opposition, indeed of the most aggressive section of the opposition that is striving to create the greatest difficulties to the government.

Curiously enough, those militants and sympathizers of the parties most fiercely opposed to the government, those who have attacked the government most, showed concern that they might keep the land, that it would not be taken away from so that they might pass it on to their children and heirs. It was easy to assure them that as long as we remain in government and in the majority no one will take the land away from them. After the revision of the Constitution they may even be able to acquire full title to the land now handed over to them to exploit and which they can already treat as their own.

This is happening throughout Alentejo Province. Hundreds of tracts of land covering a few thousand hectares have already been allocated and, before the end of our term of office, thousands of tracts of land covering tens of thousands of hectares will have been handed over.

So in this much slandered Province of Alentejo, depicted in the foreign and domestic press as a land of strife, killings, confrontations and shootings, we spent a peaceful afternoon yesterday, an afternoon of true national and regional consensus. These realities should be made known to everyone. The fact is that matters have reached such a point that there have been cases of tourists on their way to the Algarve telephoning the National Republican Guard to ask if it is safe to cross the Alentejo. Those who live or go there can testify that, despite the efforts of certain minorities whose nature is not very democratic, there is in Alentejo a climate of lawfulness and, therefore, of hard work--a climate of hope in the new kind of relationship between man and the land.

It is not by occupying farms nor by turning the rural workers into paid laborers for the political parties that the agrarian reform is carried out. Alentejo is fast advancing towards liberation. This is an important and positive development. I have dwelt on it at length because it is a good way of celebrating 25 April, a 25 April that started by being a revolution but is now a democracy advancing towards its fullest realization which will be achieved with the revision of the Constitution; a 25 April that started by being a revolution, with all the implications of that, but which today stands for freedom, to which no one can claim exclusive rights.

This concern for the concrete, for the realities of life, for the primacy of deeds over words, reflects on other spheres as well. We must think and organize our country politically. And we must do it at the level of central government--I beg your pardon, I mean local government. The setting up of the Institute for Local Government and of the Council of the Municipalities is an important step for the strengthening of local government which must serve as the iron framework that goes into the making of the reinforced concrete of democracy.

At a level other than decentralization there is the question of the autonomy of Azores and Madeira. This is not a question of decentralization, rather one of fitting the political organization of these islands to the characteristics of their communities. Hence the autonomy, an autonomy meant to increase gradually and which must meet the needs and aspirations of the peoples of the Azores and Madeira.

The new law on Portuguese nationality will give primacy to blood over the nationality acquired on geographical grounds. Once this law has been approved, the nonresident Portuguese, our emigrants, will be enabled to keep their Portuguese citizenship even if they have acquired the nationality of the countries in which they have worked.

We are aware of the limitations and severe difficulties that we face and which are clearly reflected in the general state budget that will start being debated tomorrow in the Assembly of the Republic.

It has been drafted with great meticulousness and the deficit it envisages is a controlled deficit that meets the need to revive the economy and to promote social justice. It is the highest deficit that we can afford. If it were any higher our international credibility, the loans that we continue to need, would be endangered and the external support that Portugal requires might even be placed in jeopardy.

We are moving in an international context full of difficulties and renewed tensions. I will not conceal from you that dark clouds are gathering on the international horizon and are already affecting us, both politically and economically. Very rich countries which until recently had great financial resources attheir disposal are massively resorting to international credit in order to face the increases in oil prices.

The tensions are clear for all to see. There are fears of a new conflict, and war must be avoided at all costs. Peace must be preserved. But this cannot be achieved with concessions and ambiguous attitudes nor by attempting to reconcile the irreconcilable. On the contrary, peace is defended with firm stands, with clear and unequivocal attitudes, with courage.

The government has sought to act along this line and has seen growing international respect for and acceptance of its attitudes.

The difficulties of all kinds that we shall encounter, and are already encountering, make it imperative to accelerate the drive for EEC membership. And for this reason, although as prime minister I intended to make few if any trips abroad, I have seen myself forced to leave the country on occasion. I will continue to make only the necessary trips and will make them as brief as possible.

Portugal must assert itself in the international context through the clarity of its attitudes since it cannot do it through its wealth or economic power. We will continue to contribute to strengthening the alliance among the Western countries. This is the only way of facing the widespread dangers and the threat posed by Soviet expansionism. We will not shirk from supporting our allies within the measure of our national possibilities for this is essential to the defense of our own interests and of the principles, which we share, that regulate the life of the international community.

But even at home other difficulties have been created for the government. The country needs reforms and sometimes all kinds of obstacles are raised to these reforms. We will continue to strive to overcome them by democratic means but with firm resolve. A reform like the sought-after change in the law defining the boundaries between the public and private sectors of the economy is so important that the government is determined to insist upon its adoption. This is an indispensable step for reviving our economy and fighting unemployment. It is also a measure of the greatest interest in this new international situation of tension and potential conflict in which Portugal, because if offers conditions of political stability, appears as a country capable of attracting foreign investment to our advantage. But this will not be possible without making it possible for investments to be made in all the sectors, or in the greatest possible number of sectors of the economy.

This is why the government will insist upon this basic reform and will use all legitimate means available to make its views prevail on a matter of such importance. We have put plenty of hard work into it, are not lacking in resolve and will push on along this line.

Ours is a national blueprint around which a consensus is emerging and broadening. I do not think that a broader consensus could be achieved by replacing this blueprint with another project for interparty collaboration. As I said at the beginning, our blueprint represents the greatest possible degree of interparty collaboration and accord. The consensus can be enlarged by bringing new personalities onto the scene and, above all, by achieving harmony among the parliamentary majority, the government and the president of the republic. This we seek to achieve, are working in that direction, and once such harmony has been attained it will be reflected on, and consolidated through the forthcoming revision of the Constitution. But it would seem to me to be harmful to attempt to replace the present agreement and national consensus with others, based on blueprints that have had their chance and have failed. And the people who could have achieved them, or could have supported them when such projects had a chance, no longer enjoy the required credibility for seeking to revive them.

Let us therefore forge ahead safely. The fact is, in spite of internal and international difficulties, we have in these last 4 months managed to ensure stability, to secure some accomplishments, to pursue a clear and consistent policy. In spite of all the internal and external difficulties it has been possible to strengthen our hopes and face the future with greater confidence.

There is much still to be done. We cannot regard ourselves as satisfied with what has been achieved so far. We will never be satisfied because it is this feeling of dissatisfaction that impels us further ahead, seeking greater efficacy. These are times for action, not speeches. And so I will bring mine to a close by telling you very simply that, with you, and on your behalf, we will continue to work. Good night.

ENERGY MINISTERS DISCUSS COOPERATION IN COPENHAGEN

LD281209 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 25 Apr 80 p 39

[Unattributed report: "Closer Energy Cooperation"]

[Text] The four Scandinavian energy ministers and a representative of the fifth country, Finland, discussed the possibility of closer Scandinavian cooperation at a meeting on energy policy in Copenhagen on Wednesday, but no decisions were taken at the meeting.

The meeting's host, Energy Minister Poul Nielson, could not promise that the series of meetings at ministerial level now beginning will lead to definite action at present. "But a beginning has really been made on closer cooperation at energy minister level," Poul Nielson said.

His Norwegian counterpart, Bjartmar Gjerde, said that Scandinavian cooperation on energy is actually "unique on the world scene."

At the meeting, which is the second within a short space of time between the Scandinavian energy ministers, their discussions concerned the possibility of a common Scandinavian port for coal, Scandinavian cooperation on natural gass and oil and research into an introduction of new sources of energy as well as those already known. After the meeting the ministers were not able to say anything about the location of a possible coal port, only that, as Poul Nielson announced, it will be located by the sea.

On the subject of natural gas and oil cooperation, Poul Nielson said that it is intended to bring the Scandinavian state firms into a dialogue on topics of special common interest. The ministers did not discuss agreements or negotiations on agreements between two or three of the Scandinavian countries, such as natural gas cooperation between Denmark, Norway and Sweden.

Poul Nielson also announced that it is not likely that any OPEC country would be interested in entering into a contract directly with two or more Scandinavian countries, and did not wish to comment on the possibility of Arab pressure after state oil contracts had been entered into.

HIGH COMMAND ON ALERT FOLLOWING U.S. RAID IN IRAN

LD301059 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 26 Apr 80 pt 1 p 1

["Bo" report: "Danish Defenses Alerted"]

[Text] Danish Defenses High Command have heightened their preparedness as a result of the tense situation centering on the Iran crisis and the unsuccessful U.S. attempt to snatch the hostages in Tehran with the help of the military. The alert does not apply to the country's military installations. It is exclusively introduced at "high command level." According to press officer K. Brons-Hansen, this means that "we are keeping our eyes and our ears open."

An alert consists in a number of individual measures in various groups. If there is sufficient time in a given situation, these measures can be activated one by one. But in a crisis Denmark can reach "very quickly" what is called "full alert." Major Brons-Hansen stresses that increased activity in the Baltic, Denmark's sphere of interest, has not been noted.

AFTENPOSTEN: VANCE SUCCESSOR NEEDS 'PROFESSIONAL DIPLOMACY'

LD301403 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 29 Apr 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Cyrus Vance Resigns"]

[Text] The announcement that Cyrus Vance has resigned as U.S. secretary of state will be received with open regret--and with ill-concealed concern--among U.S. allies. The United States is the leading Western power and therefore every change of secretary of state in Washington will also be an important political event in Western Europe. When the change--at this time--comes after a conflict between the President and his secretary of state, and in an increasingly difficult international crisis, the U.S. allies have good reason to follow developments with redoubled vigilance.

The lawyer Vance will primarily be missed as the very personification of a diplomat--patient, thoughtful, correct, ready to listen, a supporter of clarity and stability in foreign policy. If these are qualities that will now be given less priority in U.S. relations with other countries, we are facing a period of growing problems and rising tension in the international arena. Our hope must be that the change of secretary of state will not mean that President Jimmy Carter will in future attach less importance to traditional and well-tried DIPLOMATIC [in italics] methods in his foreign policy.

The nine EC countries announced at their Luxembourg summit on Sunday and Monday their solidarity with Carter in his policies on Iran and Afghanistan, and in barely 3 weeks Western Europe's economic sanctions against Iran will come into force. Nevertheless, this is a solidarity due more to a desire to help the United States and ensure NATO unity in a period of crisis than to the conviction that the America's sanctions policy is the wisest course in dealing with fanatical Muslims in Tehran. The danger of driving Iran into the arms of the Soviet Union or of contributing to internal dissolution within Iran--something which again could draw the superpowers into military complications--is obvious.

Here a sure hand and sound judgement are needed to lead American policy and we hope that a man with such qualities will take over at the State Department in Washington after Cyrus Vance. His successor ought to see it as a primary task to start consultations at the highest possible level among the Western Allies, with the aim of working out a stable, joint diplomatic line--both toward the Kremlin in Afghanistan and toward the present leaders in Tehran. Thereafter it ought to be an objective for the Western nations jointly to attempt to resume the political dialogue with the Soviet Union--a dialogue neglected since last fall, not least as a consequence of the Moscow leaders' aggressive policies.

A strong United States--also in military terms--will always be in West Europe's interests. It is especially interesting that French President Giscard d'Estaing, who is not in the habit of praising the Americans needlessly, is one of those who have welcomed the increase in American military strike power now being planned. But the Americans' international power must also be managed wisely if it is to contribute to the West's collective influence, and this is best achieved with the help of professional diplomacy. Cyrus Vance represented such diplomacy--and we hope that his successor will do the same.

PUBLIC SECTOR STRIKE AFFECTS BROADCASTING SYSTEM

LD292138 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 2000 GMT 29 Apr 80

[Excerpt] The Swedish Broadcasting Corporation has been hit by the public sector employees' strike. Radio personnel are not on strike, but the telecommunications technicians, who transmit the programs, are striking. The program-3 transmitter operates automatically so that program-3 broadcasts all day, but program-2 is silent and in program-1 normally only the news is broadcast. The striking unions have given the news programs exemption so that they can broadcast.

The Swedish Broadcasting Corporation has asked for more time, above all in order to be able to broadcast the entire morning news programs on program-1. Now the exemption committee of the trade unions in the official sector has refused this application. In fact, the corporation has a shorter time for broadcasts as the broadcasting times can no longer be exceeded. This has resulted in a reorganization by the Swedish Radio Company of programs beginning at midnight.

All Swedish news broadcasts will be transmitted on program-3, and program-1 will be used only for news broadcasts in immigrants' languages. These broadcasts will go out at the same times as the radio magazine programs have been broadcast earlier.

THATCHER AGAINST U.S. MILITARY MOVES ON IRAN

LD301105 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 30 Apr 80 p 1

[Political correspondent's report: "Thatcher Warns Carter"]

[Text] The prime minister told the Commons yesterday that Britain and EEC partners would be opposed to the United States mining the Straits of Hormuz in the Persian Gulf in reprisal for the continued detention of the American hostages in Tehran.

Her statement was the most specific yet about Britain's unwillingness to support American military action over Iran. She was replying to Mr Callaghan, the opposition leader, who had asked if the mining of the Straits--about which there has been speculation--came under the opposition of the EEC partners to military action. Mrs Thatcher was asked about Britain's attitude when she made her statement on the EEC summit. Mrs Thatcher also told MPs: "It is very easy to condemn action to try to release the hostages but it is difficult to put forward proposals to release the hostages; it is difficult to put forward proposals which do actually secure their release. We can only go on with diplomatic, political and economic action."

She also defended the United States' decision not to inform Britain and other allies of the attempt to rescue the hostages, pointing out that any country contemplating such an operation "would be ill-advised to reveal it to a large number of nations."

When Mr Callaghan also expressed support for the American rescue operation he drew calls of disagreement from left-wing Labour MPs. Mr Callaghan said: "I do not take the view that it was wrong in all circumstances to attempt to prise loose people who are held illegally."

"Speak for yourself," Mr Eric Heffer, Labour MP for Liverpool Walton, shouted. Mr Callaghan, looking annoyed, turned round to Mr Heffer and said: "I am speaking for myself and for a lot of people in the country too,"

GUNMEN MAINTAIN SIEGE IN IRANIAN EMBASSY; NEGOTIATIONS CONTINUING

LD301524 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1459 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Text] Gunmen were today holding 21 people hostage in the Iranian Embassy in London. Police were conducting "delicate negotiations" with the three gunmen--all Iranians--as marksmen surrounded the building in Princes Gate, Kensington. One hostage is a member of the Metropolitan Police's diplomatic protection group who is believed to have been forced into the building at gunpoint earlier today. The 20 others are thought to be embassy staff.

At a kerbside press conference, Deputy Assistant Commissioner Mr John Dellow said that the gun gang were "making certain demands." He added: "These are being investigated at the moment. We are in the middle of delicate negotiations." Mr Dellow said apart from the diplomatic protection group policeman, 20 others had been taken hostage. "Now we have established negotiations with the hostage-takers, the aim is to secure the release of the people in there without any violence." He said the three gunmen were Iranian nationals, not Iraqis as earlier reported.

As the siege went into its fifth hour, extra squads of police, 20-strong, were drafted in by the bus-load. Crowds stood on walls and people hung from windows of nearby buildings but Princes Gate itself was sealed off by police, some of them armed and wearing bullet-proof vests.

Khuzestan Prisoners' Release Demanded

WA301513 London REUTER in English 1507 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Excerpts] London, April 30, REUTER--Three gunmen, claiming to be Iranian, forced their way into the Iranian Embassy in London today and took more than 20 hostages, police said. The gunmen were later quoted as demanding the release of 91 prisoners in the Iranian province of Khuzestan. Police said negotiations were taking place through an open embassy window and by telephone, and that the gunmen had not set any deadline. Police said the hostages, most of them Iranian Embassy staff, were apparently not injured in the takeover, and that earlier reports of shooting seemed to be erroneous. The nature of the seige only became apparent three hours after the drama began when a police spokesman said the people holding the embassy wanted the world to know they were "Iranian from Arabistan, South Iran." "They demanded that this point be made clear--they wanted the world to know," the police spokesman said. Passers-by said that a few seconds after the gunmen forced their way into the embassy, four men rushed out. "Then I saw two girls in Iranian head-dress run out screaming," one witness said.

Woman Hostage Released

[Excerpt] A casualty was later taken by ambulance away from the embassy and a stretcher was taken from one of two ambulances parked about 150 yards from the building and returned with the casualty. No further details were immediately available. The casualty was a woman hostage released by the captors. It was not immediately known whether she had been injured during her short imprisonment. An ambulance spokesman said she was "in a collapsed state" as she was taken to St Stephen's Hospital in Fulham.

REUTERS news agency quoted an Iranian Foreign Ministry spokesman in Tehran accusing Iraqi agents of taking over the embassy. The spokesman, (Naser-e Sadat) Salami, claimed that the three gunmen had stormed the embassy saying they were Arabs from the southern Iranian oil-producing province, Khuzestan. He said the gunmen called this area, "Arabistan", and demanded the release of 91 prisoners held in the province. Mr Salami said Iran expected such actions after pro-Iraqi gunmen tried to assassinate the Iranian charge d'affaires in Beirut 10 days ago. "Undoubtedly, they are Iraqis," he said.

A hospital spokesman said the freed woman was being treated in casualty. She was put under sedation as soon as she arrived and has spoken to no one so far. "The police are waiting to interview her in connection with the incident at the embassy," he said.

Police 'Waiting Game'

LD301634 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1603 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Text] The gunmen who entered the Iranian Embassy in London today were assumed to belong to a minority group--possibly Arabs--in the oil-rich southwest of Iran. There was no immediate identification of the group, but their demands for recognition of the rights of the people of Iran, and the release of political prisoners, were thought to point to minority grievances. It was also felt that religious differences played a part in their complaint.

Since the Iranian Revolution which overthrew the shah there have been growing disturbances in several Iranian provinces over the way central government is running the country. Conflict with Iraq has also increased restlessness in Iran. There were no signs today that Britain intended to pass on to the Iranian Government the gunmen's demands. This was to be in line with government policy towards terrorism. Officials from all the Whitehall departments involved were meeting to keep up to date on developments. Meanwhile there seemed no intention for police to storm the embassy. From past experience of sieges the police have tended to play a waiting game.

BBC-Gunmen Contacts

LD301658 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1641 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Text] The Iranian Embassy gunmen want 91 Arab prisoners in Iran flown to London, according to a telephone call to the BBC World Service today. The call was taken by the senior duty editor, Mike Brown, at the World Service headquarters in Bush House in the Strand. Mr Brown said on the BBC Radio 4 "PM" programme the call was made by one of the hostages, a Lebanese journalist named Mustafa Karkouti. "He said he had been ordered to make the call so their demands could be known," said Mr Brown. "He did not explain how he became one of the hostages, but he sounded calm." Mr Brown said Mr Karkouti constantly referred to someone apparently standing beside him, and thought to be one of the gunmen. "The gunmen have asked for 91 Arab prisoners in what they described as Arabic land to be released from jail," said Mr Brown. "They want them to be flown to London, and then to be provided with a plane to fly out of London. The men say they will take the hostages with them when they fly out." Mr Karkouti refused to answer some of Mr Brown's questions, and at the end of the call said: "I have been told I must go." He then put the telephone down.

Offer To Replace Hostages

LD301930 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1905 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Text] Fifty Iranians tonight offered to substitute themselves for the embassy hostages. The dramatic twist came as the party of pro-Ayatollah Khomeyni students arrived at the scene of the seige. Shouting slogans and waving clenched fists as they marched towards Princes Gate, they were met by a police delegation and offered to replace the captives inside the embassy 200 yards away. The students' delegation handed a 27-signature petition to senior police officers. Three of them were allowed past the checkpoint, and walked towards the embassy. Their spokesman, Mr Jafar Chitsaz, 34, from Holland Park, West London, said: "It is unfair that these people should be held in there. This is an Iranian crisis. It should be solved by Iranian people. These people are innocent. We are in favour of the present regime but already 120,000 young people have been killed. This is our problem. As Iranian nationals we do not want to see innocent people here in Britain at risk." He added: "We want the hostages out. We will go in there if necessary. It is up to the police. If they say we can go in, we go in." He stressed the group were acting simply as individuals, and were not attached to any political offshoot. The move came as a surprise and extra police were drafted in as the group invaded the siege checkpoint. It happened as senior dectectives gave a press conference in the Albert Hall. Minutes earlier a column of uniformed officers moved swiftly along Princes Gate and entered premises--either the embassy, or an adjoining building. Three of the students were led through the cordon of police to speak with senior police officers. Another spokesman for the students, a woman who said she was a research student studying in England, said: "We are willing to take their places. I am willing to die. I hope the police will allow us to go in." The woman, who said she was a Moslem supporter of the Ayatollah Khomeyni, said hundreds of other Iranian students were on their way to the embassy.

BBC Crew Among Hostages

[Text] Two of the three British hostages held in the embassy work for the BBC, it was learned tonight. The men Chris Cramer, a producer, and Syd Harris, a news film cameraman were at the embassy applying for visas for Iran when the siege started, the corporation announced on tonight's 9pm TV news.

Mr Cramer telexed the BBC newsroom about six hours after the start of the siege. He said he had a message approved by the leader of the group, which detailed how the group had burst into the embassy and overpowered the policeman. The telex said the hostages would not be hurt if their demands were met. The message said the group wanted to apologise for the siege to the British people and the government.

Ninety minutes later, Mr Cramer sent another telex. He said the leader of the group was claiming that police had refused his request for a doctor to examine a man who was "quite badly ill". Police had replied that their negotiations had not yet reached a stage where they could let a doctor enter the embassy, the BBC bulletin said. Later in the bulletin one of the gunmen inside the embassy spoke by telephone to a BBC reporter. Asked if the hostages were all right he answered "yes". He went on: "We have some demands. We took them to get what we want. We want the freeing of 91 prisoners and the recognition of our region as an autonomy. We want to send our voice to the world. We are fighting for justice and the autonomy of Arabistan."

Asked if the gunmen were against Ayatollah Khomeyni the spokesman said: "We are not against Ayatollah Khomeyni. We are against every leader who does not want to give us our legal rights."

1 May Noon Deadline

LD302148 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2111 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Excerpt] The three gunmen have set a noon tomorrow deadline to blast the embassy and kill the hostages unless 91 Arab prisoners in Iran are flown to London. They have also demanded a plane out of Britain and say they will take the hostages with them. One of the gunmen told the BBC in a telephone interview that they also wanted autonomy for their region, Arabistan in south Iran. "We want to send our voice to the world. We are fighting for justice and the autonomy of Arabistan," he said.

As negotiations went on tonight between police and gunmen, a senior police officer announced that food had been sent in to the embassy for the first time since the siege began. Earlier police suddenly found themselves having to deal with a group of 50 Iranian students who offered to substitute themselves for the hostages. Shouting slogans and waving clenched fists the group marched towards the embassy in Princes Gate taking police at the siege checkpoint by surprise.

U.S. Hostage Exchange Said Proposed

NC302201 Paris AFP in English 1258 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Text] Paris, April 30 (AFP)--The commando group holding 20 people hostage in the Iranian Embassy in London is prepared to free them in exchange for the release of the Americans held in Iran, a French TV correspondent said after intercepting a phone conversation between a member of the commando and an unidentified person. The correspondent, speaking on an evening newscast here, said he overheard the conversation, in English, while trying to call a member of the commando occupying the Iranian Embassy in London.

Intercepted Embassy Call

LD302337 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2238 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Excerpt] French television in London claimed tonight that they had overheard a telephone call in which one of the gunmen had proposed to exchange the hostages against the American ones held in Iran. The company said it had been trying to call the embassy since midday and tonight it hooked into what appeared to be a crossed line between London and Beirut. A man they believe to be the gunman said: "We have done to Khomeyni what he has done to the Americans."

M Jean Louis Burgat, correspondent for French television Channel One, said "We interpret it that he makes a kind of deal between the American hostages and the people held in the Iran Embassy." M Burgat said: "We always tape what we have on the line and at about 10 pm tonight when I made another call I heard a lady speaking in Arabic and then in English. The conversation went on for about half-an-hour but most of it was in Arabic. I think I had a crossed line with Beirut."

The tape began with the woman saying: "Are you the kidnapper?" and the reply came: "What do you mean?" The woman said: "You have the embassy?" And the man replied: "We have the embassy people here." The woman told him: "You did very good job." The man went on, still in English and becoming more excited: "We are holding 19 of them hostages here in London. We are holding 19 of them hostages here." He is then understood to have said: "We are not leaving to go until Khomeyni lets the American hostages go." The woman then repeated: "You did very good things."

At this point French television was able to put its own question asking if the man spoke French. He said they only spoke Arabic and when he was told who was speaking he said: "We cannot speak to anyone at the moment." The rest of the conversation continued in Arabic.

M Burgat said: "We are convinced that the call on which we had a crossed line was with one of the commandos and it indicated that the commando proposed to exchange his hostages against the American hostages in Iran."

AP reported earlier from Beirut that three unknown factions had claimed joint responsibility for the attack on the embassy. They were the Political Organization of the Arab People, the Arab Masses Movement and the Movement of the Moslem Arab People Strugglers. A short statement, delivered at the ASSOCIATED PRESS offices in Beirut, denounced the "reactionary authorities" of Ayatollah Khomeyni and ended with "glory and immortality to the martyrs of Arabistan."

Commandos Stick To Demands

OW010009 Hong Kong AFP in English 0001 GMT 1 May 80

[Text] London, May 1 (AFP)--The three-man commando holding 20 hostages at the Iranian Embassy here is sticking to its demands, notably the release by 1100 GMT today (Thursday) of 91 political prisoners held in Iran's oil-rich Khuzestan Province, a police spokesman said here last night. He said police were not yet in a position to identify the gunmen, who, he added, were keeping cool. Contrary to earlier reports, the commando made no request for water or food and no negotiator entered the embassy, the spokesman indicated. Meanwhile, a Home Office spokesman said he was not aware of any offer by the commando to trade the 20 hostages held here for the 50 Americans held in Iran.

Commando Message to BBC

TA010722 London BBC World Service in English 0600 GMT 1 May 80

[From "Correspondents' Reports"]

[Text] We go straight to the BBC radio car outside the Iranian Embassy in London, where gunmen have now been holding about 20 people hostage for more than 18 hours. There is a strong police cordon around the embassy, but for the moment they are simply watching and waiting. Our reporter in the radio car is Bob Simpson.

[Begin Simpson recording] The main activity here at present is the continuous chanting of the 80 or so students who have gathered to give their support to the hostages and have offered to take their places. Many of them are wearing white tunics bearing pro-Khomeyni slogans. Out of our sight, by the door of the embassy, two senior police officers are still negotiating with the gunmen. Talks broke down for a while earlier on, but are now progressing with the gunmen cool and calm, according to the police. About 6 hours ago an offer of food and drink was made and turned down. A request for a doctor, according to a telephone call from the hostages to the BBC, has not been met. The police though simply say a doctor is ready close by the embassy, but there is no immediate need for his services. Presumably the police, who had access to the woman hostage released yesterday afternoon, know what went on at the time of the takeover, and whether anybody was hurt. There has been little visible police activity within the past few hours--just reserves being moved about and shifts being changed. The mood of the police suggest they are prepared for a long wait, and time and patience could be the weapons they have but the gunmen don't. [end recording]

The gunmen on several occasions since the seizure of the embassy began have contacted us here in the newsroom at Bush House. A few moments ago there was another call from the embassy and a hostage being used an an interpreter relayed the following message from the gunmen: [Begin interpreter recording] The group occupying the Iranian Embassy would like to assure the British public opinion that the British hostages as well as all other non-Iranian hostages will not be harmed. They would demonstrate that in a later stage, but the deadline for the safety of the other hostages [words indistinct] and the others as well, which is 12 o'clock noon, is still valid. That is all. [end recording] That was the latest message from the Iranian Embassy in London.

Gunmen 'Dissident Arabs'

LD010822 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0730 GMT 1 May 80

[Excerpts] The gunmen have identified themselves as members of the Iranian Group of the Martyr--dissident Arab organisation violently opposed the Ayatollah Khomeyni. More than two million Arabs live in the oil-rich southern provinces of Iran--the Khuzestan area which they call "Arabistan." They want autonomy for their region and have been locked in bloody clashes with the ayatollah's troops since the Iranian Revolution.

REUTER reported from Beirut today that three previously unknown groups were also claiming responsibility for the embassy takeover. A statement delivered to REUTER's Beirut office was signed by factions calling themselves the Political Organisation of the Arab People, the Arab Masses Movement and the Moslem Arab People Strugglers Movement. The statement did not specifically refer to the embassy takeover but claimed responsibility for what it called the "Martyr Muhyi ad-Din an-Nasir operation." The groups warned Iranian authorities against the consequences of "continuing to shed the blood of our Arab people and the rest of the Iranian peoples struggling for our rights and dignity." The statement added: "We shall strike firmly and with methods unfamiliar to the reactionaries and those who begrudge Islam and humanity in order to force the charlatans and deceivers to yield to our demands."

Gunmen: Qotbzadeh 'Will Regret' Statement

LD010832 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0738 GMT 1 May 80

[Excerpts] Twenty hostages--three of them Britons--were still being held by three gunmen in the Iranian Embassy in London early today as negotiations continued between their captors and the police. The gunmen have threatened to blow up the building and the hostages at noon today unless 91 Arab prisoners in Iran's Khuzestan provincial town of Abadan are flown to London. They have also demanded a plane to fly them and their hostages--most of them Iranian diplomats--out of Britain.

Iranian Foreign Minister Sadeq Qotbzadeh was quoted last night by Iran's official news agency as saying that the prisoners at Abadan would be executed if the embassy staff come to any harm.

The hostages include PC Trevor Lock, 41, who was guarding the embassy, and two BBC Television staff, producer Chris Cramer and cameraman Sydney Harris. Both were in the embassy applying for visas when the gunmen burst in shortly before midday yesterday.

Fifty Iranians last night offered themselves as substitutes for the hostages. Shouting slogans and waving clenched fists they marched to the embassy at Princes Gate, Kensington, and handed a petition with 27 signatures on it to senior police officers. The demonstrators, mostly students, later put on hastily made shrouds adorned with the words: "We give our last drop of blood for Khomeyni" and spent the night outside the embassy. As dawn broke they turned towards Mecca and prayed. They wore their white shrouds to signify they were prepared for death. "We are ready to die now for God and Khomeyni", said their spokeswoman. "We are prepared to die for the release of the hostages. We want to be exchanged for them." They chanted "we are Khomeyni's soldiers". Leaders of the students said there would be a "mass presence" outside the embassy later today by thousands of the ayatollah's supporters.

BBC Radio reported today that it had received a message from the gunmen saying that none of the three British hostages would be harmed. The message was received just before 7 a.m. at the BBC's Overseas Service at Bush House in the Strand. It was read by one of the hostages who said: "The group occupying the Iranian Embassy would like to assure the British public opinion that British hostages as well as all other non-Iranian hostages will not be harmed, they would demonstrate that at a later stage." The message went on: "But the deadline for the safety of the other hostages and others as well, which is 12 noon, is still valid."

The hostage said he had been asked to translate the message. He sounded calm but was obviously anxious not to say anything not authorised by his captors. A BBC interviewer asked the man about conditions inside the embassy but the hostage said the gunman who had given him the message did not want him to answer questions.

Then the gunman came on the line himself and was asked if the hostages were well. He said: "All well and everything all right". Asked if anyone needed a doctor, he said: "Yes, we have an injured man. I think he is badly sick." He refused to say if the man had gunshot wounds and said it was not important how the man was injured. Asked about food, he said they had water and would not be drawn on the subject. The man confirmed that there had been a message at the embassy from Iran's Foreign Minister Sadeq Qotbzadeh saying he would not yield to their requests.

Then the gunman said: "I think he will regret this statement. I mean after the deadline we will kill everybody here, all the hostages." Asked if the Britons would be all right, the gunman said: "They are all right and will be all right." Asked when the Britons would be released, the gunman said they would have to wait and see--but it would not be before the deadline. Asked if he could guarantee that they would be unharmed, the gunman said: "We will have to think about that."

Commando on U.S. Hostage Exchange

NC011010 Paris AFP in English 1006 GMT 1 May 80

[Excerpt] London, May 1 (AFP)--An offer to exchange 20 hostages in the Iranian Embassy here against American hostages held in Tehran could "not be ruled out", one of three gunmen who seized the mission yesterday said today. A spokesman for the Iranian pro-Ba'th commando made the admission on the telephone to AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE but did not say whether the suggestion had been put to British authorities.

Negotiations Continue 1 May

[Excerpt] Deputy Assistant Commissioner John Dellow, who is in charge of the police operation at the [Iranian] Embassy, said that the gunmen were remaining relatively calm as the noon deadline drew nearer. Mr Dellow said the night had passed fairly quietly and the police would like to believe in the gunmen's pledge not to harm non-Iranian hostages. "We hope it is a sincere statement but we are not foolish in these matters, although we hope and expect them to maintain the pledge," he said.

This morning's negotiations had still centered on the gunmen's original demands made yesterday, but the negotiators' target this morning must have been to extend the deadline. Mr Dellow said there was an appreciation that negotiations of this sort took time, and even the hostage-takers realised that their demands needed time to communicate. "The police policy is exactly as it was at the beginning. We are taking it as calmly as we can and our object is to come to a satisfactory conclusion with no loss of life," he said.

He disclosed that an army explosives expert had arrived at the scene this morning "for discussion purposes only." It is thought the expert was to be asked if the gunmen would be able to carry out their threat to blow up the embassy. Mr Dellow said: "We have evidence that the hostage-takers have the capability of doing certain things but we have an open mind on whether they have explosives."

Anti-terrorist squad detectives are undertaking a major investigation to establish the identifies and background of the gunmen and the head of the squad. Commander Peter Duffy said that the mood of calm would alter from time to time. Police are still not in the embassy building.

Talks Break Down

[Text] London, May 1 (AFP)--Negotiations between the British police and the commandos holding 20 hostages in the Iranian Embassy here have broken down and if demands are not met by 1100 GMT two hostages will be executed every two hours, a man describing himself as spokesman for the commandos told AFP by telephone today. Following the failure of the talks, the spokesman told AFP "there was no way" to proceed with an eventual exchange of the hostages here and those in Tehran.

In the course of the conversation, AFP was able to speak briefly with a person claiming to be one of the hostages and said the negotiations between the police and the commandos went "very badly." The hostage, who responded to the name of Miss Sylvain, was not able to speak any longer, one of the commandos having apparently grabbed back the telephone.

BBC Hostage Released

LD011056 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1050 GMT 1 May 80

[Text] One of the British hostages in the Iranian Embassy in London--BBC man Chris Cramer--was released today on a stretcher. The break through in the siege came just before the noon deadline set by the gunmen. Mr Cramer was taken by ambulance to the hospital. The release of Mr Cramer--a BBC news organiser--came a few hours after the gunmen said that the non-Iranian hostages would not be harmed.

Commander Peter Nievens of Scotland Yard said: "We have successfully negotiated the release of a male hostage." He said Mr Cramer was the hostage who wanted medical treatment and said his removal from the embassy had created an atmosphere of goodwill between the negotiators and the gunmen.

Thatcher Message to Bani-Sadr

[By Arthur Williamson, chief PA political correspondent]

[Text] Home Secretary Mr William Whitelaw reported to the Cabinet today on the embassy siege, and he is making a statement in the Commons this afternoon. It was confirmed in London that Mrs Thatcher sent a message to the Iranian President Mr Bani-Sadr during the night. The message, sent through diplomatic channels, said: "I should like you to know of my deep personal concern about the situation at the Iranian Embassy in London. This intrusion constitutes an act of terrorism and an infringement of the immunity of diplomatic staff which the British Government finds totally repugnant and is acting firmly to counter. I hope the incident will be resolved speedily and I assure you that the safety of the lives at stake will be of paramount consideration. The home secretary is personally in charge of the situation and I am taking a very close personal interest. I wish to assure you that we shall be keeping in constant touch with you and your government."

The message was intended to be a personal one between the prime minister and the Iranian president, and the text was not released at the time in order not to inflame the situation at the embassy. After being received the letter's contents were released in Iran, and this led to the Whitehall confirmation.

Gunmen Extend Deadline

[Text] Gunmen holding 19 hostages at the Iranian Embassy in London today extended their deadline to kill the captives and blow up the building to 2 pm.

In a dramatic message to Scotland Yard, the gunmen said: "We are giving the Iranian Government until 2 pm today. This is not a sign of weakness but our humanitarian duty. After 2 pm all responsibility falls on the Iranian Government. If the Iranian Government will acknowledge that they are negotiating with the British Government, that will extend the time."

Report on Embassy Scene

TA011258 London BBC World Service in English 1200 GMT 1 May 80

["Radio Newsreel"]

[Excerpts] The deadline set by the Iranian gunmen holding about 20 hostages in the Iranian Embassy in London has passed without incident. In fact, one of the two BBC men being held has been released, apparently because he was suffering from stomach infection. Our reporter Alexander Tompson has been watching events outside the Embassy.

[Begin recording] [Tompson] As noon approached the tension here steadily increased. The atmosphere here is still tense but there is relief that the deadline has come and gone without incident, so far as we know. A short while ago Assistant Deputy Commissioner Niven said they were still talking to the gunmen. [Niven] Time has come and passed and we are still negotiating. We are considerably encouraged honestly by this continuing dialog and there the situation remains at the moment. As I left they were still talking with the negotiators.

[Tompson] So the police are obviously pleased with that development, and encouraged too by the decision of the gunmen to release one of their hostages a few hours ago for humanitarian reasons. He was a BBC man who was trying to get a visa from the Embassy when the building was seized yesterday. Apparently he was suffering from a severe stomach upset. All the signs are that the police have managed to impress on the gunmen that negotiations on their demands here in Whitehall and in Iran are a time consuming business. During the morning some relatives of the hostages were escorted through police cordones to speak to newsmen or try unsuccessfully to get into the embassy buildings. And a few hours ago the man in charge of operations here, Deputy Assistant Commissioner (Delow), gave a news conference in the nearby Albert Hall. He said all the options in this police operation were still being considered. Negotiations were continuing calmly and the antiterrorist squad was busy trying to build up a picture of the gunmen holding the building. So the whole area remains sealed off, police marksmen remain in position and scores of newsmen on grass verges, on seats facing the building and on two high mechanical hoists remain with their eyes fixed on the embassy entrance; and the waiting goes on and it could go on for hours and even days. [end recording]

1400 Deadline Passes

LD011332 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1324 GMT 1 May 80

[Excerpts] A tense hush hung over the besieged Iranian Embassy in London today as the 2 p.m. deadline to kill the hostages approached--and passed--without any apparent incident. The three Iranian gunmen holding 19 hostages had already extended their noon deadline to blow up the embassy and kill their captives unless their demands were met. And once again they drew back from their murderous threat.... As the seconds ticked away towards 2 p.m. the police dragnet of scores of officers--some armed--remained silent. And even senior officers were holding their breath and ashen faced. All eyes focused on the elegant Regency building. Even the chanting Iranian students whose pro-Khomeyni battlecry had punctuated the eerie silence of the siege fell silent as the dramatic countdown began. Behind the scenes, diplomatic moves were believed to be in progress between Britain and Iran after the gunmen said at noon that they would carry out their threat unless the Iran Government acknowledged that it was negotiating with Britain.

BRITISH COMMISSIONER REPLIES TO PROTEST AGAINST GILMOUR

NC261530 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 26 Apr 80

[Text] British High Commissioner Rhodes today called on Foreign Minister Rolandhis in connection with the Cyprus Government's demarche on the recent statements by the Lord Privy Seal and British Deputy Foreign Secretary Sir Ian Gilmour. Mr Rhodes said he had instructions to confirm that there has been no change in the British Government's policy which, he said, aims toward the achievement of a just solution to the Cyprus problem, and that the British Government will continue to support the efforts of the UN secretary general.

EDEK LEADER CRITICIZES GILMOUR, WALDHEIM

NC300607 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 30 Apr 80 p 1

[Text] The socialist EDEK party leader Dr Vasos Lissaridhis yesterday called for abandonment of what he called the climate of "fatalism" and "passiveness" which, he said, is being cultivated by both foreigners and locals.

In a speech at Paphos he called for more wide internalisation of the Cyprus problem and an appeal to the Security Council.

The recent statements by the British Deputy Foreign Secretary Sir Ian Gilmour were indicative of the attempts to create conditions for another Camp David procedure for Cyprus, Dr Lissaridhis said and claimed that the "timing and content" of the meetings of the rally leader Mr Kliridhis with the leader of the Turkish Cypriot National Unity Party and prime minister of the self-proclaimed Turkish Federated State in the north, Mr Cagatay, were not unconnected with the wider developments.

About the deadlock, Dr Lissaridhis said that the UN secretary general had not lived up to the duties and responsibilities of his office but the Cyprus Government too must be blamed for not preventing Dr Waldheim to play the role of Pilate, or washing his hands of any responsibility.

Dr Lissaridhis reminded again about his party's offer of a minimum agreed programme of collaboration and gave a dark picture of the economic situation. He thought that the situation was led to that point by others so that foreign aid shall be presented as a "plank of safety" and for converting Cyprus into a "post-colonial territory".

The socialist leader called for broad nationalisation of banks and monopolistic enterprises, taxation of property and riches, a curb of imports, nationalisation of water and land, tax adjustment and the like and said that the EDEK was raising the banner of change.

ATAKOL ACCUSES GOVERNMENT OF IGNORING MISSING PERSONS ISSUE

TA282059 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 28 Apr 80

[Text] The Minister of Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Kenan Atakol said that the Greek Cypriots do not want to resolve the missing persons issue and that they are trying to exploit the issue internationally. Atakol was replying to reporters' questions in connection with the dispatch of a Greek Cypriot delegation to Geneva for propaganda purposes. He recalled that the UN Third Committee had unanimously decided in December 1977 to set up a committee to look into the question of missing persons. Atakol noted that the Greek Cypriots had refrained from implementing this decision, which had been taken unanimously.

Atakol revealed that on 21 March 1980, the Turkish Cypriot side had sent its proposals envisaging the establishment of a committee on the missing persons issue to the Greek Cypriot side via the UN secretary general. He added that the Greek Cypriots had not answered even though more than a month had passed.

The minister pointed out that the Greek Cypriots did not want to solve the problem, but only to exploit it internationally. He added: Had they really wanted to solve the problem, the committee would have been established and the problem of missing persons would have been solved.

The UN Third Committee--which also included the Greek Cypriot administration's representative--had decided unanimously in December 1977 that an investigative committee be set up, composed of Turkish Cypriot, Greek Cypriot and International Red Cross representatives, to look into the issue of missing persons. However, the Greek Cypriots have prevented the implementation of this decision--for which they had cast a positive vote--for political reasons.

Meanwhile, based on reliable sources, TAK [Turkish News Agency in Cyprus] reports that the Turkish Cypriot proposals which were delivered to the Greek Cypriots on 21 March envisage establishing the committee on the missing persons issue with three representatives: One Turkish Cypriot, one Greek Cypriot and one from the International Red Cross. The Turkish Cypriot proposals, which have 13 clauses, say that the committee must make its decisions unanimously, the committee chairmanship must rotate every month, the first chairman should be the International Red Cross representative, the committee members should not seek the help of experts from outside and the committee should have the right to investigate throughout the island. Under these proposals, the committee will be able to start work immediately and hold regular meetings. The information to be collected by the committee will be kept secret. Furthermore, the proposals say that when one of the missing persons is determined to be dead the committee will not hold anyone responsible. The proposals also envisage preparing a list of the missing persons.

DHROSOS DEPLORES 'LACK OF ORGANIZATION' IN U.S. RAID

AT301420 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 30 Apr 80 p 6

[The "Political Issues" column by G.N. Dhrosos: "The Operation That Failed"]

[Text] Many things have been said and written about the U.S. operation and even more will be heard. Judgements by both sides are clear, which would have occurred no matter what the outcome. However, most of the people who now criticize the attempt would be thinking otherwise had the operation succeeded. Then the Americans would have been wonderful in organization and courage, their invasion would have been pardoned and it would have been considered an illegal act in reply to the equally illegal detention of the hostages by the Iranians. Success always creates many justifications; it is failure which deprives the unsuccessful of arguments.

The Entebbe affair was equally irregular and illegal but nobody asked the Israelis to account for it, simply because their operation succeeded. Nor is the comparison which some people make between the two operations fair. In Uganda the hostages were at the airport guarded by the soldiers of another country and not by their kidnappers. The Israeli commandos arrived there by using secure foreign bases and they landed right near the detainees. The Americans were forced to build their own provisional base in the Iranian desert from which they intended to reach the heart of the Iranian capital. The layman considers the chances of success of such an operation very limited.

However, some "competent" people or perhaps some computers thought otherwise. The layman was vindicated and the operation failed almost before it had even started and it failed on its own, not because of the Iranians. On the one side there is failure but on the other there is no success. Success for them would have been if Iranian forces had moved, if they had clashed with the commandos and defeated them or if during an air battle they had downed U.S. planes. In this case, however, the operation halted by itself as soon as it started without the Iranians having gotten wind of it and it stopped for technical reasons and for...U.S. reasons.

The layman who would be asked to pass judgement on the plans of this operation could discover dozens of reasons why it could fail. He would never think that it would stop in its first steps because of technical deficiencies. Nevertheless, it was an operation which had been diligently prepared months ago and for which many rehearsals had been made.

Now how can it be that only a few minutes after taking off helicopters record damage in their hydraulic or other systems? How can it be that in a limitless desert two planes participating in the same operation collide? This is something that common sense finds difficult to understand. Supposedly there had been a complete and well studied plan; large forces were not moved nor was there the intention to move any. It is supposed that before the execution of such an operation the equipment to be used is checked and double-checked. It is supposed that an inspection is made of even the last detail of the machines which will be used and that before starting everything is found to be in absolute order. Certainly this happened in this instance too. Then how is it possible that in a few minutes three out of eight helicopters were found to be damaged? Of course, the issue will be officially investigated and we do not know if we shall ever learn the conclusions of the investigation.

There is no mention of injury to U.S. prestige because of this accident. Perhaps the people who claim this are right. Such things, however, are overcome. The United States is a great country with great power. If it did not have this power the international situation would be different. What is worrisome is that in a military operation, even a limited one like the one which we are talking about, such frivolity and a lack of organization becomes apparent. To a large extent modern war is technical and woe if omissions and carelessness appear in this field. [paragraph continues]

The failure of such an operation, for technical reasons at a later stage, would be more pardonable than what happened before the operation even started.

I KATHIMERINI NOTES WORLD CONFLICTS, EUROPE'S POSSIBLE ROLE

AT301438 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 30 Apr 80 p 7

[Editorial: "Complications Without Prospects"]

[Text] From now on, humanity will be marching from complication to complication without any prospect of discovering not only some peaceful settlement for its differences but even some form of dialogue between competing forces. The Middle East area up to India's borders remains the point of "hot" contact between the great powers without anybody knowing if and when it will catch fire. It seems that everybody is following the logic of the absurd by trying to outdo each other in acrobatics and provocativeness.

On the one hand we have a great power--currently the greatest in the world and the leader of the Western world--resorting to abortive "commando" operations, thus risking its prestige and chances of influencing international public opinion. On the other hand we have a fanatic religious "revolution" which must maintain tension at the flash point in order to avoid the transfer of public attention from "foreign issues" to the disintegration which Iran's internal affairs have been experiencing for almost more than 1½ years. Nearby, we have the other great power lurking to intervene at whatever moment it may judge its interests to be threatened in some way, using its own logic, the logic it used for invading Afghanistan.

Within the complexity of these conflicting concerns and interests lies the fact that the only thing which will not be served is international peace. Once again this appears to be in danger since it has been left "to the cane of the wolves." On both sides the "hawks" are essentially gaining ground vis-a-vis the few voices that remain which urge the maintenance of dialogue and an atmosphere of detente.

The resignation of U.S. Secretary of State Vance constitutes an act of honor for him but also a blow to the cause of peace. Now the U.S. President is surrounded by "hawks" and those who believe that they must restore by any means the prestige of their country, which has been damaged by the long detention of the hostages.

However, activities like the commando operation, especially when they fail, have as their only result the strengthening of fanaticism in the other side--a fanaticism badly needed by the religious regime and even more by the power centers which are the most extremist inside Iran, the students and the ayatollahs.

Because of the negative repercussions that all these things will have on President Carter's popularity, nobody knows what decisions the U.S. President will make to regain lost ground because undoubtedly what concerns him most at this moment is his nomination by the Democratic Party and his reelection. Between understandable aspirations and serving the interests of international peace there is a great distance and a dangerously slippery decline.

The fact is that the other European industrial countries--especially Japan--are paying for the consequences of this "absurd" game of the great, the puppets of which are the small countries of the area. The game of fire is taking place over the earth's large reservoir of oil which is ready to explode at any time dragging everybody to calamity.

What is worse is that everyone is slowly becoming inured to the idea of a war, and to the atmosphere of a belligerent mentality, which is valid mostly for the two superpowers and for those centers which have control over the switches of war.

Seen from this viewpoint, Europe's role is becoming more critical and more substantive each day. Perhaps it is the only power which can avoid disaster with appropriate diplomatic dealings--because it has no other choice, provided that it is not swept up in the prevailing general heated atmosphere. Perhaps then it can point out a solution to the complications currently weighing on the world.

I AVYI URGES GOVERNMENT CONDEMNATION OF U.S. 'AGGRESSION'

AT291435 Athens I AVYI in Greek 29 Apr 80 p 6

[Editorial: "A Dangerous Moment for Peace"]

[Text] At this very moment the entire world may be experiencing the most dangerous moments for peace since the end of World War II. The aborted U.S. operation in Iran--the dimensions and goals of which are now proving to be far greater than at first reported--leaves no doubt that those forces which are pushing toward a confrontation now dominate the leading circles in the United States. This is also confirmed by yesterday's resignation of U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance. The "hawks" in the civilian U.S. administration, like presidential National Security Adviser Brzezinski, do not even try to conceal their determination to repeat and fully implement last Friday's adventure without any regard to the consequences.

The problem of the American hostages--which could be solved through peaceful negotiations and in a spirit of understanding for the feelings and reactions of a nation such as the Iran which has suffered indescribably under the U.S.-motivated tyrrany of the shah--is now being used by U.S. imperialism as a suitable excuse for a more general crusade not only against the Iranian Revolution but also against the national liberation movements of the Middle East in an effort to restore U.S. supremacy. This very goal, within the framework of the current international balance of power, is tantamount to inciting a worldwide confrontation, particularly since the USSR will not naturally stand by with folded hands. Perhaps nothing is more dangerous at this moment than to encourage U.S. aggressive activities through expressions of "support" and "understanding" as have already been expressed by certain West European governments at a time when, on the contrary, the more vital interests of their people dictate immediate initiatives to put a stop to U.S. buccaneering climaxes which lead to war.

Within this context we believe that the Greek Government had and still has the duty to clearly and firmly condemn last Friday's U.S. operation on Iranian territory. Our country is far too close to the epicenter of an international crisis and it must have a direct interest in the developments. Therefore, it is not permissible to remain silent. In addition it must not fail to separate its position from the United States and NATO with regard to any possible action by them in the area. First of all it must finalize the severance of its ties with the military wing of the Alliance and it must cease all negotiations for its "return."

These moments are so critical that they demand not only the rejection of any possible involvement in American adventurism but also the exhaustion of every possibility, no matter how small it may be, for the application of pressure to discourage aggressive plans by the unhesitant--as they have been proved--U.S. leaders. The recent position of the KKE (Interior) calling for condemnation of U.S. buccaneering action and for cooperation by all the democratic parties, patriotic and peace-loving forces in the country. In the defense of peace and for the noninvolvement of our country in this buildup to war, expresses, under these conditions, the highest interests of our people and our nation.

RIZOSPASTIS SCORES GOVERNMENT'S 'TOLERANCE' OF U.S. STANCE

AT291348 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 29 Apr 80 pp 1, 9

[Excerpts] An open crisis has broken out within the Carter administration as a result of yesterday's resignation by Secretary of State C. Vance while international reaction against the piratical U.S. invasion of Iran is increasing and taking on ever increasing dimensions. It is possible that the secretary of state will be followed by other senior State Department officials who will also resign. The U.S. administration is already in dire straits, despite the open support and solidarity toward its buccaneering and dangerous policy which was expressed yesterday by the leaders of the EEC member states.

Official Greek Support?

By insistently refusing to condemn the American raid the Greek Government comes even closer--if it has not completely aligned itself--to the policy of support which was expressed by the "Nine" toward the United States. As reported by the RIZOSPASTIS correspondent from Luxembourg, where the EEC summit conference was held, two senior diplomats of the Greek Foreign Ministry conferred with political chiefs of the EEC on the issue of developments in the Near East.

The EEC leadership, in the meantime, is exerting strong pressure for the purpose of guaranteeing:

Full Greek support of "reprisals" against Iran.

Official recognition of Israel.

A most "emphatic" condemnation of Soviet action in Afghanistan.

The government spokesman in Athens, without fundamentally denying the dispatch of diplomats to Luxembourg, argued that "no pressure is being exerted" upon Greece and that "no reference was made to the recognition of Israel" during the summit conference of the "Nine." He added that the Greek Foreign Ministry would be officially informed on what was discussed and resolved at Luxembourg as provided for under the EEC accession agreement.

This peculiar and, to say the least, tolerant government position toward U.S. adventurism in the area creates grave concern among public opinion which discerns the threatening prospect of a direct or indirect Greek involvement in the dangerous activities of the United States.

This serious question was raised by the KKE [Exterior] in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday with a relevant interpellation by its deputies which:

Calls upon the government to respond to the desires of the people, to evaluate national interests and to declare that it separates its position from the buccaneering activities of the United States and that, in any case, it does not justify such activities. It also calls upon the government to state that it will not permit the use of Greek territory for any activities against Iran and that further it will abstain from any form of measures decided upon by the countries of the EEC and by NATO against Iran.

OFFICIAL DENIES PARLIAMENTARY BARTERING BEFORE 2D VOTE

AT251408 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 25 Apr 80 p 1

[Text] The issue of bartering (negotiations, soundings and so forth) does not exist and therefore further support of K. Karamanlis' candidacy can be guaranteed for his election as president of the republic.

It was in this spirit that government circles commented yesterday on press reports that offers, promises, satisfaction of demands and so forth were being made to guarantee deputies' votes over the 197 (180 if one adds Karamanlis' vote) which were cast for Karmanlis in the first round. Official circles explained that those demands which the small parties have made and which "coincide" with similar government ideas or offer a basis for study so that common points can be found can be discussed after the election with the government which will succeed K. Karamanlis!--as he himself stated on Tuesday night. At present any such negotiations would be nothing less than barter.

Specifically regarding yesterday's press reports about alleged haggling, promises and so forth, the government spokesman made the following statement:

"Those things which had to be said were stated prior to the election. We are now in the procedure for the election of the president of the republic and, as the prime minister has said, we must confront it with tranquil and unprejudiced thoughts. After all, this is dictated by the solemnity of the issue and the dignity of the country."

Meanwhile the Opposition Takes for Granted Karmanlis' Election.

Even PASOK cadres, who on Tuesday were cultivating an atmosphere for entry into a pre-election period (principally in order to create impressions) have now ceased such efforts while deputies who have already arrived in their constituencies, instead of preparing pre-electoral work with their monarchy committees, are "analyzing" the results of the first vote from which they expected something else.

It is characteristic that 48 hours have already passed since this first vote and the PASOK chairman has not made (neither on Wednesday nor yesterday) any statement or interpretation.

Yesterday political observers stressed that Papandreou, who already knew from polls and assessments that Karamanlis was the people's choice for chief of state, became certain after the first vote and the public reaction to this preference and chose the tactic of the silent confrontation of reality, perhaps returning to his old ideas that with Karamanlis as president of the republic he has greater opportunities to gain power.

ARMED FORCES 'STEPPED UP' FOR MAY DAY; PROTESTS STAGED 30 APR

WA301741 London REUTER in English 1648 GMT 30 Apr 80

[By Ayse Sarioglu]

[Excerpts] Ankara, April 30, REUTER--Martial law troops, backed by tanks, today surrounded the Istanbul headquarters of Turkey's biggest leftwing trade union confederation and ordered the detention of its leaders as tension rose on the eve of May Day. After troops in combat gear, supported by tanks and armored cars, sealed off DISK's [Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions'] headquarters near Istanbul Airport, the city's martial law command ordered the detention of its chairman, Abdullah Basturk, and the other six board members. The reason for the order was not known. One of the leaders was quickly detained but the others, including Mr Basturk, apparently were out of town.

Leftwing workers held brief work stoppages throughout the country today to protest the ban on May Day rallies. Buses stopped running in Ankara and Istanbul and some Istanbul banks were forced to close for the morning. No violence was reported. More than 500 people, mostly university and high school students, were arrested in Ankara yesterday after a series of violent incidents at leftist-controled faculties and schools. Many of the high school students who took part in occupations of their schools were between 13 and 15 years old.

In a statement before the meeting, Demirel said that no incidents had occurred in the country on May Day. Demirel said the state and the people will exist forever despite subversive efforts aimed at weakening it. Demirel added that the Council of Ministers would discuss measures taken against anarchic and terror incidents as well as subversive and divisive activities. The issue of reviving national economy would also be discussed during the meeting. The Council of Ministers meeting was continuing as this news report was being prepared.

SECRECY ARTICLE REMOVED FROM U.S. DEFENSE AGREEMENT

TA301712 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1635 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Text] The government has lifted the article on secrecy in the bill submitted to the parliament for the ratification of the Turkish-U.S. defense and economic cooperation agreement. The bill will be discussed by the parliamentary national defense committee in the next few days.

The agreement, which has been submitted for the parliament's approval, says that the parties will cooperate to achieve developments in the economic and social spheres, based on sovereign equality and mutual benefit. To this end the interested parties pledge to maintain increased and close cooperation in the fields of economy and defense as well as scientific and technical issues related to these subjects.

According to the agreement the United States Government will do its best to contribute to Turkey's development efforts by extending financial as well as technical aid on which mutual agreement has been reached. The agreement further says that Turkey will permit the participation of the U.S. Government in common defense measures to be taken in certain Turkish defense force installations. The activities and the technical operation of these installations will be carried out in accordance with goals and programs on which mutual agreement has been reached. The scope of the defense agreement envisaged in the agreement will be limited by responsibilities imposed by the NATO treaty. The agreement and its annexes will be valid for a 5-year period.

DEMIREL REJECTS USE OF BASES AGAINST IRAN, ISLAMIC NATIONS

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has said that it is useless to think that the defense installations in Turkey can be used outside their purposes against Iran and other Islamic countries. Demirel added that no one should consider such a possibility.

In reply to a question, Demirel said that employing NATO installations in Turkey against Islamic countries or Iran was out of the question. Demirel said the following on the issue: It is useless to think that the installations in Turkey can be used outside their purposes against Iran and other Islamic countries. No one should consider such a possibility. Not that there is such a possibility. However, it is very wrong to create the impression, every now and then, that the current government can cause damage to Islamic countries. This is useless, illogical and unnecessary.

RPP GROUPS SCORE GOVERNMENT FOR LIFTING NOTAM 714

TA301138 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Text] A joint statement issued by the RPP Senate and National Assembly groups says that the lifting of Notam 714--connected with the Aegean airspace--by the government has failed to fulfill expectations and no positive development has been achieved in Turkey's relations with Greece. The statement adds that the issue of Greece's return to NATO's military flank was discussed in the joint session of the RPP groups held yesterday. The statement says that the lifting of Notam 714 has placed the Turkish Federated State in a difficult situation. Pointing out that apparently the Notam 714 was lifted as a result of a hurried and incorrect assessment without proper study the statement adds: As it was in the past, Turkey's and Greece's respective flight information regions should end at a line which runs about the middle of the Aegean within NATO's military structure. There should be no third air flight information region in the Aegean linked to the headquarters [as heard] because such an arrangement would not be based on military requirements and it would be a political move originating from an opinion intended to limit our rights and responsibilities within the scope of our territorial waters in the Aegean. Given the great importance of the Aegean issue for Turkey this issue should be discussed in detail by the relevant committees of the parliament with the participation of the concerned ministers and experts. It will be a beneficial and correct stand if the government abstains from taking new decisions regarding the Aegean before the views of the parliament are known.

WESTERN EUROPE 'HOSTAGE' TO U.S. 'MANIPULATIONS'

LD291047 Brussels LE SOIR in French 27-28 Apr 80 p 3

[Unattributed report: "Another Hostage...Europe"]

[Text] Failure, especially on this scale, inevitably gives rise to the question: Who is to blame? If we are to believe the opinion polls, U.S. public opinion, which clamored for strong measures, is now blaming Jimmy Carter for having used them so badly. Shrewder commentators emphasize that you could not reasonably blame the President for the mechanical failings of the helicopters and the planes.

To which many retort that he should have acted earlier. But can we be certain that there would have been fewer risks a few days after the hostages had been taken with countless crowds thronging around the U.S. Embassy? All the eyewitnesses agree that there were many more revolutionary students and revolutionary guards in the first weeks after the occupation than in recent days. Moreover, it must be stated that those who advocated strong measures were often the ones who considered to history's balance sheet the lives of the 50 hostages sacrificed on the altar of U.S. prestige.

Who is to blame? If it is not easy to say where the blame lies, you can see more clearly, however, the various levels at which it is found.

In recent days an increasing number of voices have spoken out to caution an overexcited public opinion against the enormous risks of a military operation. These risks were of two types. The first touched on the very success of the operation: To reach Tehran and snatch 50 well-guarded people was tinged with the impossible. Events have proved this, unfortunately. The military men themselves were the first to counsel caution. The second type of risk was political. Certain prominent figures, not exactly passing for doves, had put Jimmy Carter on his guard: Our main enemy is not Iran but the USSR, and it would be made to thrust the former into the arms of the latter. Similarly, there is now every reason to fear that the West's positions have been seriously affected in two other sectors of the East-West front: Afghanistan and the Middle East. In both cases we could be watching a new hardening of the Muslim world against America.

Ultimately this is indeed the kind of event to sharpen the crisis of confidence between Washington and its allies. The latter had finally answered the call for help from Jimmy Carter who said that, otherwise, he would have had to resort to military measures for which they would have footed the bill. Perhaps the Europeans now feel that they have been manipulated. Some will say taken hostage...

CRISIS SOLUTION STILL STALLED OVER BRUSSELS QUESTION

LD301501 Brussels LE SOIR in French 27-28 Apr 80 pp 1,2

[Jean Lienardy report: "After Initial Agreement the Six Parties Are Thinking It Over: They Will Meet Again on Tuesday"]

[Text] At 0430 on Saturday Mr Martens and the negotiators of the traditional parties, having met since 1400 hours on Friday, announced that the formation of a new government was possible.

A first round of talks had just ended with a sufficiently close convergence of views to enable the party presidents concerned to plan presenting the outline of a program to their governing bodies. We know that this program contains two major headings: institutional reform, and economic and financial policy.

The community compromise, which delays a solution for Brussels but deals with Wallonia and Flanders, has been accepted, with reservations and special points.

The cleanup of public finance and the developments in fiscal policy were treated from a vigorous viewpoint. Maintenance of social benefits but an austere budget: These are the keynotes for the 1980 and 1981 budgets.

The political world was quite excited during Friday by the approach of an understanding which it could feel was emerging despite what was termed by the parties and communities represented "calculated reticence." Given elsewhere in this report are the successive statements made during the hours following the group and bureau meetings.

It was, nevertheless, an optimistic and happy "formateur" [premier designate] who, in the early hours of Saturday announced the results of what he himself termed a "first round." Fresh discussions are, indeed, planned between Mr Martens and the party presidents on Tuesday.

It was planned that Mr Martens would report to the king this Saturday noon. He was then to take part in the Luxembourg European "summit" on Sunday and Monday.

At the end of the first round of negotiations which closed at dawn, Mr Martens stated that the discussions had been positive. The party presidents have undertaken to defend the resulting agreement before their respective governing bodies. This agreement relates to the two notes introduced during the negotiations by the "formateur": The first concerns the final state reform, and the second tackles both the cleanup of public finance and fiscal measures.

Mr Martens' proposals on institutional reform have been universally accepted by the negotiators of the (10) parties concerned. Only two points have been set aside for the second round. They are, on the one hand, the exact locations of the regional executives, maintained within central government or directly autonomous on their election by the assemblies. And, on the other hand, the chapter relating to the financial resources at the disposal of the Flanders assemblies and the French community. Because of its political and technical complexity, this latter problem is to be discussed this weekend by a group of experts.

Public Finances

On the cleanup of public finances and on fiscal policy, Mr Martens emphasized that, for the 1980 and 1981 budgets, the negotiators had worked out the details of the fiscal measures and social allocations. The party presidents examined in general terms what arrangements should be made to compensate for the shortfall in state income which these two points would cause.

These arrangements pivot on three central points: first, the continuation of the policy of cleaning up the budget, begun in January; second, the internal movements between direct and indirect taxation; finally, the adoption of legal measures to counter tax evasion.

"Achieving these budgetary aims," Mr Martens stated in particular, "necessarily implies cleaning up all budgets. However, in social matters the austerity measures will be taken in concert with our social partners."

The Index

However, there will be no attack on the index-linking of salaries.

In any event, the 1980 budget objectives (with some 50 billion francs saved) will be maintained, Mr Martens said, as will the 2.2-percent reduction decided in March.

The "formateur's" aim for 1981, accepted by the negotiators, is that a GNP reduction of about 1 percent be applied to the net amount to be financed: This measure would make it possible to curb the recourse to foreign borrowing and the increase in interest rates.

Fiscal Measures

The "formateur" gave some estimates based on the cost of the fiscal measures planned. For 1980 the fiscal measures for business will represent about 4.7 billion francs, while personal tax measures will reach about 12.95 billion. The tax section of the law-program will thus be completely altered to take account of this shortfall in income.

The Brussels Problem and...Missiles

Replying to various questions on the agreement between the six party presidents, Mr Martens stated in particular that the fate of the communes of the Brussels periphery was one of factors in the Brussels problem. The "formateur" favored a rapid settlement of the status of Brussels--a settlement which he still hopes to achieve during the next round of negotiations.

He emphasized, meanwhile, that at the request of the Flemish socialists there had been a special agreement on the deployment of nuclear missiles in Belgium. This agreement related to the stance adopted on 12 December last which envisaged a 6-month moratorium. With the international situation in mind, the future government must continue the initiatives and contacts already begun and examine when and to what degree the conditions for the installation of such missiles will be achieved. The government will thus make its decision and submit it to parliament, which will settle the matter.

Guarded Comments

On leaving Mr Martens residence, the presidents of the six parties involved in the negotiations gave their first impressions: terse from the social Christians, quite optimistic from the liberals, rather gloomy for the socialist presidents.

Mr Tindemans was evasive, commenting only on the weather: "I can state that it is raining...." Mr Vanden Boeynants was no more eloquent: "I feel that things have gone well," then adding: "What we need now is to settle the Brussels question as soon as possible."

For the liberals, both Walloon Party of Liberty and Reform (PRL) President Gol and Party of Liberty and Progress (PVV) President de Cleroq appeared satisfied insofar as their parties' tax demands had been retained in the agreement. "Potential formulas exist for the reform of the state structures," Mr Gol stated, emphasizing later the importance of a measure like the gradual merging of married couples' incomes to achieve a complete merging by 1984.

Mr de Cleroq noted that the agreement took up numerous PVV claims but that, despite everything, an important chapter remained in the community section: everything dealing with the financing of the new institutions. The president of the Flemish liberals also hoped on this subject that a solution would emerge from the coming negotiations.

Socialist Reticence

The two socialist presidents appeared less optimistic. Mr Cools, president of the Socialist Party [French-speaking] (PSB), stated: "I shall present the texts that I disclosed. The party bureau will then judge whether I should return for a second round of negotiations...."

When we asked him if he would simply present the texts without defending them, the PSB president explained: "Present them, that is all. Moreover, if I come to negotiate at this first round, it is solely because the country needs a government." For his part, Socialist Party [Flemish] (BSP) President van Miert emphasized that this first round of negotiations was never anything more than exploratory talks.

"Mr Martens' proposals are a good way of approaching the problems," the Flemish Socialist leader pointed out, although he would have preferred a complete agreement on the state reform. On the fiscal measures, Mr van Miert stated that he did not feel that the tax reduction would involve social cutbacks, but his part would pay particular attention to this point.

If an agreement exists between the six parties approached by the "formateur," it is received differently by different people.

The meetings of the party ruling bodies on Saturday afternoon (for the PVV, PRL and Christian People's Party (CVP) and on Monday (for the PSB and BSP), should tell us whether Mr Martens' planned "six-party coalition" is on the way to being formed.

If this were the case, the "formateur's" "second round" would begin at 0900 on Tuesday. If one or other of the six parties holds back, people will wonder what new miracle solution could be found by Mr Martens to escape from the impasse once more.

The PRL Considers the Martens Proposals Acceptable

"If the Brussels liberals want to secede, let them go! Undoubtedly they will reunite into a sort of Brussels rally with a deputy and a senator..." This remark came from PRL President Jean Gol himself.

On Friday morning the reforming liberals president announced his party's attitude to the present negotiations. "We are still at the stage of exploratory talks," Mr Gol said. "We are currently looking for the signs to bring the six parties to agreement. In the second phase we will try to find evidence to suggest that such an agreement is possible.

The PRL president emphasized that his party had not been an applicant but was called on after the failure of theprevious coalition. "The liberals are not refusing to take part in the negotiations, but they remain firm in their aims," Mr Gol restated, after referring to the "unanimous" solidarity which exists among the French-speaking parties participating in the negotiations.

On economic and social matters the reforming liberals' president seemed satisfied that Mr Martens' proposals should take up the demands put forward by his party, particularly on value added tax on investment expenditure, land registry standardization and the merging of married couples' incomes.

The People's Union (VU) and the Belgian Communist Party (PCB): Foreseeable Clashes in Brussels

The VU Bureau considered the Martens proposals disastrous. The very fact of leaving the Brussels problems to one side suggests even more bitter language struggles in the coming years in the capital and its periphery, the bureau believes.

Mr Renard, president of the PCB Regional Council, fears that the postponement of a solution for Brussels could transform the region into either an area of confrontation between the two dominant communities or an object of wrangling above the heads of the main parties involved.

"Nothing Definite," PSB President Believes

The socialists also discussed the matter on Friday. On leaving the PSB Bureau, President Andre Cools announced that a meeting of parliamentary groups would be held on Monday morning to report on the results of the exploratory negotiations now in progress. The PSB Bureau has authorized its negotiators to continue with these talks. Meanwhile, the Bureau will meet again on Monday afternoon.

Mr Andre Cools expressed surprise that there was already talk of an agreement: "The French-speakers at the negotiating table said no to the Flemish demands on Brussels," he said, "and that induced the 'formateur' to make new proposals on the postponement (and not the freezing) in the immediate future of the discussion on all Brussels' problems." And the PSB president insisted that the term "all Brussels' problems" should also include the problems of the periphery: "People have never put it otherwise," he said, adding that a longer time would be needed beyond the "fateful deadline of 9 May to reach agreement on the government program, if we are to avoid the consequences of elections and a political power vacuum." Mr Cools also indicated that the PSB Bureau reaffirmed the solidarity of the socialists of Brussels and Wallonia. In the PSB president's view a "legal status quo for Brussels" does not rule out rapid negotiation for a solution on Brussels and the component parts of the Brussels problem.

"Exploration does not mean discovery," Mr Cools insisted again, affirming that the French speakers have not given up and that nothing is final.

And a personal reflection: "I have established that lead-lined boots (with which Mr Cools is said to have gone to the negotiations) give you leg cramps!"

100 INJURED IN AMSTERDAM ANTI-ROYAL FAMILY PROTESTS

NC301511 Paris AFP in English 1454 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Text] Amsterdam, April 30 (AFP)--About 100 persons were injured here today in clashes between police and thousands of demonstrators, Dutch television announced. It said the clashes were continuing.

The fighting broke out in several parts of the city as Holland's new queen, Beatrix, was being sworn in. The demonstrators were some of Amsterdam's many ill-housed. They were protesting the living expenses of the court and the security measures for the abdication ceremony, which paralysed the centre of Amsterdam. Police used teargas to halt hundreds of demonstrators who were marching toward the royal palace carrying red banners and throwing stones and fireworks. At Dam Square, where the palace is located, spectators booed the royal family and the police.

NRC HANDELSBLAD ASSESSES FAILURE OF U.S. RESCUE BID

LD291035 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 26 Apr 80 p 7

[Editorial: "Abortive Action"]

[Text] President Carter's explanations have not left us any wiser about the why and wherefore of his abortive rescue mission in Iran.

He has made it quite clear that he bears full responsibility for giving the orders. However, he has definitely left us in the dark about the reason for his action and its timing.

With regard to the timing of this action it should be pointed out that it certainly came very quickly after the introduction of sanctions by the United States' European allies. And yet the United States had given assurances that active European support for the U.S. standpoint would make it possible for Washington to postpone military action for the time being. However, the Americans will point out that this was a humanitarian and not a military action.

That does not alter the fact that this action has very unfortunate aspects although it is difficult to judge this operation properly as long as the exact course of events remains unclear. No judgment on the U.S. action is possible as long as this lack of information on the facts continues. However, it must be pointed out that it is the Tehran government and not Carter which is responsible for the situation which has arisen in Tehran through the hostages affair.

This is the case because the Tehran government has not been able or willing to do anything to make a solution possible for fear of clashing with the orthodox clergy. The latter clearly want to use the presence of the hostages to strengthen their political position which eroded by the end of last year. There can be no doubt that the clergy have so far benefitted most, politically speaking, from the failure of the rescue operation which the clergy's supporters see as an act of God. We must hope that the political importance which the hostages have for the clergy will help to ensure their safety, since as long as they are there they can always be used to stir up emotion and distract attention from the real problems which the clergy, with their archaic political program, cannot solve.

Before judging this action it is important to bear in mind that Washington sought a rapprochement with the new government in Iran last year and even expressed readiness to support it in the fight against the Kurds.

It is even possible that the hostages were seized in reaction to a "threater " rapprochement between the then Prime Minister Bazargan and the United States. The hostages were seized 2 days after Bazargan had talks with President Carter's Security Adviser Brzezinski in Algiers.

In judging this action we must guard against unilaterally assuming that Carter was overwhelmingly guided by election considerations in his actions. Considerations of this type apply no less to the German chancellor who faces parliamentary elections in October and to the French president whose term of office ends in spring 1981. Carter also has to consider the international status of the United States which has played an important stabilizing role over the past 35 years. Despite Vietnam the Russians and Chinese willingly negotiated with Washington in the early seventies.

Should the impression remain that a small group of terrorists can keep a superpower in limbo at will, that could ultimately be fatal for the whole world since that could lead to many people having an entirely different assessment of the real balance of power. This exerts scarcely less pressure to take action than is exerted by the demands of radical public opinion. However, another aspect of yesterday's failure is that it demonstrated that it is easier to find action necessary or to demand it than to carry it out. This is because when somebody demands action he tacitly assumes that this action will succeed. No thought is given to the possibility of failure. However, we are now faced with an actual failure which has considerably increased the dangers in Tehran.

One hopeful sign is that some of the formerly fiercest U.S. "hawks"--such as Democratic Senator Jackson--now seem to have much more understanding of the dangers of a hard line.

REJECTION OF SOVIET VISIT DOES NOT MEAN JOINT PROJECTS ABANDONED

[Algemeen NEDERLANDS PERSBUREAU report: "Russian Minister Not Welcome in the Netherlands"]

[Text] The Hague, 19 April--It has been made clear to Russian Minister of Power and Electrification Neporozhniy, who was planning to head a delegation on a visit to the Netherlands, that his visit is not welcome at present. Therefore, negotiations with the Soviet Union on Dutch know-how, equipment and apparatus for major Russian natural gas and offshore projects will not go ahead for the time being.

This step is a result of the cooling in Dutch-Russian relations caused by the Russian invasion of Afghanistan and the treatment of the dissident Sakharov.

The Netherlands ambassador in Moscow told Neporozhniy that his delegation would still be welcome, but the minister replied that the delegation would not go without him.

These negotiations had been prepared by the Industrial Council for Oceanography which had been working on them for several years. A delegation from the Industrial Council for Oceanography--an organization to which almost 200 Dutch companies belong--laid the foundations for these negotiations during a visit to the Soviet Union.

According to a spokesman for the transport and waterways ministry, which is involved in these negotiations, the postponement of the delegation's visit does not mean that the Netherlands has abandoned its participation in the projects.

SCHMIDT TO REITERATE AFGHAN WITHDRAWAL REQUEST TO SOVIETS

LD011114 Hamburg DPA in German 1039 GMT 1 May 80

[Excerpt] Stuttgart--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today announced that during his forthcoming visit to Moscow, which will take place "before long," he will request the Kremlin leadership to finally begin the withdrawal of their troops from Afghanistan. The chancellor addressed his renewed request to the Soviet Government at the main May Day rally of the German TU Federation (DGB) in Stuttgart. Addressing the rally, which was attended by about 12,000 people, Schmidt said: "I shall reiterate this with great clarity when I see the Soviet leaders on my return visit to Moscow before long." He will tell them: "Finally start withdrawing your armed forces from Afghanistan where they do not belong."

Solidarity is needed not only among workers and people altogether but among nations as well, Schmidt said. Without treaties there can be no peace. "Anyone who does not want to compromise is unsuited for peace," the chancellor added, recalling the solidarity of the Somali Government which had allowed FRG policemen to free the hostages of the hijacked Lufthansa plane in Mogadishu.

Turning to the current situation in Iran, the chancellor said that the Germans "share with a feeling of solidarity," the feelings of the Americans at present. "We know how dangerous the present situation in Iran is to world peace. We also know how dangerous the military intervention in Afghanistan is for peace throughout the world," Schmidt said.

The chancellor went on to say that something like that could not happen in Europe because the FRG is a member of the Western alliance. Our peace, the chancellor added, depends on the ability to defend it in the spirit of solidarity if the need should arise. "We do not wish such a case to arise," the chancellor said. The most important prerequisite for social progress is peace throughout the world. The chancellor emphasized: "We must try hard to be able to live in peace with everyone." The Federal Republic has not relapsed into the cold war.

GOVERNMENT SAYS NO DATE SET FOR SCHMIDT VISIT TO MOSCOW

LD011534 Hamburg DPA in German 1448 GMT 1 May 80

[Excerpts] Bonn--No date has yet been set for Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's Moscow trip this year. This was announced by Government Spokesman Armin Gruenewald in Bonn today.

A spokesman from the Soviet Embassy in Bonn said he did not know at present the date of the federal chancellor's trip. The visit will reciprocate Brezhnev's visit to Bonn in 1978.

In the meantime, the (?first half of June) was named as a possible date. In an exchange of written messages in March, Brezhnev did not set a time for the visit. At that time circles in Bonn believed that a trip by Schmidt to Moscow could only have meaning if the Soviet leadership made it clear, in the aftermath of the invasion of Afghanistan, that it was contributing to the restoration of the military balance between East and West.

TALKS ON SCHMIDT ARMS PROPOSAL REPORTEDLY ACCEPTABLE TO MOSCOW

DW020927 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 2 May 80 p 4

[Article signed Dc: "The Chancellor Should Travel"]

[Text] Bonn, 30 April--In the opinion of the German Young Democrats [FDP youth organization], Moscow staking great hopes on a visit by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. This is the view advocated in Bonn by the youth organization's deputy chairman, Thilo Schelling, after talks held by a delegation of the Young Democrats with politicians in Moscow and Warsaw. He said Vadim Zagladin, deputy head of the Department for International Affairs at the CPSU Central Committee, had told them that one could talk in Moscow about Schmidt's proposal to renounce the stationing of medium-range missiles for several years, A limitation of these arms could be settled under the SALT III arms limitation treaty. The precondition for this, however, is the ratification of SALT II. On behalf of his organization, Schelling called on the chancellor to go to Moscow in any event before the end of the summer.

A joint communique of the Young Democrats and the Committee of Youth Organizations of the USSR states, among other things, that both organizations condemn "the dangerous character of the decisions made at the December (1979) meeting of NATO." As for Afghanistan, both organizations further declared that, even though both sides had explained their divergent positions on the "events" in Afghanistan, "they jointly oppose any attempt to make them the pretext for disturbing detente policy."

PRESS COMMENTARY ANALYZES REASONS FOR APN ATTACK ON BONN

DW300940 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 30 Apr 80 p 4

[Commentary signed Jr.: "Irritation in Moscow"]

[Text] The fact that in the event of a military conflict in Europe, the Federal Republic would become the target of a Soviet retaliatory strike is not a secret which the Moscow agency APN has now divulged, but a fact which has been determining our existence since the long-range means of delivery for nuclear warheads came into being--meaning for the past 25 years. To that extent APN recalled facts rather than threatened with them. We cannot pretend as though we were not aware of the dangers menacing the Federal Republic in the event of war.

It is a different question as to why the Moscow propaganda organ devised for external use reminds the Federal Republic of its precarious situation at this very time and makes the Bonn politicians panicky--as though they had never heard of it. The agency expresses an irritation on the part of the Soviets which consolidated after NATO's decision on the arms gap closure last December, an irritation which is attributable primarily to disappointment over Bonn's policy. The latter's currently low prestige in the East bloc can also be seen by other publications so that what we are dealing with in this bang from Moscow is not a mishap but a verbal exaggeration which, however, properly reflects in all probability what the mood is like.

The people in Moscow are aware that without the strong pull of the Federal Republic the NATO decision on closing the arms gap and the boycott of the Olympic games would stand little chance of implementation. The Soviets resist the realization, however, that it is solely their policy which provokes such defensive actions. In Afghanistan they have become too deeply involved to get out of it again easily. [paragraph continues]

But what prevents them from responding to the Western offer to negotiate on the limitation of the medium-range missiles? It is, after all, just an attempt to retain the lead already scored. The trip to Moscow will be a difficult one for the chancellor--provided the Soviets stand by the invitation.

Schmidt Applauds Cooperation

LD302051 Hamburg DPA in German 1951 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Excerpt] Lemgo--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has expressed his satisfaction that the Federal Republic and the GDR have proved their ability to cooperate in the present world political crisis. Addressing an SPD election rally during the North Rhine-Westphalia election campaign in Lemgo, Lippe District, he mentioned the traffic agreement signed between Bonn and East Berlin today. He called on the crowd of 5,000 not to allow the fellowship between the Germans on both sides of the frontier to falter in the present world situation.

The chancellor said that the safeguarding of peace remains the Germans' most important interest. This includes a moderate language appropriate to a nation located in the heart of Europe and surrounded by many neighbors. Cooperation must be continued not only between the Federal Republic and the GDR, but also between West and East Europe. Neither "hawkish statements" nor the tendency by some German politicians to be more American than the Americans help this. The chancellor protested strongly against the socialist foreign policy being "slandered as kowtowing to Moscow." "We have had enough of it; we can stand this no longer."

Inter-Relations Minister Comments

[Text] Osnabrueck--In the view of Egon Franke, federal minister for intra-German relations, the signing of the traffic agreement with the GDR in East Berlin on Wednesday is of special political significance at this time. In an interview for NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG (Wednesday edition), he says that this agreement shows that the process of cooperation between both German states is continuing undisturbed "in spite of the critical situation in many parts of the world." It has been shown that the Federal Republic and the GDR are seriously trying to keep their relations out of the crisis and make a contribution to the safeguarding of peace.

He envisions that more agreements will be concluded with the GDR since both sides desire cooperation. The minister announced that "serious talks" would soon take place about the salt level of the River Werra, with its adverse consequences for the River Weser.

The building of an artery from Lower Saxony to the Berlin-Hamburg transit motorway would be proposed. There are also chances of improvements in the humanitarian fields.

The minister said that visits by Federal Chancellor Schmidt to Moscow and East Berlin made good sense. The dates have not yet been fixed.

An edited version of the interview was prereleased to DPA.

STRAUSS COMMENTS ON FRG MIDEAST POLICY IN HA'ARETZ INTERVIEW

TA301759 Tel Aviv HA'ARETZ in Hebrew 30 Apr 80 p 3

[Interview with FRG Christian Democratic Party leader Franz Josef Strauss by HA'ARETZ correspondent Daniyel Dagan--date, place not given]

[Text] Question: Is there any difference between the positions of the coalition and the opposition in Bonn on the Israeli-Arab conflict?

Answer: The Federal Government and the coalition parties repeatedly mumble a formula, devoid of any content, which is in fact an exercise in evading the issue. The formula is that all parties involved in the conflict have the right to live within secure borders with the obligation that the rights of the Palestinians to self-determination be honored. One can repeat this formula a thousand or even a million times, but that does not bring about any progress. The Federal Government is hiding behind the backs of the nine EEC countries and is avoiding a clear position. It is my position that nothing can be achieved on the Middle East problem and the issues involved simply by making public statements. We have here a classic case of the need to use quiet diplomacy. All declarations, whatever their content, only arouse false hopes and cause disappointment and failure. This causes further radicalizations in the positions of the sides.

Question: You certainly know the contents of the European declaration on the Middle East which is expected to be made in June?

Answer: No, I do not.

Question: At any rate, it is a fact that, from Israel's point of view, it is a very uncomfortable declaration. How do you assess the expected European initiative?

Answer: I do not think that public declarations will do any good. In my opinion, one cannot find a solution to the conflict all at once, and there is no magic formula for success. The conflict can only be solved in stages, step by step, with time gaps between the states.

Question: Is it true that all the major parties in Germany support the right of the Palestinians to self-determination?

Answer: First of all, we support the German right to self-determination and the right to self-determination in general. However, we are also aware of the fact that there are differences between the ideal solution and the realistic possibilities.

Question: In the case of the Middle East how, in your opinion, can the right to self-determination be realized?

Answer: No comment.

Question: What do you expect from your coming talks in Israel?

Answer: First, full information on the conflict. This is very important to me, especially since in a few weeks I intend to respond to President as-Sadat's invitation to visit Egypt. Secondly, it will be an opportunity to inform my Israeli interlocutors on my ideas about the way to solve the conflict--views that I am not making public. Thirdly, I expect an exchange of comprehensive opinions on the international situation with special emphasis on the "crisis belt," from Afghanistan in the north to South Africa in the south.

Question: Will you also be meeting with Israeli opposition leaders?

Answer: I have expressed the desire to meet with Shim'on Peres, who is an old friend of mine. In the past when we held defense portfolios we met on many occasions and worked together.

Question: What role do you see for Europe in solving the conflict?

Answer: Whatever the division of labor within NATO, without guarantees for Israel's existence one cannot expect to begin to show the amount of flexibility required today. The solution that I envisage does not require Israel to take any unreasonable security risks.

Question: The Soviet news agency has attacked Bonn, maintaining that, in the event of a conflict, Germany would be the first battlefield. What conclusions do you draw prior to the chancellor's upcoming visit to Moscow?

Answer: Helmut Schmidt has to think very seriously about his trip to Moscow if the invitation sent to him is still valid. We didn't hear such remarks from Moscow even when we were a weak economic factor, insignificant politically and militarily meaningless. This is not how one treats a partner with whom one wishes to reduce tension. The Soviet Union is gradually beginning to view the GDR as a colony--at least from a political and psychological point of view.

MARCHAIS: 'NO JUSTIFICATION' FOR HOSTAGE RESCUE ATTEMPT

LD011123 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 29 Apr 80 p 11

[Unattributed report: "France Must Call a Halt"]

[Text] Georges Marchais made the following statement in Paris yesterday:

A serious problem is now facing France and the French people following Carter's abortive military expedition to Iran.

Indeed there can be no justification for such an operation. Carter dares to invoke the fate of the hostages. In fact there is every reason to think that the American nationals would have been the first victims of the bloodbath which the U.S. President deliberately ran the risk of prompting. It was with the whole aim of trying to destabilize the Iranian regime that this operation was decided. This is an unacceptable and dangerous path.

Everybody knows that the PCF is opposed to the seizure of hostages. However, it is completely unrealistic to think that a positive solution can be found to this problem by continuing to gloss over the previous period, which was characterized by the CIA coup d'etat in 1953 and the unconditional U.S. support for the shah's bloody regime, and by continuing to ignore the Iranian people's present demands. It is not by commando operations that such a problem will be settled. It can only be solved politically. Carter is turning his back on such a solution, preferring adventure. His provocative policy is directly threatening peace.

In these circumstances France must call a halt. It would be ridiculous and insane for our country to follow such a policy. It would be criminal to allow our country's fate to depend in any way whatever on the sudden outburst of an aggressive and whimsical head of state. Let us not run the risk of seeing the French people drawn into some adventure! On the contrary let us ensure that France devotes all its efforts to peace!

To do this our country must speak with its own voice, outside any alignment and in full independence. France must reject the U.S. policy of sanctions and confrontation with Iran and must take action to settle the problem politically taking account of the Iranian people's legitimate demands. France must be free to choose and decide and take real action to reduce tension, preserve and revive detente, peace and disarmament.

This is the only way in which France, in keeping with its noblest traditions, can make its own contribution to solving the problems facing us to move toward peace and friendship among peoples.

RESCUE MISSION SHOWS DANGER OF ALIGNING WITH U.S. POLICY

LD011429 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 29 Apr 80 p 1

[Rene Andrieu editorial: "The Road to Hell"]

[Text] Following the failure of the U.S. escapade in Iran President Carter's advisers are threatening to do better next time. Although Secretary of State Cyrus Vance has resigned because he disapproved of the operation--would he have done so if it had succeeded?--Mr Brzezinski stated on U.S. television that the United States is not going to sit back and that it reserves the right to take any action it deemed useful in the future.

This time we have been warned, although the mishaps suffered by the Washington leaders ought to make them more cautious.

In any case the responsibility of Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand who have justified the raid is now clearly established. Their stance encourages Carter to persist. If the U.S. President launches into a new adventure tomorrow, the French president and the Socialist Party [PS] first secretary will share the responsibility for it with him.

The only reasonable way of settling the hostages problem is to seek a political solution with the Tehran government. However, such a solution can clearly not be made easier either by the recent military operation or by the threats accompanying it, especially since Mr Carter has deceived not only the Iranians--since he had been planning the raid since November 1979 although at that time he swore that he did not intend to take military action--but also his European allies whom he recently asked to join in economic sanctions against Iran so that he would not need to take any other steps.

The Iranian affair has shown the dangers of aligning European policy with the United States and also the existence of this alignment. It is symptomatic that none of the Community leaders has had the courage to protest against the U.S. operation aside from the hurriedly stifled murmur from the Italian deputy foreign minister.

Moreover the same alignment can be seen in the PS, whose daily newsletter yesterday published F. Mitterrand's emotional approval of Carter while it simply censored Jospin, J.-P. Cot and J.-P. Chevenement who had temporarily strayed from the paths of Atlanticism by talking of an "absurd operation" and a "sorry mess." Perhaps those concerned agreed to this censorship after criticizing themselves and withdrawing these statements which had been rendered insignificant as soon as the first secretary had expressed the opposite view.

With regard to the U.S. military action in Iran, the PS national convention has unfortunately just demonstrated once more that F. Mitterrand is closely aligned with Washington's positions. And yet his personal experience should help him to assess the dangers of using force. In 1956 a government in which he was keeper of the seals intercepted the plane carrying Ben Bella and the leaders of the Algerian rebellion. This exploit revived a war which killed hundreds of thousands of people. It would be wiser and nobler to learn from history and not encourage the Americans to regain their lost position in Iran if only by mentioning--today as before--that the road to hell is paved with good intentions.

L'HUMANITE COMMENTS ON BRZEZINSKI INTERVIEWS

LD011335 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 25 Apr 80 pp 1, 9

[Text] The interviews given by President Carter's chief adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski to LE FIGARO and PARIS-MATCH are significant.

First, they confirm both the aggressiveness of U.S. imperialism and its will to dictate to its allies what it feels their conduct should be.

Aggressiveness on a worldwide scale. Thus Mr Brzezinski emphasizes what he terms "the interdependence between the three major strategic zones which are," in his view, "Western Europe, the Far East and the Middle East."

And he postulates: "If just one of these three zones were to waver, the security (sic) of the two others would be automatically affected."

He added: "Appropriate conclusions--either military or political--must be drawn from this essential fact."

With satisfaction, Mr Brzezinski assesses the Carter administration's achievements in this respect. It has contributed, he said, "to the revitalization of NATO. We are setting up rapid deployment forces. We have increased our military spending in real terms."

The avowed target of a possible armed intervention is Iran. Mr Carter has already made this threat. Moreover, when questioned on this subject, Mr Brzezinski has thrice refused to give further details.

Nevertheless, he added that, in his view, "the Iranians are well aware...that the people threatening their independence are not thousands of kilometers away, in the United States, but much nearer, to the north, in a country...which is perhaps preparing to invade them again."

IN OTHER WORDS, IRAN'S INDEPENDENCE IS TO BE "DEFENDED" NOT AGAINST THE COUNTRY WHICH EXPLOITED IT FOR YEARS AND ENABLED THE SHAH TO EXERCISE HIS BLOODY TERROR, BUT AGAINST... "THE SOVIET UNION."

REMARKS WHICH CONFIRM WHAT YESTERDAY'S NEW YORK TIMES WROTE: Mr. Carter "has committed the United States to a path which seems to lead to a military confrontation with Iran... This path involves enormous risks."

The American Methodist Church is rightly concerned at these prospects. And Austria, quite justifiably, invokes its neutrality in refusing to associate itself with "sanctions" against Iran.

In Mr Brzezinski's view, the allies of the United States should obey it to the letter. Although he expresses satisfaction at the Nine's decisions in Luxembourg he also says straightaway on Iran and Afghanistan: "Instead of scolding and criticizing our allies will, I hope, display greater cooperativeness."

A surprising "cooperation" for which any prior discussion would be superfluous on the pretext that "there comes a time when you have to decide and act. As a superpower, the United States is obliged to act. It cannot make do with endless discussions." Warning to Paris, Bonn and Tokyo!

Nevertheless, Mr Brzezinski awards Mr Giscard d'Estaing a good mark. He has "helped to restore...stability to Zaire..."

But a strict warning to West Europe not "to go to Moscow bearing carrots" while the Americans "are wielding the big stick!"

To what extent has Washington's policy of tension influenced Giscardian diplomacy? Perhaps we will know today, at the end of the Andrey Gromyko talks in Paris.

The fact remains that, since it effectively entails very serious dangers, the aggressive policy of America's ruling powers is coming into greater conflict with realities which they cannot ignore.

Thus, on the Iranian Revolution, Mr Brzezinski admits that this "was an historic development which could not be manipulated from without."

As dangerous as it may be in the short term, imperialism's counteroffensive runs counter to history. Instead of participating in it, as the Giscard government is doing, France would, on the contrary, have everything to gain by discouraging it.

LE MATIN ON 'SECRET DOCUMENT' FROM U.S. EMBASSY IN IRAN

LD020905 Paris LE MATIN in French 29 Apr 80 p 11

[M-C. D. report: "When Washington Reported the Shah 'Sick'"]

[Text] The name of Cyrus Vance is linked with a little-known episode from the early days of the Iran-U.S. crisis: He was warned last fall that he would be entrusted with an exploratory conciliation mission to the then Iranian prime minister regarding the shah's fate, but ultimately it was his rival, Zbigniew Brzezinski, who dealt the affair, despite the warnings of the U.S. charge d'affaires in Tehran.

Everyone now knows the differences which, from the beginning of the Iran crisis, brought the policy of Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, who favored a more traditional subtle diplomacy, into conflict with the blunter policy of Jimmy Carter's national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski. According to a document from the U.S. Embassy in Tehran conveyed to LE MATIN by the French Association for Friendship and Solidarity with the Iranian People (AFASPI), it emerges that Cyrus Vance's endeavors were disparaged to the very end.

This document, which dates from September 1979, is an answer from U.S. Charge d'Affaires Bruce Laingen to the secretary of state via his assistant, Under Secretary for Political Affairs David Newson, and shows that in its feverish search for a way to get the shah onto its territory, the United States arranged everything, including the sovereign's illness. This was the first time that "illness" was mentioned in the correspondence between the charge d'affaires and the secretary of state. It was not until 27 October that the shah was admitted to a New York hospital "urgently and for humanitarian reasons."

Bruce Laingen replied frankly that "given the atmosphere and general attitude toward the shah of the people who control and influence public opinion here, I doubt that the argument that the shah is ill will improve reactions here at all" (implying: if he went to the United States). Bruce Laingen even took the precaution of explaining at the end of his message, classified "secret and for your eyes only," that it would be advisable to consult the Iranian Government beforehand--then the Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan and his foreign minister Ibrahim Yazdi.

In other messages the diplomat had previously drawn Washington's attention to the danger of hostages being taken.

"Having said that," Laingen replied to Vance's assistant, "you should emphasize yourself how important it is that we should speak in advance with the Iranian Government about the possibility of allowing him (the shah) in, even for a limited period. If we have really taken this decision, and if this problem is urgent, clearly the best way of obtaining some kind of cooperation from the provisional Iranian Government would be for the secretary (Vance) to raise the question when he meets Yazdi in October."

Cyrus Vance did not meet with Yazdi in Algiers at the end of October as he had thought he would. Instead, Brzezinski went to the Algerian independence celebrations and had talks with Bazargan. Talks which, when used by the Iranian opposition, were to hasten the downfall of the Iranian prime minister.

It seems that, once more, Cyrus Vance had the ground cut out from under him by Brzezinski since, despite Laingen's warnings, the U.S. authorities did not even wait for the Algiers meeting before permitting the shah to enter the United States as part of the last scenario: the "urgent illness."

By publishing this document, AFASPI, through its Secretary General Nuri Albala, is protesting "against the U.S. Government, which is trying to persuade people that it is trying to free the hostages; far from it: As with the admission of the shah in October 1979, the humanitarian reasons are merely a pretext for a policy of aggression."

LE MONDE VIEWS EC TENSIONS, POSSIBLE SOLUTIONS

LD021033 Paris LE MONDE in French 30 Apr 80 p 1

[Editorial: "The 'Post-Treaty-of-Rome' Period?"]

[Text] Can the Community function without Britain? Apparently the European Council's failure in Luxembourg would have nothing but advantages for London's partners since they would not have to relieve it of the burden of its budget contribution. However, the British Government is blocking the increase in agricultural prices and the organization of the lamb market, not to mention fishing.

Despite the calm attitude shown by Mr Giscard d'Estaing and French Agricultural Minister Mehaignerie, all the indications are that, in view of the farmers' impatience, acute tensions will soon arise among the Nine on this subject.

The Germans and French are thinking of a "two-speed Europe" or even something more than that which means--has Mrs Thatcher thought of this?--a radical change in the nature of the Community. Indeed this solution--a nightmare for orthodox Europeans--has always implicitly been practised. Does not the European monetary system include only eight of the nine member states?

The idea put forward by Mr Giscard d'Estaing--because the "British demands, because of their scope and persistence, could not be met within the framework of the existing rules"--of defining a new financial system for the Community, based on the heretical rule of a "just return"--complete or limited--heralds a new era, a "post-Treaty-of-Rome" period. Faced with the United Kingdom which, in view of its economic structures, would be forced for a long time to pay a great deal more than it receives from the European budget--which it refuses to do--the aim would be to roughly balance what each country receives. This would clearly be a major step backwards: renouncing de facto financial solidarity and abandoning a major factor of integration.

Of course this has not been decided. Nobody really knows whether Mr Giscard d'Estaing and Mr Schmidt are using this weapon to frighten the small countries which are particularly unlikely to be generous toward Britain since they benefit most from the existing system. One thing is certain: The French and German leaders, disappointed by the Community mishaps--so frequent since Britain joined--and skeptical about the European institutions which are running increasingly badly, are seriously considering a reform which would have some logic.

However, the dangers, especially for the French, have to be considered. Can anybody conceive of a Common Agricultural Policy in which free circulation of products and preference for Community products would be maintained but stripped of financial solidarity? Speaking in more general terms, would it not be extremely dangerous to undermine what has been considered, ever since the Treaty of Rome, to be one of the essential foundations of the process of building Europe?

The Franco-German proposal reveals a trend, but there is not yet any definite policy in Paris or Bonn. However, the moment of truth is at hand, especially since the "particular resources"--in other words the money available for the Eruopean budget--will soon reach their ceiling. Then a choice will have to be made: Either raise the ceiling which all member states now claim to reject, or change the rules.

GENERAL MERY SEES POSSIBLE NEUTRON BOMB ROLE IN DEFENSE

LD011525 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 Apr 80 p 29

[Unattributed report: "General Mery Believes That the Neutron Bomb Can Meet French Needs"]

[Text] Speaking to the National Assembly Defense Committee in Paris on 24 April, General Mery, chief of the Armed Forces General Staff, considered that the neutron bomb could meet French defense needs.

According to parliamentarians present, General Mery asserted that because of its blast and heat effects, which are 10 times smaller than those produced by a nuclear bomb of the type already in service in the armed forces, the neutron bomb could be used against any enemy at close range without harming friendly forces. In the view of the chief of General Staff of the Armed Forces, it is not a question of building only neutron bombs for the tactical nuclear arsenal. But, he indicated, still according to the same source, the fact that France is deciding to use the neutron bomb does not imply a change in its concept of deterrence.

"Nuclear deterrence," General Mery explained in particular, "remains primarily a dialogue with the enemy so as to avoid using the nuclear weapon." In General Mery's view, the neutron bomb used "in battle on the nuclear threshold" would soon become uncontrollable. "This idea of its use is thus different from that of the U.S. General Staff," he added.

On the tactical nuclear weapon, General Mery indicated that a super-Pluton--the missile to succeed the present Pluton--would be "needed from 1990 on."

"For some time," the chief of General Staff reasserted, "deterrence seemed to render any protection of the population useless. Perhaps this proposal must now be reversed to make public opinion approve of deterrence and even believe in the idea of self-defense."

General Mery commented on the idea of "self-defense" by explaining that there exist in the country "stores" which are "vital" for the French Army, and that installations like those of the French Electric Company, the French national railroads or bridges could be the target of sabotage or air attacks. Quoting the example of "the French railroad workers' resistance during the last world war," the armed forces chief of staff suggested that a system based on self-defense could call on draftees and trained and motivated reserve cadres.

Finally, according to the parliamentarians, General Mery explained that the strategic nuclear missiles buried underground in Haute-Provence could form "a valid system until the year 2000" if their armament were "hardened," but that the fixed missile systems "are doomed to greater vulnerability." The "hardening" of a nuclear weapon consists in making it resistant to anti-missile-missiles launched as a countermeasure by an enemy.

BERLINGUER DISCUSSES PRC, EUROCOMMUNISM AT PRESS CONFERENCE

LD301219 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 28 Apr 80 pp 1-2

[Giulietto Chiesa report on press conference given by PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer in Rome on 27 April: "Berlinguer on His Trip to China and Korea"]

[Text] Rome--"On our return to Italy we would first like to reiterate our satisfaction with the results of the meetings with our Chinese and Korean comrades. In Korea the broad convergence between the two parties' positions and initiatives on the main international problems and the problems facing the workers movement was confirmed and strengthened. This convergence is based on the two parties' conviction that the autonomy of each party and movement does not hinder the development of internationalist action in all directions." Comrade Enrico Berlinguer addressed these words to a large group of journalists, television people and photographers who had come to meet the Italian delegation at Fiumicino Airport. As everybody knows, the delegation was comprised of, in addition to Berlinguer, Gian Carlo Pajetta, Antonio Rubbi, Angelo Oliva and Silvana Dameri.

The PCI secretary general continued as follows: "The resumption of relations with the CCP is in itself highly significant and this significance has not merely been noted by us. In our view, the time and way in which this has come about emphasizes its significance for the whole international workers movement and for all forces of progress and peace in the world. The serious and detailed talks which we had with the Chinese leaders demonstrated that the differences of opinion, which were expressed frankly and even publicly, do not prevent the development of a useful dialogue, efforts to achieve mutual understanding and the search for agreement and cooperation. In our view this is particularly important at a time when the whole world is warning of the threats to peace. Various sides think they can solve the problems and disputes with acts of force, pressure, threats and absurd military adventures like the one attempted by the United States on Iranian territory in the past few days. However, the situation shows that nobody is so strong or can think it has such technological superiority to be able to disregard the will of all peoples and countries to be independent, to move toward progress and to be a protagonist in international life. Therefore we think it now more vital than ever to rely on politics, dialogue and negotiations to find solutions to the current tensions and conflicts, to avert the threats which could lead to disaster and to set up a system of cooperation and peaceful coexistence."

Comrade Berlinguer, who looked fresh despite his long flight, then faced numerous questions asked by journalists, including several correspondents from foreign newspapers and magazines.

[Question] After your talks in China, do you think that the PCI will take a more distant and critical attitude toward Moscow?

[Answer] The points of agreement and disagreement which we have with the CPSU are not determined by our contacts and relations with other communist parties. On the contrary, they are determined by our own autonomous judgement.

[Question] Following this visit, will the PCI help to bring about a rapprochement between China and the USSR?

[Answer] We have expressed this wish and continue to hope that this rapprochement might take place.

[Question] Could you give your views on the abortive U.S. "blitz" in Iran?

[Answer] This was an absurd military adventure which could have extremely serious consequences for world peace.

[Question] You said, in your talks with the Chinese leaders and elsewhere, that bloc politics are now outmoded. In the light of recent events, what role will China play? What line will the communist parties take?

[Answer] We think that it is vital to overcome the blocs. We believe that this can be done gradually, above all, by reducing international tension and developing cooperation. Today we place particular emphasis on the need to end or, in any case to reduce the extremely dangerous tension which has arisen between the two superpowers. However, the behavior of each communist party is determined autonomously. Our attitude has been explained extremely clearly both in international bodies and in Italy.

[Question] Is it true that you met with Ceausescu in Romania?

Berlinguer turned questioningly toward the journalist who asked the question and then said with a smile:

"Your question takes me by surprise...."

The journalist persisted and said that such a report had been published in Italy on Saturday (indeed, we too heard something of the kind--L'UNITA editor's note).

"We came via Guangzhou, Hong Kong, Bangkok, Bombay and Zurich," Berlinguer said. Gian Carlo Pajetta--who was sitting beside him in the airport lounge--asked jokingly whether anyone had a De Agostini atlas with them. Then the questions continued.

[Question] Do you foresee a deterioration in PCI-CPSU relations?

[Answer] No, not as far as we are concerned.

[Question] What about the Soviets?

[Answer] Why don't you ask our Soviet comrades?

[Question] Can you be more specific in your verdict on the American "blitz?" Yesterday (Saturday--L'UNITA editor's note) a Hong Kong agency reported a statement by you which caused some puzzlement....

[Answer] I was given the Hong Kong dispatch to which you refer a short time ago. My statement was different from what is reported here. I did not say that the "abortive operation to rescue the hostages constituted destabilization" but that "the U.S. military adventure carried a serious risk of destabilization in Southern Asia and could even entail much more serious risks of a general conflagration.

[Question] However, according to the dispatch, you also said that "Moscow is threatening world peace."

[Answer] No, that is not true. I was asked who represented the greatest threat to world peace; I replied: At the moment the greatest threat to world peace stems from a growing confrontation between the two superpowers. (At the end of the press conference Berlinguer told us that he was shocked to see that the whole text of the Hong Kong's agency's dispatch contained mistakes and distortions, some crucial, of his replies to journalists' questions in that city--L'UNITA editor's note)

[Question] In view of the recent developments in Iran, do you think it vital for Italy and the other European countries to review their decision on the deployment of the so-called Euromissiles?

[Answer] We are still convinced of the need to reopen dialogue on the question of the missiles in Europe on the basis of the proposals for negotiations on a balanced reduction of strategic arms and all weapons in Europe which we put forward when the missile question was raised.

[Question] What forms will the bilateral PCI-CCP contribution to problems of peace and detente take?

[Answer] Many points of agreement have already been emphasized in our talks with our Chinese comrades. For instance, the importance of the nonaligned movement and of maintaining its unity. On this point we agree to a wide extent. With regard to the development of rela ions between the two parties we have adopted a series of practical measures to increase cooperation and extend discussion. The main measure is the visit to Italy, at our invitation--accepted by our Chinese comrades--of a CCP delegation.

[Question] What relationship is there in China between the realization of communism and the development of freedom?

[Answer] In such a short time it is difficult to find out about all aspects of Chinese life. Of course we raised this line of questioning, as we always have done in discussions with our Soviet comrades, and with comrades from other communist parties from the socialist countries.

[Question] What answer were you given?

[Answer] Many answers, which it would not be appropriate for me to list individually here, since some of this information is private and confidential. However, we raised the question of the trial of the four main leaders of the Cultural Revolution in addition to other more general questions on freedom. What can be said, of course--but this applies to China as well as to other socialist countries--is that with respect to the question of the relationship between freedom, democracy and socialism we cannot find a "model" in any existing socialist country which could inspire our view, which has been illustrated and explained on many occasions and is known as Eurocommunism.

[Question] Your differences of opinion with the CCP also relate to your views on the USSR. In what way?

[Answer] These differences relate above all to the question known as the question of the "grand alliance": This is the point on which we differ most. We told our Chinese comrades--and we said this publicly at a press conference in China--that we do not agree, and therefore they cannot count on our support for the policy of a "grand alliance" between China, the United States, Japan, Western Europe and other forces directed against the Soviet Union. I repeat that this is the point on which we disagree most strongly with our Chinese comrades. However, on many other questions such as the defense of each people's independence and national sovereignty, we have areas of agreement with the CCP. The same is true of active work to defend peace.

[Answer] We heard the first fragmentary reports when we were in Guangzhou. Therefore we were unable to exchange views with the Chinese leaders on this point.

[Question] The Romanian Communist Party has also announced that it will not take part in the Paris communist parties' meeting. What can you say about the prospects for Eurocommunism at this time?

[Answer] With regard to the Paris conference we have already explained the reasons for our disagreement, for our advice to the organizing parties not to convene this meeting and for our decision not to take part in any case. At this point we will assess the results of the meeting when they are reported. As regards the prospects for Eurocommunism, I think they are good, if of course you see Eurocommunism--as we have always done--not as giving the communist parties an exclusive role in overcoming capitalism and moving toward socialism in Europe but as the search for the broadest possible agreement with all forces which have roots in the workers and people's movement in general.

[Question] Even social democratic forces?

[Anwer] It has been only a few weeks since we had contacts with some leaders from major European socialist and social democratic parties.

[Question] Senator Fanfani has described the international situation in extremely dramatic terms. He spoke of the danger of war. Do you share this view?

[Answer] We also think that the international situation is dramatic, and we think that there may be a dnager of war. However, I do not think that our opinions about how to prevent it coincide with those of Senator Fanfani.

[Question] Do you think that your relations with the CCP can be stable and lasting?

[Answer] I think so. It is in that spirit that our two parties have resumed relations. It is in that spirit that we have taken decisions which will expand these relations. In addition, it seems to me that we agree with our Chinese comrades on the method which should be followed in relations between our two parties. In our view this method is also valid outside relations between Italian and Chinese communists: It is the method of equal status, respect for autonomy, the frank expression of opinions even when they differ and, at the same time, the search for friendship, understanding and agreement.

The PCI delegation was welcomed at the airport by Comrades Bufalini, Barca, Birardi, Tato and Giadresco. Chinese Ambassador Zhang Yue and DPRK permanent representative to the food and agriculture organization (Hwang Heun) were also present.

PAPER ASSESSES CONSEQUENCES OF RESCUE FAILURE

[Editorial: "Unlike Entebbe"]

[Text] It would undoubtedly be incorrect to compare the failure of the military operation launched by the Americans to attempt to free the hostages imprisoned in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran with the failure of the anti-Castro landing in Cuba during John Kennedy's presidency in the early sixties.

U.S. world leadership was not experiencing a crisis such as the present crisis, nor was the Bay of Pigs "operation" based on the humanitarian right to attempt a rescue. Any discussion of the problem on the legal level, in light of the rules of international law, will be invalidated at the outset, because violation of the most elementary rules of coexistence among nations in fact caused the abortive U.S. punitive expedition.

"We can only regret the failure, not the attempt. If it had succeeded at a tolerable cost, it would have been an honorable venture," the New York TIMES comments. But the point is that it failed. And even if the contrary hypothesis (of a spectacular success like that which the Israelis achieved at Entebbe) can be accepted purely academically, the problem of the risks incurred in a mission which was so complex from the military viewpoint will have to be tackled. It is on this level that the initial official reaction of the EEC governments and of the European press, in which the words "dissatisfaction and concern" loom large, should be viewed.

In the meantime, the way in which the Carter administration has faced public opinion, accepting all the consequences of the failure of this commando action and giving it greater domestic and international significance instead of seeking to play it down, deserves analysis. Has Washington sought to turn a military defeat into a relative political victory, as some international observers suggest?

It is still too early to attempt to assess the full extent of the political consequences of this airborne raid, specifically at the level of relations among the United States, Iran and the Soviet Union. The threat of war that loomed will not fail to have repercussions on international relations. Anwar as-Sadat, the most loyal U.S. ally in the Middle East, echoed this threat in stating that this abortive attempt should not discourage Carter from "further actions," but even London's prestigious THE TIMES believes, on the contrary, that the United States will emerge weakened in the balance of power with the USSR.

European opinion has not spared the Carter administration criticism over this military failure. Some observers believe that the United States will emerge weakened, if not derided, from this move. While the governments of the EEC countries will seek to demonstrate with this failure the advantage of their policy of caution with respect to retaliation against Iran, the Americans will tend to justify their recourse to force by the half-heartedness of their allies and their refusal to adopt a joint stance with the White House.

In the meantime, there is no justification for any optimistic or moderate forecasts about the evolution of the international situation. "This is graver than Sarajevo; another war is to be feared," Christian Democrat Fanfani commented. This fear is gaining ground increasingly in our everyday life. The kidnaping of the diplomatic personnel in Tehran, the invasion of Afghanistan and the failure of this "military operation" form part of the same circle of terror and violence. [paragraph continues]

To invoke international law in this situation--unless to influence public opinion--would be a stance of the same nature as the advice given by Ronald Reagan to his fellow countrymen: "The best reaction is to pray." Has the time of fear and sleeplessness come again for the United States and the world?

TRADE UNIONISTS PARTICIPATE IN MAY DAY DEMONSTRATION

LD012200 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2000 GMT 1 May 80

[Text] In a May Day demonstration called by the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers-National Intersindical thousands of workers marched through the streets of Lisbon shouting slogans against the Sa Carneiro government and its policies.

Jeronimo de Sousa, representing the workers from the Lisbon industrial belt, read out a declaration recalling the first free May Day celebrations held 6 years ago and calling for the friendship and solidarity of all workers in the world. The declaration also said that, quote: The present government attacks democratic legality, the Constitution, the agrarian reform and the nationalizations and curbs trade union rights and freedoms.

The General Workers Federation [UGT] for its part promoted a rally in Lisbon today, at which a leader of the Italian Communist Trade Union Federation, invited to the UGT celebrations, alerted the participants to the dangers of a new world war, and stressed the need to establish a new international economic order. The Italian trade unionists defended the May Day celebrations as a day of struggle by all workers in the world against inflation, unemployment and the multinationals.

UGT Secretary General Torres Couto greeted the struggle waged by those workers and trade unionists who in the prisons of Chile, Argentina, Guatemala, South Africa, Czechoslovakia and the USSR could not celebrate May Day in freedom.

A special greeting was also sent to Brazilian trade unionist Luis Inacio, also known as Lula, detained for his "crime" of leading the Brazilian metalworkers' just struggle.

MUSKIE'S APPOINTMENT 'EASES TENSION,' STATES RADIO COMMENTARY

LD301416 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Text] The appointment of Edmund Muskie as U.S. secretary of state to some extent eases international tension. He is a man of prestige, a personal friend of President Carter and one of the Democratic senators with the most influence. He is a man [words indistinct] who in 1972 was thought to be favorite from among the democratic candidates for the U.S. presidency. Muskie is also a personal friend of Edward Kennedy, which did not count for anything when it came to supporting Carter in the new race for the White House.

To speak now of hawks and doves could be an oversimplification. In any case, it could be said that Muskie is a negotiator who is in favor of exhausting political and diplomatic means, although this does not mean he could be described as soft. But his appointment when many people thought that the President's advisor, Brzezinski, would get into the White House [as heard], is a relief for all those who feared a greater radicalization which the U.S. people may have been willing to accept with enthusiasm at a time when national sensibilities are affected by the failure of the operation to rescue the hostages, an operation which, according to an opinion poll, would again be accepted by U.S. public opinion.

It is quite clear that the situation is still dangerous. But it is possible that the appointment of Muskie and the attitude of the U.S. press may produce a shift toward more moderate and prudent actions. All this will depend on what happens abroad and on avoiding incidents which would push the Americans too far and would perhaps force Carter to take a harder line in his attitude toward Iran. For the moment, although the situation has not improved much, one can see possible signs of an easing of tension and new efforts to prevent a confrontation, the consequences of which nobody dares predict.

DIPLOMATIC TIES ESTABLISHED WITH ZIMBABWE 21 APR

[Unattributed report: "Spain and Zimbabwe Establish Diplomatic Relations"]

[Text] Spain and the Republic of Zimbabwe established diplomatic relations yesterday following the conclusion of the democratic process which brought the former Republic of Rhodesia to independence. Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Carlos Robles Piauer who represented the Spanish Government at the official ceremony to proclaim the former British colony's independence, yesterday approved the beginning of diplomatic relations with Zimbabwe following a meeting with that country's Deputy Foreign Minister Simon Zmenda.

Yesterday afternoon the Diplomatic Information Bureau issued an official note confirming the establishment of diplomatic ties between the states, "on the basis of the principles of mutual respect for national sovereignty, territorial integrity, noninterference in internal affairs, equal rights, the strengthening of peace and international cooperation and promoting the principles of international law in interstate relations."

Mr Robles Piquer will now continue his tour of several African countries including Kenya, Tanzania and Sudan.

FELIPE GONZALEZ SCORES COMMUNIST 'DOUBLEDEALING'

LD020841 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 26 Apr 80 pp 3-4

[Unattributed report: "Felipe Gonzalez in Barcelona Denounces Communists' Doubledealing in Municipal Councils"]

[Excerpts] Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez denounced yesterday afternoon in Barcelona the Communists' doubledealing with respect to his party's municipal pacts with the Communists. "When somebody is supporting us in the municipal councils," he said, "what they should not do is--as they are doing--to attack us on the streets. And we are going to clarify this, and very quickly."

Felipe Gonzalez's statement came during his speech at the headquarters of the General Workers Union of Catalonia, at a meeting organized within the context of the third May Day trade union week, according to the EFE news agency.

Earlier, when talking about SEAT [car manufacturing enterprise], he made a veiled allusion to the Communists in stating that "there are those who say that FIAT should not invest in Spain, but they do not say that it should not invest in the Soviet Union. And if those investments are good for the Soviet Union, why should they not be good for Spain?"

"We Will Not Leave Parliament"

"Carrillo," he continued, "has said on several occasions that with 100 deputies he would do many things. But I would like to tell Mr Carrillo that exactly 176 deputies are needed in order to govern, and the rest is talking just for talking's sake."

At another point he said that "I am sometimes asked why we Socialists do not leave parliament and I have said that if 10 or 12 deputies leave parliament, nothing happens; but if we left it, with over 100 deputies, we would provoke a state crisis."

"This Government Is Not Governing the Country"

"The problem," he added, "is not one of appointing somebody or other as deputy premier for the autonomies but one of having a specific blueprint for the autonomies. And the government has none, just as it has no political, economic and international blueprint nor a blueprint for the society which it wishes to build."

He stated at another point that "this government is not governing the country. The situation is dangerous because the government has no blueprint for the future and has no political will for democratic change."

"There are no steady government guidelines," he continued, "and all that the party in power is doing is to come to parliament and contrive each law with one minority party or another in a constant contrivance. If there were a specific political blueprint," he said, "we would not be witnessing this haggling over laws--laws which, moreover, are very important for building the state."

There Should Be Parliamentary Debate

After saying "I still have my doubts whether there will be a parliamentary debate 13 May," he stated that "I have received invitations to hold meetings like those in the past, but I have rejected them because today everything that must be said should be said before parliament and before the people."

On the same topic he said that "it is absurd to describe a parliamentary debate as a trap because the head of government of a democratic country should justify his plans before his opponents in parliament, and the reverse is authoritarianism and an antidemocratic stance."

PSOE's Warning to Communists

The PSOE Press Office yesterday evening issued to our editorial office the following note in connection withthe statements made by Felipe Gonzalez in Barcelona:

"In connection with the reports which have been published concerning Felipe Gonzalez' statements in Barcelona today, the PSOE Press Office states that these statements do not imply any change in the party's stance which has been expressed on previous occasions by Felipe Gonzalez himself and by other leaders of it. That is: the denunciation of conduct on the part of the Communist Party involving the combining of an apparently unitary policy in the municipal councils with an aggressive sectarian stance toward the Socialists in other spheres--principally in the trade union field--a stance which, if it continues, could oblige the PSOE in due course to undertake a comprehensive reappraisal of its relations with the PCE.

"It is therefore untrue that Felipe Gonzalez announced an imminent breaking of the municipal pacts by the PSOE, but it is true that he reiterated the demand that the doubledealing which has been practiced for some time be stopped."

PCE DEMANDS TELEVISED CORTES DEBATE ON GOVERNMENT CRISIS

LD010857 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 22 Apr 80 pp 1, 32

[Apparent text of PCE Standing Committee 21 April communique: "For a Real Change of Policy"]

[Text] The PCE Standing Committee examined the topic of the government crisis at its meeting yesterday.

Although this crisis is being discussed as if it were a mere reshuffle, the public is aware that the problem is more deep-rooted and that we face the need for a real change of government and policy, in view of the clear rejection of the rightwing approach followed hitherto which emerged from the Andalusia referendum and the Catalan and Basque elections.

The prevalent impression of the man in the street is that, while there is a growing deterioration in the country's political and economic situation and while economists are talking about an emergency situation--and even a situation of war--and are urging clear action from the government, Prime Minister Suarez is trying to resolve the crisis with schemes and secret plans entirely unknown to the public, just as these problems were tackled under the previous regime. At the same time it seems as if other political forces are refusing to shoulder their responsibilities in taking the decisions which this country needs.

As things stand, it would be logical for the consultations which, according to the press Prime Minister Suarez is conducting, not to be restricted solely to the "barons" of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] but to be extended to all the parliamentary parties, precisely because we are faced with a crisis which was not announced officially either to parliament or to the head of state--which would have enabled the latter to conduct personally the consultations necessitated by an unannounced crisis--and because the least that respect for the parliamentary institutions would have required is that the political parties be asked their opinions.

Since this has not happened it is becoming clear that the government crisis is combined with a series of internal crises within the UCD and that the primary intention is to resolve this internal crisis ignoring the widespread demand for a real change in the policy which the government has been pursuing hitherto and which is embodied to a large extend in the activity of Deputy Premier Fernando Abril Martorell.

The PCE Standing Commit ee declares that any solution which does not imply a real change of policy, particularly in view of the problems connected with the autonomies and the economic crisis, would divorce the government even further from the nation's real situation and would be damaging to the democratic process.

Be that as it may, the PCE stresses the need for there to be no further delay in holding a political debate in the congress of deputies involving the prime minister, broadcast on television to the nation, with the purpose of clarifying the situation and everybody's stances.

The Standing Committee has had an exchange of impressions on holding joint events on 1 May and has agreed to instruct all party organizations to promote the broadest attendance at the rallies with the aim of turning them into a serious step toward achieving unity of action among the workers, which is essential to the defense of their interests and a guarantee of democratic advance.

NORWAY

PAPER EXAMINES UNRESOLVED PROBLEMS IN NORTHERN REGIONS

LD010803 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 22 Apr 80 P 45

[Morten Fyhn article: "Unsolved Problems in the North"]

[Text] The northern regions are reckoned to be the most important question in the so-called close environment of Norwegian foreign policy. The many unsolved complicated problems in this field have a direct bearing on Norwegian interests and at the same time could easily draw us into conflict with our superpower neighbor, the Soviet Union. Some central points:

The situation on Svalbard. Norway has sovereignty, but the Svavbard Treaty gives over 40 other countries the right to engage in activity there.

Fishing off Svalbard and the right to the Svalbard continental shelf.

Relations with the Soviet Union in the Barents Sea with regard to sharing the fishing zone and the continental shelf.

The region's great strategic importance.

Jan Mayen and the attitude toward other countries' fishing interests within a planned Norwegian zone of 200 nautical miles, plus the right to carry out possible future activities on the seabed.

Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund has on several occasions stressed the importance and the seriousness of the situation which Norway faces in the northern areas, principally because of the growing economic activity in the north. In the government's view this activity is due to several interacting factors: technological progress which makes activity possible in areas which in the past have almost been inaccessible; and developments in international maritime law, including the introduction of economic zones which raise the question of the distribution of important resources in a time when such resources are so important on the international political scene.

The resources referred to here are the living ones, in practice fish, and those on the seabed, that is, gas, oil and minerals. Questions to do with the conservation, exploitation and distribution of economic resources are the object of conflict between states.

Important effects of the increased interest in the northern regions are first and foremost strategic and economic in character. Not least among these due to developments in military technology, the airspace over the areas in the north has assumed increased strategic importance. Guided missiles carried by submarines now play a more important role in the so-called global strategic balance. Both the superpowers therefore have important security interests in this area and both of them closely follow what the other or its allies is doing. For the Soviet Union the enormous military base on the Kola Peninsula is of vital importance. Just outside Norway's livingroom door the superpowerful Soviet Union has considerable military forces and equipment located with access to the ice-free ports.

If we look any of the problems mentioned above, Svalbard is of central importance. Today, as is well known, it is only Norway and the Soviet Union that carry out economic activity in the island group, but it is Norwegian laws and regulations which are in force. Under the treaty Norway is obliged to control what happens there. Since Norway has for many years shown precious little interest in practising her sovereignty, the Russians are developing their own community there without any Norwegian control. When Norway tries to pursue an active policy on Svalbard it is often difficult to get the Russians to accept the fact that Norway makes the rules. A problem between Norway and the Soviet Union is that the Russians want to see some sort of joint rule established there.

As a coastal nation Norway has an obligation to take steps to ensure that fish stocks are not depleted through overfishing. For this reason Norway set up a fishing zone around Svalbard. But many countries do not recognize Norway's right to do this, among them the Soviet Union. As far as the continental shelf around Svalbard is concerned, Norway claims that it belongs to Norway and thus that it is not subject to the stipulations of the Svalbard treaty on the subject of equal access for all to carry out economic activity.

Both the fishery protection zone and the continental shelf are among the most important problems in the north and are continually being discussed with other nations.

But perhaps the biggest problem is the Barents Sea. In the course of 1977 both Norway and the Soviet Union set up economic zones extending 200 miles from their coasts. The problem in the Barents Sea is that the two zones overlap. So agreement on a border must be reached. Norway has always based her attempts to reach agreement on the basis of a so-called middle line solution, while the Russians want the border to be drawn on a so-called sector line. The Norwegian principle means a border much farther east than the Russian principle. The difference amounts to an area of 155,000 square km.

The problem here is that it is not only a question of valuable fishing fields, there is also a suspicion that there may be oil under the seabed. And in not so many years' time it is possible that both countries will try to drill for oil there. Because of the disagreement over the principle for the drawing of a border, the two countries reached an interim agreement on fishing alone. This is the so-called gray zone agreement.

Another northern problem is Jan Mayen Island. The island is more than 1,000 km from Norway, whereas its distance from Iceland is less than half that. The conflict here is first and foremost about the right to fish around the island. Iceland set up a 200-mile zone a long time ago, while Norway now has plans for a similar zone around Jan Mayen. The conflict has concentrated on the fact that Iceland holds the view that it is entitled to special rights within a Norwegian zone because of its great dependence on fishing as a national source of income. In addition Iceland is asking for significant rights on the seabed. It could turn out that there is oil there.

PRESS COMMENTS ON VANCE RESIGNATION

LD301246 Stockholm International Service in English 1100 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Text] American Secretary of State Cyrus Vance has resigned, in a protest against President Carter's attempt to free the hostages in Iran. Although he has since been replaced by Senator Edmund Muskie, the first reactions of the Swedish press were to express uneasiness that the president's more militant advisers seemed to have won a victory. (George Varko) has been reading the editorials:

The independent conservative paper SVENSKA DAGBLADET notes that according to information from within the White House the Secretary of State was the only member of the American National Security Council who opposed the raid on Tehran, and this newspaper goes on to say: In the circles surrounding President Carter, Vance--with his cool commonsense and caution--has been a counterweight to the head of the National Security Council, Zbigniew Brzezinski, who takes a much more militant position. The oft-mentioned changes in Carter's foreign policy can be explained mainly by the President having listened to first one then the other adviser. There are several indications that Brzezinski gained the upper hand as time went by, and the attempt to free the hostages in Iran was probably the last straw as far as Vance was concerned.

The liberal paper UPPSALA NYA TIDNING says that the struggle between Vance and Brzezinski was probably one of the reasons for the confusion in American policy in Iran both before and after the shah's fall and this Swedish paper continues: The Iranian crisis is nevertheless not the only reason for Vance's resignation, even if he has chosen this moment to resign, after being the only presidential adviser to counsel against the attempt to free the hostages in Tehran. If we want to find the moment when the scales were definitely tipped in Brzezinski's favor, it is more likely that it occurred during the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan at the end of last year. Jimmy Carter has said that his opinion of the Russians changed more during the week before the invasion than during the previous 2 and 1/2 years. For Cyrus Vance and his diplomatic methods after Afghanistan there was less room for maneuvering.

The independent paper DAGENS NYHETER writes that Cyrus Vance represents a school of foreign policy that cautions against hasty conclusions and moods, and this Swedish paper goes on to say: Lawyer that he is, Vance chose to test every problem that came along according to its own premises. As far as the Third World was concerned, he and former UN [Ambassador] Andrew Young were essentially in agreement. The President's National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski has taken the opposite position, using half thought-out flamboyant theories to apply a global perspective to every issue. Through his many years of experience as a public servant, Vance could easily speak with both America's friends and opponents. Brzezinski invites mixed emotions. A crisis among his advisers will make President Carter even more vulnerable at a time when he cannot afford any more problems. Now that Vance is out, the struggle to steer the President seems to have been won by Brzezinski. This is very troubling.

NEGOTIATIONS RESUME WITH GUERRILLAS IN IRANIAN EMBASSY

WA021214 London REUTER in English 1128 GMT 2 May 80

[Text] London, May 2, REUTER--Police today started talking again to the three gunmen holding more than 20 hostages in the besieged Iranian Embassy in London. As the hostages, mainly Iranian officials and diplomats, began their third day in captivity, police refused to say whether their captors had set any new deadlines for their demands to be met. Soon after eight o'clock, after a five-hour pause in negotiations for rest, two plainclothes policemen went to the front door of the elegant embassy building and spoke through the door. A head appeared at a first-floor window and there was some talk.

It had been a calm night at the embassy. Police said they did not know whether any of the three gunmen had slept. There was no sign this morning of food being taken into the hostages, whose last meal was a hamburger snack last night. A young Iranian woman among the hundreds of supporters of Ayatollah Khomeyni outside the embassy was taken to a hospital by ambulance. She had been demonstrating for 36 hours and was simply overtired, a protest organizer said. During the night police established their first contact with Constable Trevor Lock, 41, a member of Scotland Yard's diplomatic protection group who was snatched from his post on the embassy doorstep by the raiders when they struck on Wednesday morning. Constable Lock was one of four non-Iranians known to be amongst the hostages. The others were British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) sound recordist Sam [name as received] Harris, who was applying for a visa to Iran when the gunmen arrived, embassy handyman Ronald Morris, and Lebanese journalist Mutapha Karkouti, who works for the Beirut daily ASASAFIR. Police said they had spoken to Constable Lock through an open window.

Outside the embassy, a hard core of demonstrators chanting their support for the Iranian revolutionary regime today told reporters they had been on a hunger strike for 24 hours. Police surrounding them had been refusing to allow food supplies in an attempt to thin their ranks and calm passions amongst them and opposing demonstrators.

As negotiations resumed, police told reporters that the gunmen had asked to speak to someone in London whom they knew. BBC Television news editor Tony Crabb was taken to the door of the building, but police would not say whether he was the man the gunmen had asked for. A police spokesman said the gunmen had made no new demands or threats. He said the mood inside the embassy was "very calm." Persian meals were sent in for the hostages and their captors, the first hot food they had had since last night.

The police spokesman, Commander Peter Neivens, said no new deadline had been set by the guerrillas and the hostages were in good health. On the police contacts with the gunmen, he reported: "We have had a good conversation." He also threw some light on why Mr Crabb, the BBC Television news editor, had been summoned to the embassy. The gunmen had asked police to bring to the embassy someone whom BBC hostage Sam Harris could "vouch for as genuine."

CARRINGTON INTERVIEWED ON EEC PROBLEMS, MIDDLE EAST

LD011337 Paris LE MATIN in French 25 Apr 80 p 9

[Part I of Jean-Louis Arnaud interview with British Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs Carrington: "It Is Not a Franco-British Quarrel"--date, place not given]

[Text] LE MATIN: After the positions adopted this week what are the prospects for the Luxembourg summit?

Lord Carrington: I really do not know. I deeply regret this Franco-British quarrel, which seems to be growing worse although what is at stake is something entirely different. We are facing a Community problem which all the Community members must solve. Since the Strasbourg summit (in June 1979) people have become aware that a problem exists, that there is no question of Britain trying to renegotiate terms or show discontent about the conditions in which we joined the Community, but that there is a problem related to our net contribution and the effects it has on our economic recovery.

LE MATIN: You certainly seem to want to change at least some of the rules of the European club.

Lord Carrington: No, I do not want to change any rule. We do not want to change the rules governing resources or anything of the kind. What we do not want is to be in our present situation facing a contribution of Fr10 billion this year. In my view the trouble is that the Community does not take account of the relative wealth of its contributors, particularly when one of them is weighed down by a really unfair burden.

LE MATIN: This remark seems to indicate that some of the rules are not appropriate.

Lord Carrington: Certainly not. What is being questioned are the provisions made in 1970 when we joined and which have not proved correct. On the one hand there is the fact that we entered the Community late and had to make adjustments in our foreign trade. It should be noted that our trade with the Common Market is a constantly growing share of our foreign trade while yours is diminishing. However, on the other hand--and this is infinitely more important--there is the fact that we receive nothing in return from the Community because of the Common Agricultural Policy. We started from the hypothesis that the share of the budget devoted to the Common Agricultural Policy would be reduced between 1970 and 1975. At that time it was 70 percent. Instead of decreasing it has increased and is now around 75 percent. That is why our receipts are so small. What we are asking is for this matter to be considered and for the necessary adjustments to be made so that we can carry on.

LE MATIN: In the longer term what do you think of the future of the European institutions, the role of the Treaty of Rome and the role of usual practice in the development of Community practices?

Lord Carrington: The treaty is clearly sacrosanct in that it is to it that we owe the Community's existence and this is very important. However, since then things have happened which are not in the treaty, for instance, the European Council which, I think, is a very good institution provided, of course, we only take decisions three times a year at the summit meetings. Fundamentally, however, the Council is a very good idea.

We British are no theologians. We are essentially pragmatists and if something works well we do not worry too much about whether it does or does not correspond to written documents. I think the treaty must be balanced with some pragmatism, as is the case with the European Council. Therefore I hope we would allow the Community to grow in a pragmatic way. Also in my capacity as a nontheologian, I believe it would be a big mistake to think that the Community could be asked to develop in a particular direction on an order taken from the rules or from law. I think it should develop according to the will of its members. We may find that progress is a little slow. We may feel very frustrated and mark time, as I think we are doing now. However, I am convinced that the best way of making progress is to evolve rather than to sit down, study concepts and translate those concepts into words saying that that is the path we are going to follow.

LE MATIN: Just suppose, Lord Carrington, that Britain gets what it wants with regard to contributions. Would you be prepared to help your European partners if there were an international oil crisis and give them priority?

Lord Carrington: Your question seems to imply that we have not got what we want because we have been unhelpful. That is not true. We have been very good Community members since the Conservative government came into power. I think it would be a mistake to regard North Sea oil as a cure-all capable of solving all the Community's energy problems. This oil will enable us to meet our needs, perhaps a little more than that. Of course we must help our partners with regard to North Sea oil as much as we can but our ability must not be exaggerated even if we could do a little more. I believe what we need is a real energy policy. What you have done in France in the nuclear sphere is both courageous and remarkable. The other countries have not followed your lead--we have not done so because of North Sea oil--but we are much too dependent on oil and we should study in detail the possibility of having a Community energy policy which would enable us to reduce imports. I think this is possible.

Comments on Iran, Afghanistan

LD011401 Paris LE MATIN in French 26-27 Apr 80 p 9

[Part II of Jean-Louis Arnaud interview with British Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs Carrington: "The Hostages Affair Restricts European Diplomacy in Iran"--date, place not given]

[Text] LE MATIN: Are the measures which the Nine took against Iran this week addressed to Tehran or Washington?

Lord Carrington: To both. After all, we all voted for these sanctions in the Security Council in January before the Russians vetoed them. On the one hand the Americans feel that the time has come to implement them and that they are likely to make the Iranians stop and think. On the other hand the Americans feel not only outraged but to some extent isolated, and they want their friends to help them.

LE MATIN: Few people think that these sanctions, taken in the name of solidarity, could attain their objective.

Lord Carrington: Some believe they can. Others do not. Only time will tell. However, I think that the Americans have a very powerful argument when they say to us: "All right, you do not think it will work but what would you do in our place?" And if you advise them to be patient the reply: "Good God, we have been patient for 6 months! What are we supposed to do?" The Americans are in a very difficult situation and they believe it is essential to do something to show the Iranian Government that the situation is serious.

LE MATIN: But do you think we are really helping them, that we are helping ourselves and that we are helping the Iranian Government which we are forced to support against its political adversaries?

Lord Carrington: If you carefully weigh all the arguments for this type of action and all the arguments against, I think the arguments for win.

LE MATIN: What is your view of the situation in Iran?

Lord Carrington: It is difficult because it seems that the elected government would be happy to release the hostages but that the ayatollah is the only man who could really succeed in doing so. Then there are other aspects of the problem: The internal situation and, of course, recent events in the universities between leftwing students and orthodox Muslims. There is reason to doubt the country's internal stability. Nobody really knows what will happen.

LE MATIN: What sort of relations can we have with a government like the Tehran government at present?

Lord Carrington: All the measures we are discussing with regard to the West's attitude toward Iran are merely aimed at obtaining the hostages' release. They are not directed against the Iranian Government as such and if the hostages' position were settled nothing could prevent good and perfectly normal relations with President Bani-Sadr's government.

LE MATIN: The hostages' affair is only one aspect of the Iranian crisis. What are the Europeans doing as regards the other aspect which is perhaps more important?

Lord Carrington: I do not think we can do anything at all as long as the hostages affair continues. I believe it would ge very difficult without even being effective. It seems to me that by ignoring the insult we would merely be encouraging other people to do the same thing.

LE MATIN: Does that not give the Russsians an advantage since they can ignore the hostages affair and concern themselves with the rest?

LORD CARRINGTON: My goodness, I do not see how the orthodox Muslims could have much in common with the Soviet Union. There may be something to be gained, some trade opportunity. That is all. Ideologically speaking it is not very likely that the orthodox Muslims will form an alliance with the USSR. On the other hand if there is a leftwing revolt in one way or another, that would of course alter the situation.

LE MATIN: Would the Soviets not put up with a rightwing government if only for tactical reasons?

Lord Carrington: I cannot imagine that they could find events in Iran very reassuring, at least as regards their own Muslim populations.

LE MATIN: How do you view the Iranian crisis in relation to the Afghanistan question?

Lord Carrington: They are separate problems while being related. It is the hostages affair which separates them.

LE MATIN: Should we not avoid separating them?

Lord Carrington: No, I do not think we could avoid it as long as the hostages are there. Without them things would be completely different.

LE MATIN: What progress has been made on the question of neutral status for Afghanistan?

Lord Carrington: This proposal for neutrality and nonalignment is favored by a number of Third World countries. It is very important. It is not only sensible but could prove attractive. Sensible because it removes the reasons which the USSR gave for occupying Afghanistan (notably that of foreign intervention which is unacceptable) because it reassures other countries like India, Pakistan, Iran and the Gulf; finally because, to a large extent, it guarantees the security of the Gulf by moving the Soviets further away from the Straits of Hormuz. I do not think that the Russians are prepared to accept the idea at the moment, although they have not taken a very negative or positive attitude. However, nobody has proposed anything better and this type of idea keeps up pressure on the USSR because the Third World thinks it is a good idea.

LE MATIN: However, the Americans seem to think that Afghanistan is lost for good and that the only thing we can do is to punish the Russians.

Lord Carrington: No, the Americans think that the situation is not irreversible and we are being encouraged in our proposal. Of course they have their doubts as to the best way of achieving this goal and we have ours.

LE MATIN: Disagreements have arisen within the Atlantic Alliance recently. Do you think they are serious or easy to overcome?

Lord Carrington: I do not think Bonn, Paris, London and Washington interpret the Soviets' action differently. Opinions differ on the way in which we should react and on the consequences. These differences can be explained by the individual circumstances in each European country. The Germans have their Ostpolitik and extensive trade with the Soviet Union. The French have an independent policy and relations with the USSR which the others do not have. We have virtually no trade with the USSR and no particularly significant relations. That explains the different reactions to the American requests.

COMMONS SUPPORTS THATCHER STAND ON EEC BUDGET

LD301101 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 30 Apr 80 pp 1, 36

[James Wightman report: "Freeze on EEC by Thatcher"]

[Excerpt] The prime minister yesterday increased pressure on the other EEC nations over Britain's budget campaign by imposing a virtual veto on final negotiations on other issues until they improve their latest offer. Undismayed by the disarray her decision to reject the offer had caused in the Market, Mrs Thatcher told the Commons yesterday that there would be no further agreement on "other major matters in the Community unless and until our own particular problem is settled." That means that, in particular, Britain will not agree to settle France's case for increased farm prices until the budget issue is resolved. Other subjects on which Britain will withhold agreement are fisheries and energy.

Mrs Thatcher was given almost total support from all sides of the Commons yesterday as she reported on the two-day EEC summit in Luxembourg and gave her reasons for rejecting the offer of a cut of 800 million pounds sterling in Britain's net payment of 1,100 million pounds sterling in 1980. The prime minister told MPs: "A number of proposals were made including one which would have reduced our net contribution to 325 million but for 1980 only. We were not able to agree on later years. In spite of intensive efforts to reach a satisfactory compromise, it proved impossible in the time at our disposal to find an acceptable combination of both amount and duration."

The scale of the offer Mrs Thatcher rejected in Luxembourg was instantly evident to MPs who remembered how she had rejected an earlier offer of a cut of 350 million pounds sterling--"merely a third of a loaf," she called it--at the last EEC summit in Dublin at the end of last year. But there was widespread agreement for her latest decision, especially as it had involved rejecting the French call for 5 percent increases in farm prices.

The prime minister is now gambling that pressure on the French Government from their own farmers will make President Giscard more willing to meet Britain's case on the budget. Mrs Thatcher is aware that her stand may cause further trouble in the EEC, but she believes that the reluctance to meet the farm prices demand is "a major card" which will yet bring success for Britain. West Germany, less obdurate than the French but still troublesome to Britain, will face similar pressure from its farmers.

The decision about other issues is likely to mean a holdup in agreement on farm prices for some six weeks, at least until the next planned EEC summit in Venice in June. It is also likely to mean a freeze in the EEC's 11,000,000 million pounds sterling budget. Ministers are expected to continue to attend EEC negotiating meetings but not to take final decision until the budget row is settled.

The next direct move on the budget will be a tour of European capitals by Signor Cossiga, the Italian president on the EEC, in search of greater support for Britain's case.

Mrs Thatcher, looking pale, expressed confidence in the Commons that there would be a satisfactory solution to the problems of Britain's contributions. She told MPs: "We got nearer it this time than ever before, a lot nearer at Dublin and a lot nearer this time, and I believe that ultimately we will be able to get a favourable outcome."

She also said that there had been "broad agreement" on the methods by which the Community would both reduce Britain's contribution and increase the benefits to this country from market expenditure. "We are able to make considerable progress on amounts but less on the duration of the arrangements," she added.

Before the Luxembourg summit, Mrs Thatcher had said repeatedly that she would not do "a trade off" and that the budget and other issues must be treated separately and on their own merits.

But, referring to discussions on agriculture, fisheries and energy, she told MPs: "Since our partners have brought these several issues together. I believe it is understood that they cannot be dealt with unless, at the same time, the budget problem is solved."

FOREIGN MINISTRY SUMMONS LIBYAN MISSION OFFICIALS

LD301450 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1336 GMT 30 Apr 80

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Officials from the Libyan mission in London have been warned of Britain's concern about the series of assassinations of Libyan exiles in this country, the Foreign Office said today. The officials were summoned to the Foreign Office following the second murder within a fortnight of Libyan emigrees who are known to oppose the regime of Colonel al-Qadhdhafi. Another opponent has also been killed in Rome against the background of Al-Qadhdhafi's threats to "physically eliminate" his political opponents both at home and abroad.

FORMER KGB OFFICIAL, FAMILY ALLOWED TO STAY

LD021252 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1223 GMT 2 May 80

[By Andrew Webb, PA political staff]

[Text] A former Russian intelligence agent has been given permission by the government to stay in Britain, official sources confirmed today.

Mr Ilya Grigorievich Dzhirkvelov, 53, is a former correspondent for TASS, the Soviet news agency, and has in the past been a member of the Russian intelligence service, the KGB. Sources said Mr Dzhirkvelov had been working as a press officer on the staff of the World Health Organisation in Geneva since 1977. He came to Britain from Moscow about one month ago with his wife and daughter. He then applied for permission to stay.

Home secretary, Mr William Whitelaw, granted this request and the family is now somewhere in Britain but the Whitehall sources did not disclose where the hideout was.

The Soviet Embassy in London has apparently made no approach to the government about Mr Dzhirkvelov's case.

O AGON ANALYZES EFFECTS OF IRANIAN CRISIS ON CYPRUS ISSUE

NC011115 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 1 May 80 p 2

[From the "Our Stand" column: "We and International Aggravation"]

[Text] The failure of the operation to free the hostages held by the Iranians, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's withdrawal from the political scene and the West Europeans confined support of Carter are unavoidably leading toward a new aggravation of the international situation. Although Vance was not the sole architect of U.S. foreign policy, he was exercising a somewhat moderate role in his post. This period seems to be gliding away with the added influence of the hawks.

One could reasonably think that, while the Afhgan and Iranian crises are continuing and the hawks are in the forefront, the world will most probably face new aggravations of these crises.

When the big ones clash with each other, the small ones usually pay the price. International crises have serious negative repercussions on Cyprus, mainly for two reasons: On the one hand, the tough ones attach increased importance to Turkey which is within the crisis area (regardless of whether such importance is justified or not) while, on the other hand, our problem assumes a lower priority on the list of international problems.

For some time now not only have many countries already stopped considering it as a priority problem but do not even think of it as a problem.

Now with the aggravation of the international crisis there is the danger that our problem will be completely forgotten and, what is worse, new arbitrary actions against us will probably be accepted.

KHARAVYI URGES GOVERNMENT TO SUPPORT IRANIAN CAUSE

NC011118 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 1 May 80 p 3

[From the "Views and Comment" column: "Solidarity With Iran"]

[Text] Following the brutal and aggressive act of piracy by the U.S. against Iran, their naval blockade and the gunboat policy being declared by the White House hawks, it was natural for Iran to seek international solidarity which, at any rate, has been spontaneously expressed in many countries around the world. At such times, every struggling nation turns to sincere, consistent and strong friends of freedom, equality among nations, and peace--the socialist and nonaligned countries. This was also the case with Vietnam, the Palestinians, Cuba, Zimbabwe, 'Abd an-Nasir, Cyprus and others. Therefore, it was natural for Iranian President Bani-Sadr the other day to call on the president of the nonaligned movement, Fidel Castro, to convene a ministerial conference by the movement to study the serious situation created by the U.S. aggressiveness in the area.

Cyprus must--as an active member of the nonaligned movement and as a struggling country with an interest and need to gain from the development of international solidarity, particularly within the nonaligned quarters--officially take a clear and courageous stand against the piratic aggression in Iran and against any new adventure that threatens both peace in our area and in the world in general. The neutral stand, taken by the government spokesman on Carter's adventurism in Iran, does not satisfy the Cypriot people's feelings or the interests of Cyprus as a struggling nonaligned country. Let this be taken into consideration by the president and the Council of Ministers of the Cyprus Republic. Even NATO countries have taken a clearer and more condemning stand against the adventurous aggression.

The official statement also stresses that the appointment by the Greek Cypriot side of a representative to the agreed committee shows its sincere interest in promoting the issue. The Cyprus Government, concludes the statement, will always be ready to cooperate whenever the Turkish side has sincere intentions to show understanding and resolve the issue.

DEMIREL DENIES ALLEGATIONS ON U.S. INSTALLATIONS

TA021025 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 2 May 80

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that, although the extensive and effective struggle mounted by the state against anarchy has not yet reached the desired level, it will definitely do so. Demirel made this statement as he was leaving the hour-long weekly meeting with Acting President Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil which started today at 1100. Replying to a jorunalist who cited allegations that the United States was strengthening its defense bases in Turkey, Demirel said: These are all wrong. NATO exercises will take place in Turkey soon. Turkey will not concede to anything outside its commitments and cannot be forced to do so. There is no value in making certain incorrect allegations in order to confuse people. No government in Turkey would act in a way that violates the Turkish state's and the people's interests. That is why there is no point in incorrectly assessing certain preparations being undertaken in connection with the NATO exercises.

ERBAKAN CRITICIZES U.S. POLICY, DEMIREL'S FOREIGN POLICY

TA011852 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 1 May 80

[Excerpt] National Salvation Party [NSP] leader Necmettin Erbakan addressed an open-air rally organized by his party in Geyve today. Pointing out that there had been important foreign policy developments during the past few days, Erbakan criticized the policies pursued by the United States. Criticizing the Demirel government's foreign policy as well, the NSP leader stressed that this policy was pro-Western. He added: This trend of events is not liked by our nation. Our rights in the Aegean airspace cannot be abandoned for a few dollars of aid. [The Westerners] are first taking our compromises in order to ratify the aid they will give us drop by drop.

DEMIREL DISCUSSES MAY DAY SECURITY, SAUDI LOAN, SHORTAGES

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said: Those who tried to turn the 1 May spring holiday into a day of struggle for divisiveness and destructiveness and those who encouraged them realized that they were up against the Turkish Republican State. Demirel spoke following the Council of Ministers meeting that began at 1130 and lasted 3 1/2 hours.

[Begin Demirel recording] All the paths are open to seek your rights in Turkey. However, there are no rights to be found in Turkey by those who want to destroy the republican system in Turkey and replace it with communism. In other words, those who have this aim cannot find any rights in Turkey. The nation and the state stand side by side against them. The Council of Ministers has decided to express its appreciation and thanks to our martial law commanders, to our officers under their command, to our NCO's and soldiers in their command, to our governors, to our administrators, to all the members of our security forces, to the police force of our state, to our gendarmes and all others who worked hard to ensure the supremacy of the law, to insure the security of life and propenty of the citizens and to protect peace and tranquillity in the country. [end recording]

Prime Minister Demirel also revealed that the Government of Saudi Arabia decided to extend a new $250 million loan to Turkey. He said that the Turkish Government considered it its duty to express its thanks for this gesture of friendship by the Government of Saudi Arabia. He said that the formalities regarding the new loan would be completed soon.

Demirel then said that there were no fuel oil shortages in any part of Turkey: [Begin recording] Today is 1 May. We are beginning the month of May with enough reserves for 1 month. This is happening for the first time in about 15 or 18 months. We have diesel oil, fuel oil and crude oil that will last us 1 month. Exaggerations are being made again. There has never been and will never be fertilizer shortages in any part of the country. We have greatly overcome the shortages in the country. We will have a very good year. God willing, unless there are unforeseen damages, Turkey will have a record harvest this year. [end recording]

[Excerpts] There were no incidents during the May Day spring holiday throughout the country, including Ankara, Istanbul and Izmir, except in Antalya and Nigde.

Security forces in Antalya intervened when some 700 people tried to hold an illegal march around noon. According to information received from Antalya Governor Kadir Uysal, a group of people among the demonstrators fired at the security forces. A 10-year-old child was killed instantly during the clash that ensued. Five persons, two of them policemen, were wounded. The policemen were treated on the spot. The Antalya governor announced that 260 persons were detained and two pistols were confiscated.

The groups of people who participated in the meeting held by DISK [Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions] in Mersin held a march at 1215 and arrived at the Cumhuriyet Square at 1600. There were no incidents during the march or the meeting. Strict security measures were taken by the governor's office in Mersin. Numerous persons were searched, and those who did not have identity cards were not allowed to participate in the meeting. TRT correspondents report that the DISK Organizing Committee complied with warnings, which were announced yesterday. The leaders of certain other labor unions and the representatives of certain organizations also attended the march.

Addressing the rally in Mersin, DISK deputy leader Riza Guven said that May Day is the holiday of the working class and noted: We gathered in this square to shout our slogans. Referring to various internal and external issues, Guven said DISK is opposed to the establishment of a special police force to protect private institutions, pointing out that DISK is also opposed to NATO and the IMF. Guven also asked for the resignation of the Demirel government. The DISK rally ended with Guven's speech and the demonstrators dispersed without incident. Guven was detained by the Icel Security Directorate after the meeting and will be sent to Istanbul in accordance with the decree to seize DISK administrators on the grounds that they are inciting the workers to hold illegal strikes. Icel Governor Fahri Ozturk thanked the Mersin Army Headquarters, the army units and the security forces for the security measures that were taken in Mersin.

There was a clash between terrorists who were trying to hang posters on (?walls) and security forces. Policeman Izzet Cenik was seriously wounded and policeman Nedim Ozdemir was slightly wounded during the clash. Nigde Governor Behcet Guler said 38 persons, 8 of them females, were detained during the incident. Two of the persons who were detained were carrying pistols.

[Text] The Bakirkoy Public Prosecutor's Office has begun an investigation of the leader, the secretary general, the Executive Council members and the Administrative Council members--in all, 16 persons--of DISK [Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions]. DISK Executive Council member Mustafa Aktulgali has been taken into custody. According to information obtained by a TRT correspondent from the Bakirkoy Public Prosecutor's Office, an investigation has begun of DISK leader Abdullah Basturk, Secretary General Fehmi Isiklar, Executive Council members Riza Guven, Kemal Nebioglu, Mukbil Kirtiloglu, Tuncel Kocamanoglu and Mustafa Aktulgali for inciting workers to stage an illegal and political strike.

Meanwhile, a decision has been made to conduct an investigation of the Administrative Council members, and 16 leaders of various DISK-affiliated unions, for the same reason. Officials said that security forces, who went to the DISK building to implement the decisions, took Aktulgali, who was on the premises, into custody.

TCP URGES SOLIDARITY AGAINST GOVERNMENT 'TERROR, OPPRESSION'

TA291200 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 29 Apr 80

[Appeal to international democratic public opinion by the Turkish Communist Party Central Committee--date not given]

[Text] Our country, Turkey, has become one of the major countries in the world in which a bloody terror is reigning. Collaborationist monopolies wish to become more sovereign in the economy and politics of the country and to further transfer the load of the crisis to the shoulders of the people. They are planning to slaughter all communists and patriots in a bid to more comfortably involve Turkey in adventures aimed at serving the interests of imperialism in the Middle East. According to announcements on oppression and terror, more than 100,000 persons have been subjected to terror and oppression since the pro-American Demirel assumed power.

The daily POLITIKA, the voice of progressive forces, has been closed down. Hundreds of prisons in Turkey are filled to the brim with communists, progressives and revolutionaries. What is more, these prisons are not sufficient. From time to time, [word indistinct] are being transformed into concentration camps. Recently, all the administrators of the Progressive Youth Association have been arrested. Some 20,000 political prisoners are in dungeons. The government, politicians under the influence of the collaborationist monopolies and martial law generals are responsible for the tortures being conducted. Young girls, women and all those taken into custody--young and old--are being tortured in ways similar to those used by the shah in Iran's police and martial law stations.

In addition to the slaughters which have been organized by the militants of the fascist party--the NAP [Nationalist Action Party]--there are those directly organized by the state forces. Many communists have been shot in the last 2 years. More than 100 members of the Progressive Youth Association have been killed. More than 3,000 citizens have lost their lives as a result of terrorist acts. This terror and oppression is not only directed against TCP members but also against members of other workers parties, namely the TLP [Turkish Labor Party], the TSWP [Turkish Socialist Workers Party] and progressive RPP members.

Barbaric mass tortures and methods of intimidation are especially being directed against the Kurdish people. The TCP is struggling for the unity of all democratic forces against this system of terror and oppression.

The TCP calls on all progressives in the world to express their solidarity with the democratic forces in our country against the terror and oppression in Turkey. Extend your hand to the Turkish people who are struggling against imperialism, international monopolies and their bloody collaborators in our country and for democratic rights and freedoms. Express your solidarity with the TCP and all the democratic forces in Turkey.

TCP Central Committee.

COMPROMISE DOCUMENT ON OLYMPICS APPROVED BY 18 EUROPEAN NATIONS

AU031938 Rome ANSA in English 1925 GMT 3 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 3 (ANSA)--A compromise may have been found to enable the various nations to go to the Moscow Olympics in July without attaching any political significance to the move. The Olympic committees of most of the Western European nations met today in Rome and approved a document which proposed that national flags and anthems be stricken from all official ceremonies at the Moscow Olympics to show that participation was a sporting choice and not a political one.

The document was approved by 18 nations: Andorra, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France (who made the proposal), West Germany, Britain, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malta, Holland, San Marino, Switzerland and Turkey. Spain, Portugal and Sweden, who were unable to attend the meeting, telegraphed their approval of the proposed compromise solution.

The president of the Italian Olympic Committee, Franco Carraro, said the compromise was within the spirit of the Olympic Charter.

NC040606 Paris AFP in English 1351 GMT 3 May 80

[Excerpt] Rome, May 3 (AFP)--Representatives of 18 European Olympic committees today decided to launch a worldwide appeal for the elimination of nationalism from the Moscow Olympics. A list of proposals were agreed by the countries' national Olympic committees meeting here, which are aimed at preventing the Soviet Union from gaining any political prestige from the event.

A boycott of the opening ceremony is their first proposal. They suggest the national delegations should be replaced by a single flag-carrier, walking behind each country's name.

Apart from this single display of each country's flag at the opening ceremony, the Western European countries are adamant that only the Olympic flag and a short version of the Olympic anthem should be included in medal ceremonies and at official functions. And they also insist officials at various venues should only wear badges carrying the Olympic insignia.

The meeting also asks the International Olympic Committee (IOC) to guarantee that any speeches made at the opening and closing ceremonies should be of a "non-political" nature.

All Olympic committees taking part in the games are being asked to restrict their activities to sports, a proposal aimed at Soviet-organised social and leisure functions.

The meeting also called on the Olympic movement to undertake an immediate re-appraisal of the whole structure of the Olympic games.

LEADERS CRITICAL OF U.S. EMBASSY SECURITY TEST

AU021304 Vienna KURIER in German 1 May 80 p 2

[Christian Ruettinger report: "An Extremely Clumsy Action of the United States"]

[Text] On Wednesday [30 April] spokesmen of all three political parties represented in parliament indicated their alarm at the U.S. cloak-and-dagger operation during which U.S. Marines on Tuesday evening "attacked" their own embassy in Vienna on Boltzmanngasse, without notifying Austrian police authorities.

Although the matter is not a controversial one in principle for Interior Minister Lanc--"the existence of security forces of foreign embassies is authorized and uncontested"--there has been a serious blunder. "It is not proper that they simply forgot to notify us," Lanc remarked critically. He expressed his intention to make the incident, despite the subsequent apologies, the subject of a comprehensive, very serious talk with U.S. agencies in Austria, "for, not only the policemen involved were endangered, but also pedestrians who had nothing at all to do with the matter."

Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, who on Tuesday evening had indignantly declared "we are very concerned," adopted a reserved attitude on Wednesday refusing to make any further comment. However, he too urgently wants an extensive, clarifying talk with the Americans in charge.

Ambassador Ludwig Steiner, People's Party foreign policy spokesman, follows the same line of argument: "Such exercises from outside [the premises] must not under any circumstances be carried out without notifying the Austrian authorities; such notification must not be omitted for any reason whatsoever."

And Freedom Party Chairman Norbert Steger even regards such action without prior notification as an "unfriendly act." Steger said unequivocally: "A typical symptom of the U.S. foreign policy with its extremely clumsy actions, like a bull in a china shop."

Embassy Denies 'Mock Attack'

[APA, AZ report: "U.S. Embassy: 'No Attack, the Marines Were Unarmed'"]

[Text] Vienna--On Thursday [1 May] the U.S. Embassy officially denied that the Marines assigned to the embassy as guards carried out a mock attack on the embassy building as has been reported. No U.S. soldier has ever carried weapons outside the embassy building. The whole matter was a routine check of security measures as carried out at regular intervals by all U.S. embassies throughout the world.

Those Marine guards who were not on duty at the time were summoned to participate in this internal disaster exercise. The unexpected arrival of these men at the embassy--they wore plain clothes--must have alarmed the Austrian policeman in front of the embassy building, the statement declares.

It adds that the Austrian authorities were not notified this time because the security practice was to take place exclusively inside the building and a notification therefore did not seem necessary. Regrettably this has led to the publication of incorrect reports, the statement says.

CUBAN FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS WITH KREISKY

Afghanistan Mediation Discussed

AU022035 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1950 GMT 2 May 80

[Text] Cuba's Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca Peoli unexpectedly [ueberraschenderweise] met with Austrian Federal Chancellor Kreisky today in Vienna for talks. Malmierca Peoli, who is touring various countries concerned with mediating in the Afghanistan conflict, briefed the federal chancellor about the state of the mediation efforts. Kreisky has repeatedly termed Cuba, a member of the organization of nonaligned states, the key to solving the Afghanistan crisis. No details about the talks have yet been revealed.

Message From Castro

[Text] Vienna--Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca has presented a personal message from Cuban party and government head Fidel Castro to Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky. This was reported today by SOZIALISTISCHE KORRESPONDENZ of the Austrian People's Party. Informed circles in Vienna have said that Castro may have raised in the message the possible role of the nonalighed countries in the endeavors to solve the Afghanistan crisis.

According to the party paper, Malmierca informed Kreisky about the results his talks held so far on behalf of the nonaligned. The Cuban foreign minister arrived in Vienna on Thursday.

KREISKY SEES NO 'CONVULSIONS' IN POST-TITO ERA

AU050710 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0519 GMT 5 May 80

[Text] In his first statement [on Tito's death] Chancellor Kreisky stressed that first of all it was necessary to call to mind President Tito's historical importance. After the war he accomplished the feat of dissociating himself from Stalin's monolithic communism, of being the first to do so, while Stalin was still alive, and this was the first great defection in world communism. Stalin did not dare to treat Yugoslavia in the same way the USSR later treated Hungary and the CSSR. On the question of what is to happen now in Yugoslavia, Kreisky said:

[Begin Kreisky recording] It will be very difficult to pick up the mantle that has fallen. However, things will certainly continue quietly, because Tito had put his house well in order before he became ill. Yugoslavia is being led by men who know their responsibility and in Yugoslavia itself, there is a strong army, which will certainly stand its test as a clamp holding this state together.

I believe that all the anxiety, the anxious question of what will come after Tito, can be safely answered, in the sense that the world will surely not experience a new convulsion as a result of Tito's death, because the post-Tito era has long since begun. [end recording]

KREISKY CALLS FOR CONTINUATION OF DETENTE AT MAY DAY RALLY

[SOCIALIST PRESS SERVICE report on Chancellor Kreisky's speech at the Vienna May Day rally on 1 May 1980]

[Excerpt] This May Day falls in a period of great and serious political tensions. Here, too, it is necessary for us not to remain silent but to make clear what we advocate also on this May Day--namely, that the policy of detente can be continued and that at long last more is done for disarmament, Kreisky said to the accompaniment of strong applause. We will not let ourselves be dissuaded by talk, no matter how wild. We will firmly stand by the principles of peace and of detente. Thus we are the admonishing conscience in this era, we must speak when others are silent, we must take a stand against oppression and for more justice and peace among the peoples.

And we advocate a policy of understanding not because we need other countries' oil, but because it has always been our conviction, that we call for the fraternization of all peoples irrespective of race. In the 90 years of its existence, May Day has always been at the same time a day of fraternization and of international solidarity. Thus today's May Day is a day of admonition to every one of us to work for the idea of social democracy in the place where he stands.

GROMYKO VISIT TO STATE TREATY ANNIVERSARY UNCERTAIN

AU300958 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 30 Apr 80 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report: "All Neighboring Countries Agree To Participate in State Treaty Anniversary"]

[Text] All of Austria's neighboring countries have now promised to dispatch their foreign ministers to the Vienna State Treaty anniversary. After the resignation of Cyrus Vance there are some doubts about the participation of the two superpowers: Foreign Minister Gromyko has made his visit to Vienna dependent on that of the U.S. secretary of state.

Regarding his forthcoming official visit to the FRG, Chancellor Kreisky declared on Tuesday [29 April] after the Cabinet meeting that in the assessment of the international political situation there are no differences of opinion between him and FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, but merely "different positions."

OFFICIALS PAY TRIBUTES TO YUGOSLAV PRESIDENT TITO

Schmidt, Genscher to Funeral

LD051040 Hamburg DPA in German 0957 GMT 5 May 80

[Text] Bonn--As well as Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher will attend Tito's funeral in Belgrade. This was confirmed today by a Foreign Ministry spokesman.

The SPD announced that Willy Brandt, chairman of the SPD, is also to attend the funeral. Brandt visited Tito in Yugoslavia for the last time in July last year.

It was not yet clear this morning whether President Karl Carstens will attend the funeral in Belgrade. On account of the situation it is not expected in Bonn that Yugoslav Premier Veselin Djuranovic will visit the Federal Republic this week for talks with the federal chancellor as was planned.

Schmidt Cable

[Text] Bonn--In telegrams to Lazar Kolisevski, president of the SFRY Presidium, and Veselin Djuranovic, president of the Yugoslav Federal Executive Council, Helmut Schmidt said he was sure that Tito's "historic achievement" would remain effective long after his death. The death of this great person was a huge loss, not only for Yugoslavia and its people.

Schmidt recalled his meetings with Tito in 1974 in Bonn, in 1975 in Helsinki and in 1977 in Belgrade. He wrote that Tito's farsightedness and considered determination had deeply impressed him. Few statesmen had succeeded "in placing a whole life in the service of his own people and the worldwide community of peoples so utterly and without sparing himself as President Tito had done with great strength of will to the very last." Thanks to Tito's statesmanlike activity, Yugoslavia was today a united and independent country capable of great achievements. If today the realization was increasingly gaining ground that the nonaligned movement could only perform its function as an important element of stability in the world if it remained truly nonaligned, then this was largely thanks to President Tito.

Schmidt said in conclusion: "President Tito leaves behind a lasting and binding life's work. The Federal Government is prepared to make its contribution so that this work can be continued."

Genscher Message

LD042317 Hamburg DPA in German 2100 GMT 4 May 80

[Text] In a telegram to Josip Vrhovec, Yugoslav federal secretary for foreign affairs, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher stressed that Tito's name also stood for "persistent and consistent efforts for overcoming power politics, the reduction of tension and a peaceful balance between independent, sovereign states with equal rights." He stood not least for reconciliation between our peoples and the development of a close and fruitful cooperation between Yugoslavia and the Federal Republic. Genscher said that linked with the recognition of this great and continuing achievement was also the obligation to continue cooperation between the two states in the same spirit in international and bilateral questions.

Carstens Condolences

[Text] Bonn--In telegrams of condolences, Federal President Karl Carstens, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher have paid tribute to the life and work of the late Yugoslav President Tito, and above all to his role as cofounder of the nonaligned movement.

In a telegram to Lazar Kolisevski, president of the SFRY Presidium, Carstens wrote that the world had lost a great statesman. "As cofounder of the nonaligned movement Tito introduced into world politics a new element which pointed to the future." Neither setbacks nor resistance were able to sway him in his rejection of all forms of political and economic hegemony or in his stand for every country's right to freedom, independence and independent development. He also remembered with respect the important role played by Tito in the development of German-Yugoslav relations after the war. With a view to the future he had used his full authority to "open up for the present and future generations in our countries reliable prospects for peace, for increasingly closer cooperation in an atmosphere of respect, dignity and our peoples' rights," stated Carstens, recalling Tito's words during the latter's visit to the Federal Republic in 1974.

GOVERNMENT STILL FAVORS MEETING WITH GDR'S HONECKER

[Excerpts] Bonn--According to Minister of State Huonker of the Federal Chancellor's Office it is still the wish of the Federal Government and Chancellor Schmidt that a meeting with GDR State Council Chairman Honecker take place.

In an interview with Radio Free Berlin Huonker said today that, on the strength of contacts during the past few days, he is justified in assuming that "this wish also exists on the other side." At the moment there is little point in speculating on a possible date since this depends, of course, on the development of the world situation.

Concerning discussion of the chancellor's visit to Moscow, Huonker said that this question is being discussed "very carefully and very frankly" with the other friendly governments of the Alliance. Equally careful consideration is being given to the atmosphere in which such a visit should take place. This is why the date of the visit has not yet been decided.

BOELLING SAYS SCHMIDT HAS NOT YET DECIDED TO VISIT MOSCOW

[Excerpts] Bonn--According to Government Spokesman Boelling, Chancellor Schmidt has not yet decided whether or not he will accept the invitation of Soviet party and state head Leonid Brezhnev to visit Moscow in June. "The decision is open," Boelling told a press conference in Bonn today.

A stir was also created today in Bonn by the indirect criticism levelled by head of the SPD lower house group Wehner at the Soviet leadership, which he accused of tolerating a systematic war of nerves by the Soviet side and thus allowing its relations with the Federal Republic to become strained.

Boelling conceded that yesterday's statements by the chancellor in Stuttgart might have been misunderstood. At the main May Day rally of the DGB there, Schmidt declared that he would tell the Soviet leaders once again to start pulling their troops out of Afghanistan "when I see the Soviet leaders in Moscow on my return visit before long."

According to the government spokesman, Schmidt merely meant by this that, in case he decided to make his visit to Moscow, we would not omit raising the subject. Boelling made it clear once again that Schmidt is ready in principle to visit the USSR. The matter is important and the Federal Government is doing everything to clarify the prerequisites. Bonn is engaged in an exchange of views with its Western allies. Contacts with the Soviet side are "of course also necessary."

In articles in today's edition of AUGSBURGER ALLGEMEINE and the Munich ABENDZEITUNG Wehner called it monstrous that the Soviet side is conducting a systematic war of nerves and, by having tolerated several commentaries by the Soviet news agency APN, "allowed its relationship with its honest and sincere treaty partner, the Federal Republic, to be placed under a heavy strain."

GENSCHER ON ARMS CONTROL, SCHMIDT MOSCOW VISIT, OLYMPICS

[Text] Bonn--Offers by the West to negotiate on arms control have, according to Federal Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, so far unfortunately not been positively replied to.

In an interview with KOELNISCHE/BONNER RUNDSCHAU, published by the FDP on Friday, Genscher said that the same was true of the EC proposals for Afghanistan's nonaligned status. Only perseverance could hold out any prospect of success in the Afghan negotiations. The Federal Republic alone was unable to bring about success in this area.

Concerning the Moscow visit by Chancellor Schmidt, Genscher said that, so far, it has merely been decided that talks will have to be continued. However, the Federal Republic will be taking on too much if it believes that it is able to negotiate with the Soviet Union on behalf of the whole world, as it were. Rather, the objective is to make use of every opportunity for talks in order to get across one's own viewpoint in difficult times.

According to Genscher, it is important to make plain to the Soviet Union that its attempts to divide Europe and the United States are without any chance of success. Luckily, the Europeans, including the French, are all agreed on that point. [passage indistinct]

Moscow Visit No 'Election Issue'

[Text] Bonn--FDP Chairman Federal Foreign Minister Genscher has warned against turning Chancellor Schmidt's possible visit to Moscow into an election issue. Speaking at an election rally of his party in Wuppertal today, Genscher said that the situation is too serious and the dialogue between East and West too important to permit "the luxury of petty polemics making the fluctuation of percentages seem more important than our country's international interests."

It is not so much a question, Genscher said, of whether such a visit of the chancellor should take place but of the most suitable moment for it. What is important are appropriate preparations, the moderation of exaggerated expectations and, above all, careful coordination with the Allies.

If the chancellor clearly explains in Moscow the position of the Federal Government, of NATO and of the EEC, this might certainly be "a contribution to the predictability of German policy and to the avoidance of illusions and faulty assessments on the Soviet side." To make sure of this, every piece of "factual advice of the opposition" is also "valuable and important," Genscher said.

Reiterates Olympic Boycott Stand

[Excerpt] Hamburg--The energetic attempts by 18 West European national Olympic committees to salvage the Moscow Olympic games has met with rejection from the Federal Government. One day following the eight-point statement by the national Olympic committees in Rome to denationalize the games, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on Sunday appealed for acceptance of the boycott recommendations made by the government.

In his address at the opening of the 26th German-American friendship week in Karlsruhe, Genscher said: "I am firmly hopeful that the presidents of the West European national Olympic committees who met in Rome will, before the impending decisions, once more examine carefully whether common interests and ideals are not worth their while in following the recommendations of their governments, and not to go to Moscow."

OPPOSITION LEADER KOHL ADVISES SCHMIDT TO FORGO MOSCOW VISIT

[Excerpts] Bonn--Helmut Kohl, opposition leader in the lower house, has advised Chancellor Helmut Schmidt not to go to Moscow at this particular moment in time. Such a visit must be coordinated closely with the Americans and the other Western allies "if the whole matter is not going to have a terrible outcome," he said in an interview with DPA on Sunday. Furthermore, he has great doubts as to whether such an agreement is at all possible at present.

Kohl also stated in the DPA interview he fears that "such a trip at present would move the Federal Republic into a still more unfavorable light and that doubts as to Bonn's loyalty within the alliance would increase rather than decrease in the West, especially in the United States." At the same time he is certain that important factions of the SPD, above all that group which he called the "Moscow faction" "led by Wehner, Brandt, Bahr and others, will do everything" to ensure that Schmidt goes on the trip.

STRAUSS TERMS POSSIBLE SCHMIDT-BREZHNEV SUMMIT 'USEFUL'

LD022052 Hamburg DPA in German 2017 GMT 2 May 80

[Text] Franz Josef Strauss, Bavarian premier and chancellor candidate of the CDU/CSU, considers talks between Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and the leadership of the Soviet Union in Moscow useful in view of the world crisis situation. However, one of the conditions for such talks is, above all, previous agreement with the United States, Strauss said on Saturday in an interview with Bavarian radio. It would also have to be made plain that the Federal Republic would not allow itself to be removed from its firm role within the Western alliance by the Soviet Union.

Strauss himself would be prepared to go to Moscow under two conditions: in agreement with U.S. President Carter, and with a negotiating latitude in which "nobody in Europe could stab him in the back." However, he is quite sure that he would receive no invitation from Moscow, the Bavarian premier told MUENCHNER MERKUR (Saturday edition).

Furthermore, Strauss told MERKUR that he had "agreed to" the meeting between Hans Graf Huyn, CSU foreign policy expert, and a PLO representative on 15 April in Bonn. The meeting had been necessary to find out whether there were changes in the PLO's attitude towards Israel or whether some kind of double act was involved in which the "left hand" continued to insist on Israel's eradication and the "right" hand backed diplomatic communication.

An editorial version of the radio interview was prereleased to DPA by Bavarian radio.

STRAUSS LEAVES MUNICH FOR VISIT TO ISRAEL, EGYPT

LD041244 Hamburg DPA in German 1206 GMT 4 May 80

[Excerpt] [Dateline indistinct]--Franz Josef Strauss, Bavarian premier and CDU/CSU candidate for the chancellorship, left Munich today on a 3-day visit to Israel. He will meet, among others, Prime Minister Menahem Begin, Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir, Defense Minister 'Ezer Weizman and opposition leader Sh'imon Peres. The CSU chairman will also visit Egypt.

Strauss told WELT AM SONNTAG and MUENCHNER MERKUR before his departure that he is taking his own proposals for a solution to the Middle East problem to Israel. However, he refused to give details since, he said, questions about the next step concerning the gradual resolution of the Israeli-Arab conflict are unsuitable for public discussion.

BRANDT URGES EUROPE TO 'EXERT INFLUENCE' ON U.S., USSR

[Excerpt] Bonn--SPD Chairman Brandt believes that Europeans in both the West and East should exert their influence on the USSR to contain the present critical situation. So far Europe has not been drawn into "this vortex," Brandt said in an interview with Vienna's ARBEITER-ZEITUNG, prereleased on Friday. If relations between the two world powers worsen and the arms spiral is twisted even further, however, it will be very difficult to bring Europe through this chapter of international events as a zone of relative stability. The situation is serious and poses the question of what the Europeans can do to influence those concerned so as to ensure that the international situation does not become aggravated still further.

Brandt stressed that the German side wishes to steer relations with its treaty partners in the East "unimpaired through a difficult situation." To date there has been no breakdown in the handling of practical questions between the two German states, but they too could be affected by a worsening of the international situation. At the moment a common interest is discernible among those holding political responsibility in the two German states: not to allow practical arrangements to be endangered.

EUROMISSILES ISSUE, USSR ENVOY'S 'THREATS' EXAMINED

[Alfred Fabre-Luce article: "Warlike Pacifism"]

[Text] I have continually asserted here that any American military initiative in Iran could well prove counterproductive. And I am, therefore, the more entitled to denounce the confusion which certain commentators are trying to spread. It is being said that the United States should have consulted with its allies before starting its operation Thursday. This grievance would have been justified if it had been a question of a naval blockade or of occupying a territory, which could have endangered peace. The raid undertaken had only one objective--rescue--and its success largely depended on absolute secrecy. President Carter merely followed all precedents in this sphere.

However deplorable the failure may be and however alarming the situation in the Persian Gulf remains, this week we should turn our minds to a problem which concerns us more directly--that of European security. While waging war in Afghanistan, the USSR has launched a pacifist campaign in Paris. This campaign has just started along two paths--a warning by Soviet Ambassador Chervonenko (which has been confirmed by Gromyko) and a meeting of communist parties loyal to Moscow. Foreign policy and domestic policy are merging under our very eyes. Events in Asia, unrest in the streets and attempts at diplomatic intimidation form a whole.

Referring to the quarrel concerning NATO Euromissiles during a speech at a meeting of the International Diplomatic Academy on 15 April, Chervonenko brandished two threats: Soviet overarmament and a possible reprisal attack against Europe. Why was this problem broached in our country? It appears that, not content with the fact that we are not a member of the NATO military organization, the USSR would like to see us come out against that organization.

And yet the NATO plan represents no threat to a peaceful USSR. In order to reassure him, we could send to Chervonenko a delegation composed of two eminent experts representing different trends: Ambassador Francois de Rose and General Gallois. These two visitors would show him the documents they have recently published. The former believes that "since the 108 Pershing missiles (whose deployment is being planned by NATO) carry single warheads and have a range of only 1,800 km, they would be unable to destroy the 1,398 Soviet missiles targeted on the United States." And, according to the latter, "The view that either super-Plutons or Pershing-2 missiles would 'counterbalance' the Soviet SS-20 missiles is a fallacy." After listening to his two visitors, the ambassador would be justified in telling the Politburo: "There is no danger."

Unfortunately, we must mention another possibility--Chervonenko might tell Ambassador Francois de Rose that the NATO resolution marks an increase in Atlantic solidarity and constitutes a danger just on this score. Then, turning to General Gallois, he might retort: "Do you take Leonid Brezhnev for an idiot? Do you believe that he would so forcefully discuss with his interlocutors for many months a problem that seemed to him to be nonexistent?"

For the West, this problem has some quite complex technical aspects. Two schools of thought confront each other over the matter. One takes the view that the surest way to prevent a preemptive destruction of nuclear arms by the enemy is to diversify them. And the other believes that everything should be staked on sea-to-surface missiles which are invulnerable at present. [paragraph continues]

The supporters of the first thesis retort by emphasizing the word "at present." (They are afraid of progress in detecting submarines.) And the supporters of the second thesis observe that any continual movement of mobile arms in the urbanized regions of West Europe is difficult to envisage. If the whole issue were reduced to the latter point, the only thing that we could do would be to accept as inevitable the superiority of a sparsely populated and ecologist free Russia.

As for Pierre Dabezies--another French expert--he believes that the problem of Euromissiles is mainly psychological. It is a question, he asserts, of reassuring the Germans. But can free Europe feel quite at ease if the Germans feel alarmed? A report on defense prepared by the French Democratic Union and published this week includes some very shrewd remarks on the subject. "Whether direct or indirect," it says, "there is a single threat and it does not start on our borders.... As long as our partners do not feel sure of our solidarity, there will be no progress in Europe's political construction."

Let us explain this. As far as theater arms are concerned, it is a question of ascertaining whether you accept a situation where the Soviets could destroy enemy forces in Europe without running the risk of their own forces being destroyed. There are several ways of answering this question. However, as the British say, "when there is a will, there is a way."

We were told at the end of last year: NATO has made its decision. But this was only the beginning of the matter. The USSR will try to have this decision revised. Already, Belgium appears to be more interested in its language quarrel than in deploying missiles on its territory. Even the FRG has adopted an ambiguous attitude. Helmut Schmidt seems to be contemplating the possibility of a kind of moratorium. Is this tantamount to accepting a situation where some SS-20 missiles have already been deployed, whereas the American missiles which could provide a response to them are still national? Or is it an attempt at temporizing until the American missiles can become operational?

Be that as it may, we will live through a dangerous period during which the West will have to both maintain some diplomatic caution and strive to improve the military situation--two objectives which complement each other rather than clash with each other.

The "pacifist" maneuver undertaken by the aggressor of Afghanistan has put us to the test on two levels. The Atlantic Alliance must not be at the mercy of an accident in a desert and Europe's political cohesion must take the form of a concrete act. An opportunity to ensure this has, in fact, arisen this week. The Nine have been discussing and will continue to discuss some important problems which, however, as the President quite rightly said, do not "measure up to historical stakes." A European movement meeting--with a closing speech by Raymond Barre--is to take place in the Sorbonne main lecture room on 9 May. It would be a shame if the problem of security which I have just discussed were not mentioned during the meeting and it would be paradoxical if the 30th anniversary of the Robert Schuman initiative were celebrated on the morrow of a setback for European cooperation.

FIFTH NUCLEAR SUBMARINE TO DEPART ON FIRST PATROL

[Text] Cherbourg, France, May 2, REUTER--France's latest nuclear submarine, Le Tonnant, goes into service tomorrow when it leaves its Atlantic home base of Ile Longue on a 60-day underwater patrol. The 9,000-tone Le Tonnant is armed with 16 one-megaton thermonuclear missiles and has a crew of 135 officers and men.

It is the fifth in line after the Redoubtable; Terrible; Foudroyant and Indomitable commissioned between 1971 and 1977. The French Navy is converting its other nuclear submarines with the new M-4 missile. Each missile will carry six thermonuclear warheads of 150 kilotons with a range exceeding 2,500 miles (4,000 kms). France is also building a new generation nuclear submarine--L'Inflexible--due to go into service in 1985.

Bourges Comments

LD031844 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 3 May 80

[Excerpt] Le Tonnant, the fifth French nuclear-powered missile submarine of the strategic naval force, is operational. This morning at Ile Longue in the Brest roadstead, Defense Minister Yvon Bourges attended this commissioning. Henceforth, he said, it is necessary to prepare the third generation of nuclear submarines armed with M-4 multiple warhead missiles. For a long time the submarine will remain the dominant means of our riposte--even if elementary caution must lead us to maintain several components for our forces and to look for new systems. Yvon Bourges spoke to our special correspondent, Henri Vincent: [Begin Bourges recording] Above all, one has to attain, in the shortest possible time, the ability to reach the largest possible number of targets with the best possible arms, because it is the extent of the damage we can inflict on an aggressor that will make our deterrent credible. The government has therefore chosen the solution which allows us to dispose of the largest number of arms within the shortest time. Having suspended the realization of a sixth nuclear-powered 20-missile submarine back in December 1975, it was decided in September 1978 to undertake the construction of a new generation of such vessels equipped with M-4 arms system to be operational in 1985. GISCARD LAUDS TITO'S DEDICATION, INDEPENDENCE

LD051212 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 5 May 80

[Excerpt] Yesterday in Paris Valery Giscard d'Estaing recalled that Marshal Tito dedicated himself for 35 years to creating an original method of organization in accordance with the aspirations of the Yugoslav people, and--I am still quoting the president of the republic--that he managed to maintain the freedom and independence of his country while making the real voice of nonalignment heard very loudly in the world.

L'HUMANITE WELCOMES EUROPEAN COMMUNISTS

[Roland Leroy editorial: "Welcome and May There Be Much Success"]

[Text] Today the French Communists cordially and fraternally welcome the representatives of most of Europe's communist and workers parties. These parties have responded to the joint invitation of the Polish United Workers Party and the PCF.

This is an open, united, constructive meeting. As indicated by its title, a meeting for peace and disarmament. The agenda is precise, the aim is clear.

The parties are going to bring together their viewpoints on the major problems facing all the men and women of our continent, and, therefore, communists, too. The meeting proposes issuing a call to the peoples of Europe to activate and broaden people's action.

The correlation of world forces continues to develop in favor of the forces for peace, socialism and social progress. Imperialism is striving to struggle against the facts. It is developing a counteroffensive which is far from achieving the results anticipated at a time when it should be facing up to the worsening of the crisis.

In Europe, imperialism has, for a long time, been directing its efforts against detente. It wants to endanger the Helsinki conference achievements; it is striving to thwart the preparations for Madrid. At the end of last year the extremely grave decision was taken to deploy new U.S. strategic missiles in West Europe. Carter's recent military adventure in Iran demonstrates what threats may hang over peace.

This intention is running into the people's resistance which takes many forms in Europe. In France our party has contributed greatly to defeat the plans of the Atlantic firebrands and promote the cause of disarmament and detente.

Such a situation concerns all the forces for peace and, thus the communists, of our continent. Thus it is natural and worthwhile that communists should meet. Certainly not, as was the case some 10 years ago, to hold conferences for producing a program, preceded by several years of talks, visits and consultations which resulted in long and more or less dogmatic texts. The emphasis on the diversity of [each party's] situation makes the formulation of a common strategy inconceivable.

Our struggle is not to edit archive documents but to change reality and to get results.

It was in this spirit, immediately after the last international conference, that we spoke in favor of more vital, more flexible and, thus, more effective types of relations and cooperation for action between communist parties.

The aim, here, is to confront the arms race in Europe, to help each party to develop the struggle in its own country, to help to create the conditions for a vast rally open to other forces.

We have always said this, particularly at our 23d congress. Whenever possible we are resolved to promote joint action with forces such as the socialists and the representatives of the Christian popular masses for aims which correspond to our people's interests.

This means a sovereign determination for each communist party, not unconditional and with no automatic alignment with anyone, nor without compromise void of content.

Sitting together today will be the representatives of parties which have the power to build socialism, others from capitalist Europe who have only just emerged from an illegal status or who are struggling under difficult conditions, or those who have strong parliamentary representation or who even participate in government.

These parties do not have the same views on all questions. There are differences between them, even divergences on certain problems. The fact that they are meeting together testifies to their desire to struggle for the creation of the conditions will take us past the division of Europe into blocs. The meeting will undoubtedly result in the development of the European peoples' vital action for detente, peace and disarmament.

Welcome to Paris and may there be much progress at the European communist party meeting for peace and disarmament!

OFFICIALS, PCI SEND CONDOLENCES ON TITO'S DEATH

LD042354 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2200 GMT 4 May 80

[Excerpt] In a message sent to the president of the Yugoslav Federal Executive Council, Prime Minister Cossiga wrote of the death of an intrepid fighter for the principle of independence of peoples and stressed the contribution made by Tito to the consolidation of Italian-Yugoslav relations.

NEWSPAPERS DISCUSS EMBASSY HOSTAGES SITUATION IN LONDON

[Text] Rome, May 3 (ANSA)--The ongoing war of nerves in London between Iranian separationists holding some twenty hostages captive in the Iranian Embassy and British police negotiators seeking to wind down the siege in force since Wednesday received a wide play on the front pages of the Italian dailies today.

Under the [word indistinct] "the force of barbarism" the Milan paper IL GIORNALE NUOVO launched an editorial barrage against the leaders in Tehran with statements like, "the reserves of impudence available to the Iranian regime are considerably greater than their oil reserves". After recalling Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr's announcement that Tehran will never give in to the demands from the separationists in London, the comment argued that Tehran's leaders "do not understand, or pretend not to understand, that there is one shocking fact connected to the episode: their own indignation.

"The law of tit for tat means that Iran must now suffer the same outrage Iran has inflicted on the United States. It was to be expected that the uproar sparked by the case in Tehran would push a group of guerrillas, dissidents or extremists in some part of the world to emulate the action and this is precisely what has happened. The complicity of the government in the capture and holding of the American hostages and the arguments advanced to justify these actions have encouraged potential kidnappers. This," the editorial concluded, "is the responsibility which now weighs not so much on the Iranian regime as on those who have played down this abuse of power".

Along much the same lines, another Milan daily, IL GIORNO, told its readers that, "this development which has given Iran its own occupied embassy has, also, paradoxically heightened tensions as regards the country first subjected to this treatment, the United States, and fomented hatred toward neighboring Iraq and England".

With a glance at the demands made by the gunmen holding the embassy, the editorial said that, "the ferment in the Khuzestan Province has raised the charge that Iraq is inciting it. Though the disorders are less violent than those registered in the Kurdish areas they are more damaging to Iran because they are one of the reasons behind the falloff in the production of Iranian crude, which tumbled to a level of 1,350,000 barrels per day as compared to the 3,500,000 called for in production plans, a decline which has reduced vital oil income to almost zero".

The daily concluded with the point that, "a number of hidden threats and dangers now weigh more heavily on Iran than the aborted American rescue mission in Tabas and the prospect of new American military moves like mining the Persian Gulf ports".

The procommunist Rome daily PAESE SERA raised the question of why "leaders, especially those in the West, in dealing with these desperate acts, challenges and provocations like the attacks on embassies and the capture of hostages, fail to link them to the peasant revolts of the last century in which municipal buildings were burned down and records which indicated the oppression of the poor were destroyed.

"No one has the idea of extending certain sentiments and reasons to the Islamic militants in Tehran or the Arabs in Khuzestan or to any others who violate international law with or without a clearcut mandate", the editorial added. PAESE then made the connection that, "the roots are to be sought precisely here, in the hatred against the symbols of old and ruthless power, and against the reality of modern and ongoing powers of corruption".

ARREST WARRANT ISSUED FOR ANOTHER RED BRIGADE MEMBER

[Text] Rome, May 3 (ANSA)--Another arrest warrant was issued today in connection with the investigation into the kidnap and killing of Italian statesman Aldo Moro. The latest warrant was put out for Cristoforo Piancone, the terrorist who was arrested in Turin on April 14, 1978, after having taken part in a Red Brigade hit team that killed prison guard Lorenzo Cutugno, although mortally wounded, the guard managed to shoot Piancone who was seriously hurt. The terrorist was arrested shortly afterwards and is currently in a Parma jail.

The new warrant against Piancone came as a result of confessions made by Patrizio Peci, the so-called "repentant Red Brigadist". Peci's confessions have already led to the issuance of arrest warrants against Raffaele Fiore and Luca Nicolotti in recent days.

SUAREZ ISSUES STATEMENT ON TITO'S DEATH

LD042354 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 4 May 80

[Text] Upon learning of the death of Marshal Tito, Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez issued the following statement from Damascus:

The last of the great postwar figures has disappeared with Marshal Tito. He was a man of exceptional qualities. He was a vigorous personality who fought unfalteringly to free his country from all forms of foreign domination and who, at the same time, contributed more than anyone to the definition and reaffirmation of the ideals of the nonaligned movement to which he always gave his inspiration and leadership. His disappearance at a time of international tension and uncertainty is a great loss for everybody.

With these words I want to share the grief of our friends, the people of Yugoslavia, that great Mediterranean country which so loves its freedom and jealously protects its independence. With that country, we are today united in grief. But we are also united in the hope that its future will follow the same course as its past--in the service of international cooperation, the reduction of tension, and peace among peoples.

EL PAIS: CYRUS VANCE RESIGNATION 'A BAD OMEN'

[Editorial: "A Dove Resigns"]

[Excerpts] Carter's foreign policy has been based on two people--presidential adviser Brzezinski and Secretary of State Vance (who replaced Kissinger). In the totemic terminology by which political clans are designated, Brzezinski is the hawk and Vance the dove. The fall of the dove, of the man who preferred negotiation and diplomacy to force, is a bad omen. It is also a serious matter for Carter--a major indictment of the blunder of his operation in Iran: not of the outcome but of the operation in itself since, apparently when Vance learned that the plan which he had opposed was going to be carried out, he told the President and those accompanying him in this venture that he would resign whatever the outcome.

The suspicious political critic of our time attributed the interplay between Brzezinski and Vance to a predetermined dramatization of Carter's foreign policy. Vance was supposed to wear the mask of comedy, Brzezinski the mask of tragedy, while the two of them--and Carter, the author--acted out the plot. His resignation has demonstrated that Vance was more sincere than was believed. It is difficult to attribute it to a maneuver to dissociate himself from the failure because he has little to gain for the present. There is a good chance that Carter will win the election and he is unlikely ever to forgive him; nor would Vance resurface in political life if a Republican candidate won. Vance does not take away with him the mythical aura of a Kissinger which would enable him to enrich himself with his memoirs, books or lectures. His immediate fate appears to be that of returning to the law firm of Simpson, Thatcher and Bartlett. The only thing that he takes away with him is a fine gesture--something which is becoming unusual in present-day politics. And he leaves behind the irony that the only man who has lost his post--so far--is also the only man who was not responsible for the crazy plan and its failure; the only man who--at least, so he asserts--was opposed to it within the White House "inner circle."

LA VANGUARDIA URGES U.S. 'RESTRAINT' AFTER VANCE RESIGNATION

LD021127 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 29 Apr 80 p 7

[Editorial: "Vance, or Caution"]

[Text] Cyrus Vance advocated a foreign policy of caution and moderation. He always championed maintaining detente with the USSR and was the architect of SALT II. Over the issue of the Tehran hostages there can be no doubt that Vance's advice played a large part in the cautious line adopted for a long time by President Carter. But this caution had many powerful opponents in the United States--in political, parliamentary and military circles and in the administration itself. Vance repeatedly found himself placed in awkward or very humiliating situations--for instance, when he had to repudiate the U.S. vote in the Security Council in favor of self-determination for the Palestinians.

Vance advocated a balanced, coherent and flexible diplomacy, but the White House was subjected to very strong pressures which regarded such diplomacy as defeatist, weak and inhibited vis-a-vis a world in which every kind of threat and danger has been proliferating. The events in Iran and Afghanistan have been the acid test of Vance's policy. They have created extraordinary tension. The hardliners' viewpoint has gained ground in securing the support of a very intense emotional atmosphere. The dogged restraint with which Carter was handling the distressing and absurd problem of the hostages clearly constituted the focal point for the hawks. And the worst attacks against Vance's advice in this connection undoubtedly came from within the White House--specifically from presidential national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski who, 2 days before the failed rescue operation, said: "There comes a time when you have to stop talking and decide to act. As a superpower, the United States has a duty to act. It cannot content itself with talking eternally."

So has the time of the hawks come? The eight bodies of U.S. servicemen now being exhibited in Tehran and the dispersal of the hostages throughout the country demonstrate that the language of deeds has not been more effective for the present than the "words" to which Brzezinski referred. If Cyrus Vance's resignation means that Brzezinski's time has come, we must receive it with reservations. It will be a different matter if Carter indicates that he is not prepared to set aside the restraint and balance which are also necessary for a superpower. Schmidt has said that it has never been more necessary to have clear heads and calm hearts--an understandable viewpoint since the Germany of which Schmidt is chancellor is in the front line with respect to the Russian superpower which could seize Berlin with a rapid surprise attack and whose actions are not always dictated by caution--as has been demonstrated in Afghanistan. It is valid for Washington to decide on a policy of firmness, but it should do so without ignoring the great Bonn statesman's opinion.

ENVOY RECALLED FROM IRAN FOR ADVICE ON IRAN EMBASSY SEIGE

LD031010 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0916 GMT 3 May 80

[Text] The British ambassador to Tehran has recalled "to advise in the light of the events at the Iranian Embassy in London", the Foreign Office said today. Sir John Graham was on his way back to London this morning but is not known how long he will stay. The spokesman said Sir John will be consulting with people concerned with the present situation at the embassy.

It is the third time in recent weeks that Sir John has been recalled to London. The two previous trips involved the hostage crisis at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and British sanctions against Iran. Britain has already reduced its diplomatic staff in Tehran to four as part of the Common Market sanctions.

HOSTAGE SIEGE CONTINUES WITH NEW CONDITIONS FOR RELEASE

LD032046 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2039 GMT 3 May 80

[Text] An Iranian woman hostage in the London embassy siege was released tonight as the terrorists set new conditions for the release of their remaining hostages. The gunmen said the safety of the hostages would be secured if the London ambassadors from Algeria, Jordan and Iraq began negotiations with them and the government. At the same time they warned that everyone in the embassy would be harmed if there was any attempt to put the lives of the terrorists or the hostages at risk.

Deputy Assistant Commissioner Peter Nievens said the terrorists had pledged that the hostages would be safe as long as the government and police did not try to "kid" them. But if there was any attempt to put the lives of the terrorists or the hostages at risk, everyone in the embassy would be harmed, said the gunmen's statement. The terrorists requested that three ambassadors' together with an official of the Red Cross, should start negotiating with them and the government. The statement said the safety of the hostages--and themselves--would then be secured. If these conditions were met "the whole operation would be terminated peacefully."

The terrorists for the first time explained why they had chosen the London embassy for their attack. The statement said: "The reason we came to Britain to carry out this operation is because of the pressure and oppression which is being practised by the Iranian Government in Arabistan and to convey our voice to the outside world, through your country." The terrorists even apologized to the British people and the government for "this inconvenience." They said if any of the three ambassadors was unavailable, they could be replaced by the Libyan, Syrian or Kuwaiti ambassadors.

Mr Nievens said tense negotiations between the police and the terrorists for most of the day had led to the issue of the statement. It said: "We swear to God and to the British people and the government that no danger whatsoever will be inflicted on the hostages if government and police do not kid the group and do not subject the lives of the hostages and the group to any danger."

Two Hostages Released

LD032141 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2120 GMT 3 May 80

[Excerpt] Two Iranian hostages--one a pregnant woman--were released from the London embassy siege tonight.

The woman and a man were freed after the terrorists holding the Iranian Embassy in Kensington made new conditions for the release of their remaining hostages. An ambulance left the scene of the siege tonight, but police would not confirm that either of the released hostages were in it. The gunmen said the safety of the hostages would be secured if the London ambassadors from Algeria, Jordan and Iraq began negotiations with them and the British Government. But they warned that everyone in the embassy would be harmed if there was any attempt to put the lives of the terrorists or the hostages at risk.

Comments on Released Hostages

LD041734 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1610 GMT 4 May 80

[Text] Police were today piecing together clues to the identities of the Arab terrorists holding about 20 hostages in the London embassy siege. Encouraged by the release of two hostages on Saturday night, Deputy Assistant Commissioner John Dellow said today: "We are beginning to build up a picture. It's inevitable."

The gunmen, who have demanded the release of 91 political prisoners in Iran, set new conditions before freeing the hostages. They said the safety of their captives would be secured if the London ambassadors of Algiers, Jordan and Iraq, and a Red Cross official, began negotiations with them and the British Government. Police said a meeting was being held today between ambassadors "involved in the situation." Negotiations with the gunmen--thought to number between three and five-resumed this morning.

The release of the two hostages was a direct result of previous negotiations, said Mr Dellow. We are extremely encouraged that the hostage-takers took that particular line," he said. "Sometimes the hostage-takers are talkative. Other times they are not. We've got to go on the way we are going on to try to get more hostages out and bring this to a non-violent, satisfactory conclusion."

The terrorists warned on Saturday night that everyone in the Iranian Embassy in Kensington would be harmed if there was any attempt to put their lives or the lives of the hostages at risk.

The freed hostages--embassy secretary Mrs Haydeh Kanji, 23, who is three months pregnant, and Pakistani Mr Ghanzanfar Ali Gull, not an embassy employee--have been discharged from hospital after a check. A police spokesman said the two had been well looked after. "We are told all the hostages remaining inside are being well treated," he said. The hostages were being interviewed by police for details of conditions and the numbers of people inside the embassy. Medical supplies are understood to have been sent into the embassy today for one hostage suffering from stomach trouble. They were placed in a bucket attached to a pole poked out from a first floor window.

The gunmen, who burst into the embassy in Princes Gate on Wednesday, say they came to Britain to carry out their operation as a protest against "pressure and oppression" practised by the Iranian Government in their region of southern Iran. Iran has ruled out their demand for the release of prisoners and warned that it will take matters into its own hands if British authorities cannot resolve the siege.

Ambassadors, Hurd Meet

LD041735 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1643 GMT 4 May 80

[Text] Foreign Office Minister Mr Douglas Hurd today discussed the siege at the Iranian Embassy with two senior Middle East envoys. Mr Hurd met Shaykh Sa'ud al-Sabah, the Kuwaiti ambassador and Mr Kasim Ghazzawi, the Jordanian charge d'affaires.

A Foreign Office spokesman said they had called on Mr Hurd "to discuss how they might assist in resolving the occupation of the Iranian Embassy in London. The two representatives explained the positions of their governments and there was a useful exchange of views." It is understood that these brief talks are simply regarded as a preliminary exchange of views. The possibility of other envoys being invited to discuss the issue with Foreign Office ministers is not ruled out.

In their demands on Saturday, the gunmen said that the Algerian, Jordanian and Iraqi ambassadors should start negotiations between them and the British Government to end the siege. The gunmen said that if any of these three ambassadors was not available they could be substituted by the Libyan, Syrian or Kuwaiti ambassadors. It is unlikely that Iraq would be invited to negotiations since it is not regarded as a neutral party.

Later, a third Middle East envoy called at the Foreign Office at Mr Hurd's request. The Syrian ambassador, Mr 'Adnan 'Urman also spent 30 minutes with Mr Hurd "as part of the continuing consultations," according to a Foreign Office spokesman.

Additional Hostage Released

LD042238 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2128 GMT 4 May 80

[By Roger Tavener and Paul Harris, PA staff reporters]

[Excerpt] A fifth hostage was released from the Iranian Embassy in London tonight--on the fifth day of the siege in which Arab gunmen are holding about 20 people hostage. Police named the hostage released from the Iranian Embassy siege earlier this evening as Mustapha Karkouti, a 37-year-old Syrian journalist. The police spokesman said that Mr Karkouti had been suffering from stomach pains and was now receiving medical care but was not in a hospital. His release was the only dramatic moment of yet another wait-and-see day at the embassy within sight of the Albert Hall.

Telegram From Qotbzadeh

LD050744 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0626 GMT 5 May 80

[Excerpt] The siege at the Iranian Embassy today entered its sixth day. Mr Sadeq Qotbzadeh, Iranian foreign minister, has sent a telegram to the hostages. Police said early today that they were still considering whether to deliver it to the embassy. Mr Qotbzadeh said in the telegram that tens of thousands of Iranians were ready to enter the embassy, not with weapons but with cries of "Allah Akbar" (God is great). The telegram said that Iranians admired the steadfastness and forbearance of the hostages against the "criminal actions" of the Ba'thist Iraq as well as the forces of imperialism and international Zionism. "We fell certain you are already for martyrdom alongside your nation and do not expect the Iranian nation to pay ransom to the agents of world imperialism," the telegram said. "You must rest assured that we shall spare no effort for your release and should you so wish, and if need be, tens of thousands of Iranians are just ready to enter the premises of the embassy, not with weapons but with cries of Allah Akbar and thus bring punishment to these mercenaries of Ba'thist Iraq in the manner they deserve."

FRENCH EMBASSY EVACUATED AFTER BOMB THREAT

WA021200 London REUTER in English 0709 GMT 2 May 80

[Text] London, May 2, REUTER--Fifty staff members of the French Embassy in London were evacuated from the building this morning after a telephoned bomb threat, an embassy spokesman said. He said the staff left the building in Knightsbridge, central London, for about 15 minutes while it was searched, but nothing was found. The spokesman said the caller telephoned police and said a bomb would go off a quarter of an hour later. The embassy is less than a mile (one kilometer) from the Iranian Embassy, where gunmen are holding some 20 hostages.

GOVERNMENT CONSIDERING DIPLOMATIC BREAK WITH LIBYA

[David Adamson report: "Britain Warns Qadhdhafi"]

[Text] Britain is considering breaking off relations with Libya as a result of the Qadhdafi government's campaign of murder against opponents of the regime. Two enemies of the regime have been killed in London recently and two more in Rome. Representations have been made by Britain in Tripoli, the Libyan capital, and in London.

It is understood that a special British envoy, Sir Antony Acland, former British ambassador in Madrid, received no assurances that the assassinations would be stopped when he saw Major Jalloud, deputy to Colonel Qadhdhafi, in Tripoli. The Libyan leader has warned his enemies that they are "doomed" unless they surrender and return home.

Although Sir Antony's message to the Libyans has not been revealed, it is thought to have contined a strong warning that diplomatic relations would be broken off and Libyans representing or working in the government in London expelled, unless there was an end to violence.

CARRINGTON DISCUSSES GIBRALTAR, INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

LD021525 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 27 Apr 80 p 8

[Pablo Sebastian interview with British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington: "We Would Welcome Any Spanish Proposal on Use of Gibraltar Military Base"--date, place not given]

[Text] Question: Could you assess for us the current state of political, economic and cultural relations between the two countries?

Answer: Relations between Britain and Spain have become increasingly close since the restoration of Spanish democracy. I hope that this process will be accelerated. In the political field there have been many exchanges of visits by ministers and politicians since Adolfo Suarez was appointed prime minister in 1976. In the economic field our ties are close and will be more so when Spain joins the EC. Spain is one of Britain's most important customers and suppliers. In the cultural sphere, one thinks in the first place of the increasing interest in each other's languages. Last, tourism plays an important role in promoting the ties between our two countries.

Question: Spain is a country which is applying for entry to the EEC. What is the British stance?

Answer: Britain firmly supports Spain's entry into the EC. We hope that it will be possible to implement the scheduled Spanish entry program by the beginning of 1983. We are certain that it will be possible to decide on a mutually acceptable transitional period.

Question: What are the prospects for the negotiations on Gibraltar which were agreed on in Lisbon?

Answer: The negotiations will take time, and nobody can foresee their outcome. Of course, certain difficulties will arise, but with good will on both sides I am certain that they can be surmounted. The most immediate steps which must be taken over the next few weeks are those of discussing the necessary moves which must be made in order to lift the measures affecting free movement between Gibraltar and Spain. The Gibraltarians will take part in the British delegation.

Question: In previous exploratory talks the topic of Gibraltar was examined from three viewpoints--the position of the Gibraltarian population, sovereignty over the territory and the future of the military base. Do you regard this tripartite framework as valid?

Answer: As the text of the Anglo-Spanish statement makes clear, the two governments are prepared to discuss any proposal which the other side wishes to make. However, I hope that the negotiations will not be confined to these three topics but will cover as far as possible a broad range of issues, placing particular emphasis on practical cooperation based on mutual advantage.

"Neither To Confirm No Deny Presence of Nuclear Weapons"

Question: Do you believe that the future of the British base could find a bilateral solution along the lines of the treaty between Madrid and Washington? Could Britain guarantee that there are and will be no nuclear weapons at the Gibraltar Base?

Answer: I can see no reasons why the presence of the military installations in Gibraltar should be a problem between Spain and Britain. We would welcome any Spanish proposal on the use of these facilities. With respect to nuclear weapons, the British Government's policy is neither to confirm nor deny the presence of these weapons anywhere.

Question: Sovereignty over the Rock of Gibraltar and its inhabitants constitutes the principal topic and obstacle in the negotiations. How does Britain view this problem?

Answer: The wishes of the people of the territory cannot be disregarded when its future is being considered. I do not believe that any democratic state would attempt to do so. It is politically inconceivable for any British Government to force the Gibraltarians to accept any agreement with Spain against their wishes, and the British Government is formally pledged in the preamble to the 1969 Gibraltar Constitution never to enter into agreements under which the inhabitants of Gibraltar would pass under the sovereignty of another state against their freely and democratically expressed wishes. This pledge was reaffirmed in the 10 April Anglo-Spanish statement. The key lies in the Gibraltarians' attitude; they have had no contact with Spain for over 10 years. Inevitably, there have been fears and suspicions; these must be overcome. The Gibraltarians and the Spanish people must learn to live and work together and to cooperate for their mutual advantage. The process will probably be lengthy. But it is the only way to find a solution which is democratically acceptable to all the parties concerned.

"There Is Danger of Confrontation With USSR"

Question: Have the Iran and Afghanistan crises created, in your opinion, a real danger of world or regional war over the Persian Gulf? Are we experiencing a new crisis in relations between Europe and the United States?

Answer: The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has upset the delicate balance of power in an already unstable area of the world. The crisis over the hostages is distracting the Iranians' attention from the real nature of the threat looming over them. If the Soviet Union embarks on further expansion, whether in Pakistan or by exploiting the disorders in Iran, I am afraid that there really is a grave danger of direct confrontation with the Soviet Union.

Of course, we are maintaining close contact with the Americans over these problems. There is no crisis in our relations with the Americans.

Question: Don't the international situation and Britain's request to reduce its contribution to the EC budget confirm the existence of a political crisis within the EEC?

Answer: Not at all. The EC is a dynamic organization which has increased its international stature very significantly since its creation 25 years ago. It is currently contending with an internal problem concerning its budget. Nevertheless, the importance of the problem has been recognized, and we are certain that a solution can be found at the next EC Council of Ministers meeting. In addition, the EC is contending with the many problems posed by the gravity of the international situation. The EC has an important and distinctive contribution to make.

Question: Do you believe at present that the Madrid CSCE conference can be held at the envisaged date? Do you deem the subsequent disarmament conference sought by France necessary?

Answer: The approval of the 35 states taking part will be necessary in order to change the date of the meeting, and this is unlikely to happen. However, the most important aspect is that there are cogent political reasons for holding the meeting as planned; although the prospects have diminished, it will have increased importance as an opportunity for reassessing the implications of recent events. It is essential for the credibility of the progress of the CSCE that we tackle these implications. We continue to hope for full and balanced implementation of the Helsinki Final Act. The French proposal is an important contribution to the discussion of security issues. But the prospects for any conference on security after the Madrid conference will depend on a certain number of factors, including the progress of the Madrid meeting and international events.

LEADERS REACT TO TITO'S DEATH

LD042252 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1810 GMT 4 May 80

[Escerpts] Labour leader Mr James Callaghan said President Tito, who died today, was Yugoslavia's greatest son.

"The world has lost an outstanding leader," said Mr Callaghan. "He was a great soldier-statesman who led his fellow countrymen in peace and in war for 40 years.

"During his lifetime he secured the independence of Yugoslavia against all enemies and threats, and at the same time he successfully strengthened the internal unity of the Yugoslav people.

"He was one of the founders of the non-aligned group of Third World countries.

"Through his fidelity to socialist principles he became a strong influence in its developing years."

A statement from 10 Downing Street said: "The prime minister has learned with deep regret of the death of President Tito, a great statesman and leader of his people, who created modern Yugoslavia and ensured its lasting independence.

"He was Britain's staunch ally in war, and our countries became warm friends in peace."

The statement added that Mrs Thatcher had sent a message of condolence to the Yugoslav prime minister.

The prime minister's message to the Yugoslav Prime Minister Mr Veselin Djuranovic said:

"I was deeply saddened to hear of the death of President Tito, a great fighter, a fearless leader, and a courageous statesman.

"He created modern Yugoslavia and helped to fashion its proud tradition.

"His efforts, like Yugoslavia's independence, are recognised the world over.

"President Tito was a staunch ally of the United Kingdom in time of war and our countries became warm friends in peace.

"On behalf of her majesty's government I send you and the people of Yugoslavia our deepest sympathy at the sorrowful time."

A Downing Street spokesman said later Mrs Thatcher expected to attend President Tito's funeral.

But there is a problem for Mr Callaghan. He is due to leave next Friday for a two-week visit to China at the invitation of the Chinese Government.

ISTANBUL MARTIAL LAW COMMAND STATEMENT ON 30 APR INCIDENTS

TA021809 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 2 May 80

[Summary] "The 1st Army and Istanbul Martial Law Command's press and public relation bureau has issued a statement regarding incidents in Istanbul which occurred on Wednesday, 30 April." Incited by statements made by DISK [Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions] officials--despite various warnings by our command--on the meaning of the 1 May spring holiday and the way it should be celebrated, culminated in a statement by the DISK Executive Council issued on 28 April and in a written statement by the DISK leader dated 30 April and resulted in attempts to disrupt peace and order in Istanbul on the same day, to protest the denial of the DISK request to hold a rally and a march on May Day.

"Beginning at 0500 on 30 April, the following attempts were made in Istanbul to disrupt peace and order by workers employed by the Istanbul Municipality: The tires of most municipal buses were deflated, the ignition keys were removed, the buses were damaged and bus drivers were prevented from going to work. No cleaning workers reported for work on that day. Employees of the municipal technical department also did not show up for work. Workers of the municipal water departments in the district of Ferikoy and Central Istanbul were not allowed to enter their workshops. Municipal and certain private bakeries were prevented from baking bread. No cattle were slaughtered. Some officials of the district municipalities did not report for work."

It is hard to understand how such attempts directed at punishing Istanbul's citizens could be connected with workers rights. This irresponsible act by DISK has provoked other incidents in Istanbul in which unauthorized meetings were held, clashes occurred and classes were suspended. All these attempts were prevented by the effective and determined measures taken by the security forces and peace was restored in Istabul at 1030 on 30 April and prevailed through 1 May. The culprits accused of the above-mentioned crimes will be brought to justice.

"In a bid to prevent the arbitrary use of various strike and protest actions by trade union officials in municipalities--which are public institutions--to put an end to the annoying disruption of public services and to preserve public order in Istanbul, all strikes and lockouts in the Istanbul Municipality or district municipalities are subject to authorization by the martial law command. Occupation of municipal buildings, boycotts, work slowdowns and strikes have been definitely banned by the martial law command by its statement no 44, issued yesterday."

NSP REAFFIRMS SUPPORT FOR JUSTICE PARTY PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

TA301238 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Text] Justic Party leader and Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has met with National Salvation Party [NSP] leader Necmettin Erbakan on the presidential election issue. The meeting, which began at 1100 in Erbakan's office in parliament, lasted 45 minutes. In a statement after the meeting, Erbakan said that the internal and external events rendered the speedy election of a president extremely important. Erbakan noted that the reason that the Justice Party presidential candidate from Istanbul, Deputy Sadettin Bilgic, could not receive sufficient votes so far was dum to Justice Party's own internal problems. Replying to a question, Erbakan said that the NSP promise to support the Justice Party candidate is still valid.

In a statement after his meeting with Erbakan, Demirel said that he had asked Erbakan whether the NSP promise to support a Justice Party candidate was still valid and that he had received a positive answer. Demirel also noted that the Justice Party does not have a secret candidate.

CANADA

LEVESQUE REJECTS POLL SHOWING PUBLIC OPPOSES NEGOTIATIONS

LD300448 Montreal in English to Europe 2100 GMT 30 Apr 80

[Excerpt] Referendum, Quebec--Premier Levesque rejects the results of the latest Gallup Poll which shows a majority of Canadians refusing any form of negotiations with a sovereign Quebec. He says the people in the rest of Canada have been conditioned to accept what their provincial leaders say and Mr Levesque calls a proposal by Claude Ryan for a joint federal-provincial tax collection system the last straw. (Steve Boissoneau) has the details:

Earlier in the week Mr Levesque took great comfort from opinion surveys that showed most Canadians believe their governments should negotiate with Quebec. He said that showed the politicians who refused to negotiate with his province are obviously out of step with the majority of their electors. The latest poll seems to contradict all that, but Mr Levesque believes the desire to negotiate is still there. But according to him, it is just that in this latest survey question it was posed in such a way to condition people to say they would refuse to negotiate sovereignty association.

[Begin Levesque recording] Even with this conditioning it does confirm in my point of view the whole bag that the democracy and the democratic response eventually in Canada will be exactly the opposite of this stonewalling we are seeing from short-term politicians. [end recording]

Commenting on Claude Ryan's proposal to establish a joint federal-provincial tax collection agency, Mr Levesque said it is a complete abandonment of Quebec's traditional demands since the days of Premier Maurice Duplessis.

[Begin Levesque recording] This is the last straw. In other words, whatever fiscal liberty or freedom of action is left to Quebec basically would be handed over in the minority position to the federal government. I have never seen anything so rampant (?against) the potential Quebec positions since World War II when, in the circumstances, it was probably very coercive. The [name indistinct] government let go of all, practically all of the essential fiscal powers of Quebec. But this is not just in peacetime; this is when we are discussing the future orientation of Quebec. Such a working hypothesis is something unthinkable. [end recording]

Mr Levesque will be making the point in his speeches that the Ryan plan for renewed federalism not only prevents Quebec from moving ahead but, according to him, is a step backwards, by agreeing to give up gains already accepted in the battle over jurisdiction between Ottawa and Quebec.

KREISKY ANTICIPATES ANSWER TO JACOB JAVITS ON PLO

AU051312 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 3-4 May 80 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report: "Kreisky: Israel Needs Peace With Palestinians"]

[Text] Vienna/Washington (Red)--The crucial question is not whether there can be peace between Israel and the Arab world, but what matters is peace between Israel and the Palestinians. This is why Austria, too, has recognized the PLO. This statement, made by Chancellor Kreisky in a speech before the Wilton-Park conference in Vienna on Friday [2 May], will more or less be what Kreisky is going to say in his answer to the letter of Republican Senator Jacob K. Javits, a chancellery source declared on Friday. In his letter, Javits had asked Kreisky to explain to him the reasons why Austria was "the first democratic nation" to grant diplomatic recognition to the PLO.

As far as the Camp David agreement is concerned, Kreisky said, we are unfortunately witnessing a big failure, because the Arab states cannot afford to ignore the wishes of the Palestinians.

Regarding the chances of an understanding between Israel and the Palestinians, Kreisky remarked that 'Arafat told him and Brandt that only a fool could deny Israel's existence. However, such statements will be made publicly only if Israel recognizes in an adequate form the vital rights of the Palestinians. What the Palestinians want is to set up a small Palestinian state on the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip, in order to thus establish the identity they need. Certainly not all Palestinains would return into that state, but they would get a passport from there and would know that there is a little piece of earth where they would like to be buried.

Kreisky believes that there must be room for exploratory talks regarding the plan of Labor leader Peres, who rejects a separate Palestinian state, but wants to return all occupied territories with a few exceptions to Jordan, and the PLO demands.

Kreisky described the "subjective factors" of the situation as hopeless. When the Palestinians are ready for negotiations, the Israelis are not. And by the time they should ever be ready, it is not sure whether the Palestinians would still want negotiations, in view of the problems being adopted by Islamic fundamentalism. The coming 2 or 3 years will provide an answer to that, Kreisky said.

CUBA'S MALMIERCA REVIEWS AFGHANISTAN INITIATIVES WITH KREISKY

[Unattributed report: "Surprise Visit From Cuba"]

[Excerpt] Cuban Foreign Minister Isidor Malmierca Peoli, who is trying to mediate in the Afghanistan conflict and is making a tour for this reason through various countries, unexpectedly arrived in Austria on Thursday [1 May] and met with Chancellor Kreisky the same evening in Stockerau. Foreign Minister Malmierca Peoli informed Kreisky about the results of the talks he had conducted to date. The exchange of information--Cuba is the spokesman of the nonaligned countries--was continued on Friday in Vienna. According to Kreisky, the talk with the Cuban foreign minister has shown once more to what an extent the fields of tension in the world have shifted. At the time of the cold war they were located in Europe, in Berlin and in Yugoslavia. Today they are in Asia and are now endangering the measure of detente already achieved in Europe, he said.

The chancellor has repeatedly--among other places at a press conference in Belgrade--depicted Cuba as the key to solving the Afghanistan crisis, because on the one hand Cuba is in the best position to find out whether there is a possibility of compromise on the part of the USSR, while on the other it is presently chairman of the nonaligned nations. The Cuban foreign minister is said to have submitted to the chancellor a personal message from chief of state Fidel Castro. Further legs of Malmierca's tour are to be Iran, Sri Lanka and, as the last step, Yugoslavia.

AU051322 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 3-4 May 80 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report: "Secret Visit of Cuba's Foreign Minister to Vienna"]

[Excerpts] Vienna (GPE, A.U.)--On Thursday and Friday [1 and 2 May] Cuban Foreign Minister Malmierca paid a visit to Austria that was kept secret.

Malmierca informed Chancellor Kreisky about the Afghanistan initiatives undertaken by Cuba in its capacity as chairman of the nonaligned movement. According to a Vienna source, the chancellor merely allowed himself to be informed without giving any assessment of the Cuban efforts. The Cuban renewed the invitation to Kreisky, extended already through the Socialist Party floor leader [Heinz Fischer], to pay an official visit to Havana. During his talks in Vienna Malmierca also expressed concern over the U.S. maneuvers off Cuba that are to start on 8 May. Malmierca has come from Prague, and will proceed from Austria to Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia. Cuba is currently seeking to arrange a meeting between Afghanistan and Pakistan.

KREISKY LEAVES FOR FRG; ITINERARY OF VISIT

[Summary] Last night, 5 May, Chancellor Kreisky departed for Bonn. On his official visit to the FRG the chancellor is accompanied by his wife and a delegation including Burgenland Governor Theodor Kery and Chamber of Commerce Deputy Chairman Carl Schoenbichler. Today, Tuesday, Kreisky will meet with FRG President Carl Karstens and afterwards with FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. In the evening the delegation will proceed to Hamburg, where Kreisky will have talks with Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen and former Dutch Government chief Joop Den Uyl in their capacity as representatives of the Socialist International. The participation of Sweden's Olof Palme is still uncertain. On Wednesday, Kreisky will meet with North Rhine-Westphalia's Premier Rau in Duesseldorf; afterwards he will deliver a lecture in that city. He is scheduled to return to Vienna late Wednesday evening. "As Kreisky emphasized before his departure, there are no unresolved problems between Austria and the FRG. He added that, like himself, his counterpart Schmidt was convinced of the need to restore the policy of detente."

PEOPLE'S PARTY'S MOCK CALLS FOR 'LOYALTY TOWARD U.S.'

AU021515 Vienna KURIER in German 1 May 80 p 2

[Unattributed report: "Have the Preconditions for Our Neutrality Changed? Mock Calls for Loyalty Toward United States"]

[Text] On the second day of the Austrian People's Party's [OeVP] 2-day commemoration of the 25th anniversary of the Austrian State Treaty [30 April], OeVP Chairman Mock ventured into Chancellor Kreisky's very special field, that of foreign policy. The ideas he expressed differed considerably in some respects from the government's foreign policy.

Mock kept his review of the events that led to the State Treaty rather short. They had been extensively discussed on the first day of the event, as has been reported. Mock rather dealt with the question that is crucial for Austria: Are the preconditions that led to the conclusion of the State Treaty still unchanged? Does the Soviet Union still take the same interest in our neutrality?

Mock proceeded from the growing insecurity of the international situation and declared that especially in these days Austria should display particular loyalty toward the American people. "This loyalty should be clearly and unequivocally expressed especially today because I believe that in the past few days positions have been taken vis-a-vis the United States repeatedly that are neither in line with the feelings of the overwhelming majority of the Austrians nor withour foreign policy interests," he said.

Nor would a neutralist policy within the nonaligned bloc be appropriate for Austria and its self-conception. In this context, Mock charged Chancellor Kreisky with not having condemned the Afghanistan invasion as sharply as was done by [former OeVP Chancellors] Julius Raab regarding the suppression of the Hungarian uprising and Josef Klaus regarding the invasion of the CSSR. "What must not happen is a blurring of positions, since Austria's security is last but not least dependent on the West's feeling of solidarity. A sliding into grey zones--in any way whatsoever--is thus bound also to affect our security," the OeVP chairman declared.

The fact that Austria is embedded in the Western community of states must not lead to the false conclusion that this alone is enough to guarantee the country's security. What also is needed is the Austrian people's will to defense and an unreserved "yes" for the Austrian Army. Only then will it be possible to enjoy the fruits of the State Treaty even in times of insecurity, he said.

SCHMIDT MAY MEET WITH EAST EUROPEAN LEADERS IN BELGRADE

[Excerpts] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is prepared to meet several leaders from East Europe for separate talks following the obsequies for the late Yugoslav head of state Josip Broz Tito on Thursday in Belgrade. In Bonn government circles today said meetings between Schmidt and SED chief Erich Honecker, and other East bloc party chiefs such as Eduward Gierek (Poland) and Janos Kadar (Hungary) are thought likely. Bonn sources mentioned such topics as the crises in Afghanistan and Iran for discussion at possible summit meetings by the chancellor. Against this background an exchange of opinions between Schmidt and India's Premier Indira Gandhi is also thought possible.

Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling was still unable to tell the press today what talks the chancellor will have in Belgrade. However, he referred to remarks by a Yugoslav interlocutor that it would surely be Tito's wish that the occasion should be used for meetings between politicians.

Meanwhile, the Federal Government has given a basically positive interim decision to the recently renewed Moscow invitation for the chancellor to visit the Soviet Union in June. It was learned from government circles that Secretary of State at the Foreign Ministry Guenter van Well told Soviet Ambassador to Bonn Vladimir Semenov on Saturday that Schmidt would like to accept the invitation, but had not yet decided on a date. Van Well had asked the Soviet ambassador to meet him, after arrangements with the chancellor and foreign minister.

Circles close to the chancellor confirmed today the government leader's determination in principle to visit Moscow. The same source pointed out that Schmidt favored a visit to head of state and party Leonid Brezhnev during the period between the Western economic summit meeting in Venice at the end of June and the start of the Olympic summer games on 19 July, preferring that period to a date after the games.

It is also pointed out that the government continues to be in touch with the Western powers concerning the Moscow trip. The American leadership has so far given neither a positive nor negative reaction. Bonn believes it can recognize signs of skepticism by Washington towards Schmidt's chances of positive results in Moscow at present. However, it is said that the American leadership has not yet formed its official view. In the view of these Bonn circles the intended meeting between the new American Secretary of State Edmund Muskie and his Soviet counterpart Andrey Gromyko in Vienna in mid-May have a beneficial effect on Schmidt's Moscow trip.

A trip by the federal chancellor to Moscow has to be thoroughly prepared "in coordination with our Allies and through talks with the Soviet Union." This was stressed by Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in an interview for BILD-ZEITUNG (Tuesday edition). According to the paper, Genscher warned against getting hopes too high on the outcome of the Moscow trip. Asked whether Helmut Schmidt could mediate between the superpowers, Genscher said: "No, a mediator would have to stand between the two blocs. We, however, are part of the West and act in accordance with our membership in this defense alliance."

Schmidt-Brezhnev Meeting Unlikely

[Summary] Bonn-Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will most probably not have a meeting with Soviet party boss Leonid Brezhnev at President Tito's funeral in Belgrade on Thursday.

Bonn government circles pointed out today that meetings between Brezhnev and other Western leaders were not envisaged and that Schmidt was preparing for a visit to Moscow, which Bonn envisages as taking place between the end of June and mid-July.

However, Bonn firmly expects a meeting to take place between the chancellor and SED head Erich Honecker if Honecker goes to Tito's funeral. Government circles pointed to Schmidt's readiness for such a meeting and said they also expected Honecker to be interested in talks with Schmidt.

SCHMIDT: NEITHER SUPERPOWER HAS 'CONVINCING STRATEGY' AGAINST CONFLICT

[Text] Bonn--Despite the Afghan and Iranian crises Federal Chancellor Schmidt sees no alternative to the policy of detente. In an interview with ZEITUNG AM SONNTAG published by the SPD press service today Schmidt says that there is very great awareness not only in the West but in the Eastern countries as well that it is necessary to maintain the equilibrium and cooperation between the blocs in order not to endanger what had been achieved so far. The Western alliance including the Federal Republic must play its part in preventing an aggravation of the conflicts and to reactivate the dialogue between the United States and the USSR.

In the chancellor's opinion one of the principal dangers to world peace lies in the fact "that in the present crisis situation neither of the two world powers possesses a convincing strategy for preventing an unwanted armed conflict." The equilibrium of military forces in East and West is a prerequisite for the preservation of peace, Schmidt said. To preserve and strengthen this equilibrium he will employ all means at his disposal vis-a-vis both the Western allies and the neighbors in the East.

LEADERS NOTE ANNIVERSARY OF ENTRY INTO NATO ALLIANCE

Schmidt: 'No Alternative'

LD051340 Hamburg DPA in German 1231 GMT 5 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today paid tribute to the North Atlantic Alliance as a "vital basis for the external security" of the Federal Republic and as a link of "togetherness between Europe and the United States." The chancellor said in a statement published in Bonn on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the FRG's entry into NATO that the alliance guaranteed peace and freedom and connected Europe with North America.

According to Schmidt there exists "for us no alternative to the North Atlantic Alliance." NATO had furnished proof of that the crises of the past few months. "We know that a surprise such as in Afghanistan cannot occur in Western Europe." It remained the alliance's central task to maintain the balance of power between East and West. According to Schmidt it will continue to be important to maintain the collective character of the alliance of equal partners. This includes that open and trusting consultations between the partners should take place as a matter of course, and that everybody should continue to believe that the safeguarding of peace and equilibrium remains the highest task of the alliance inside and outside of NATO. In his statement, Schmidt emphasized the "historic course set in our country" by joining NATO 25 years ago. With this step the Federal Republic "unequivocally joined the ranks of Western democracies who have accepted the same basic values as ourselves."

GENSCHER SENDS LETTERS TO ALLIES

[Excerpt] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has paid tribute to the significance of the Paris Treaties with the three Western allies which came into force 25 years ago on 5 May 1955, and which turned the Federal Republic into a sovereign state. At the same time, the FRG also became an equal partner in the North Atlantic Alliance.

In letters to the foreign ministers of the United States, Great Britain and France, published in Bonn on Monday, Genscher emphasizes that these treaties were the foundation for the close and trusting cooperation between the Federal Republic and the three Western allies in all questions which concerned Berlin and Germany as a whole. This joint action had essentially contributed over the past 25 years "towards safeguarding peace, assuring the viability of Berlin, and softening the consequences of a divided Germany and Europe." The Federal Republic would continue to work for peace in Europe." The Federal Republic would continue to work for peace in Europe in which the German people, in free self-determination, would regain its unity.

In their replies, also published in Bonn, the three foreign ministers assured Bonn of their continued support for Bonn's objectives. All three foreign ministers, in their replies, said they share Genscher's view on the significance of the treaties.

Apel on Importance of Consultations

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Republic is a reliable partner in the NATO Allia... This is underlined by Defense Minister Hans Apel in the SPD press service to mark the 25th anniversary of the Federal Republic's joining NATO. Political and military cohesion in NATO is firmer than ever. The partners in the alliance are clearly aware of the fact that, in view of the political and military situation in Europe, there can be no national security which relies solely on its own resources. No West European country can ensure its existence by its own strength alone. Without U.S. assistance Europe would be exposed to political pressure and political blackmail.

Apel points out that there have been several crises which have seemed to threaten the existence of the alliance. In the interests of their security, however, all partners have upheld the continuation of cooperation. An essential factor for the alliance's continued existence is the process of consultations among the partners regardless of their size. Solidarity is not a one-way street. There are no different ranks of membership. Changes arising from new political challenges will be confronted jointly following consultations among the alliance partners.

GENSCHER SPEAKS ON SOLIDARITY WITH U.S., ALLIANCE

DW051130 Bonn Foreign Ministry Information Bulletin in German 4 May 80

[Prerelease of speech by Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher to the Association of German-American Clubs in Karlsruhe on 4 May]

[Excerpt] America has helped and is helping us to protect our freedom against outward threats--the Berlin airlift is an unforgotten symbol of this help even today. This engagement simultaneously meant an historic change in the American policy toward world political responsibility. The role played by America in Europe has shaped not only postwar developments in Europe, but has simultaneously sharpened the awareness of the American public regarding U.S. worldwide commitments and the preservation of peace.

We know that we can also rely on that engagement in future. Our gratitude and respect is extended to the American soldiers in Europe. Their continued presence are indispensable for our security. We know that this service--thousands of miles away from home--is not always easy for them.

We have met here in Karlsruhe at a time of difficult and alarming developments in international politics. Hotbeds of conflict exist in all parts of the world: Afghanistan, Iran, and the Middle East are the main subjects of attention. But we must not underrate certain developments in Africa, the situation in Kampuchea and developments in Central America with regard to their long-term significance.

The question as to the concept of the West vis-a-vis these different hotbeds of conflict, which are most different with regard to their origin, development and danger, is necessary and justified. But it must not make one forget that Europe's action in this situation is of worldwide political significance. Whether the West as a whole in a critical world political situation can make its contribution safeguarding peace and to stability in the world is dependent on this action. Europe is called on to show a clear stance and make a decision.

A Soviet political strategy aimed at a gradual loosening of ties between Europe and the United States is bound to fail. The dogged effort to stress allegedly different interests of the Europeans or even to depict the alliance of Western Europe with the United States as curtailing detente policy could be considered the propagandistic accompanying music of such a policy.

In past days there have been Soviet press statements giving the impression that a switch from pmopaganda to threat is taking place. One can only warn against a continuation along that line. We will not be intimidated. The alliance to which we make a considerable contribution provides effective protection against pressure and threat.

Only a clear analysis of Soviet policy will enable us to implement our own interests in a way that will safeguard peace, which means also recognizing legitimate interests of the other side and taking them into consideration. We do not view the world just from our stance. We know that peace, stability and cooperation will be possible only if the interests of the other side are seen, only if we do not ignore its concerns and possibly also its fears--expressed in an exaggerated security need--as factors of international policy, and only if we include them in our considerations. But the limit is reached when balance is supposed to be replaced with predominance.

The worldwide Soviet striving for power policy influence--now expressed by wars by proxy in Africa and Southeast Asia and by the occupation of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union--brings the Soviet Union into contradiction not only with the states of the Western world, but also those of the nonaligned movement.

The Western answer in the Third World, therefore, can consist only of supporting the independence and sovereignty of nonaligned states. The West in no case should make the mistake of transplanting the East-West contrast in the Third World or of striving for power spheres and spheres of influence. There cannot be the slightest doubt that the compass to history is set on a pluralistic world of independent, sovereign states. Amid this development, he who attempts to force his own state and social system on Third World countries and who believes in maintaining his own interests by aiming for dominance over other countries will come up against the wheel of history.

The African reaction to Soviet policy and the worldwide reaction to the occupation of Afghanistan are beginning signs of reaction. During this decisive phase, the more clearly the West is shown as a credible advocate of the independence and sovereignty of the countries of the Third World, the less will be the chances for a further power policy advance by the Soviet Union.

The credibility of Western policy vis-a-vis the Third World depends on three different elements.

1. Renunciation of predominance and of exerted influence must be clearly recognizable everywhere.

2. The West must fully use its opportunities with regard to the economic development of these countries without consequently making these countries into dependencies.

3. The West must actively cooperate in the peaceful solution of the Third World's hotbeds of conflict.

The achievement of Zimbabwe's independence through free and just elections is an example of successful efforts aimed at the peaceful solution of conflicts. Corresponding efforts are necessary for Namibia and for overcoming racial discrimination in the Republic of South Africa. The West must also play an active role in achieving a far-reaching, lasting, just and peaceful solution in the Middle East, in the framework of which the Palestinian people's right to self-determination must also be implemented.

What is important in Europe is to ensure peace for the future through a Western alliance capable of acting. This alliance alone can form the basis for a policy of active efforts toward peace that will hold promise. I am convinced that the Soviet Union, too, does not want to endanger peace, yet it is determined to expand its sphere of power and influence wherever it deems the concomitant risk justifiable.

It will quite basically depend on the Western attitude as to whether the Soviet Union's receptiveness to taking risks will increase or decrease. For this reason the West cannot and must not regard the occupation of Afghanistan as a kind of traffic accident and dismiss it as such. The West can offer the Soviet Union security through balance in Europe.

Thus, our efforts toward balance constitute a factor for our own security and that of the Soviet Union, meaning that we can satisfy the justified security needs of the Soviet Union while fully retaining our own security requirements. What cannot and must not be satisfied is the endeavor for power-policy superiority.

At this point it is necessary to answer the question of whether detente policy, as initiated in the past decade, was a correct decision or not. The question must be answered in the affirmative, without restrictions. Detente has made an essential contribution toward the mitigation of causes of conflict, the localization of conflicts and the strengthening of East-West contacts. Visible evidence of that is the treaty policy of the FRG, the Quadripartite Agreement on Berlin, and the Helsinki Final Act. Detente policy in Europe will have a lasting basis, however, only if the will for a peaceful balance of interests proves its worth in other parts of the world as well.

Detente is and remains indivisible. From the very onset Western detente policy has been based on the concept of the Harmel Report which considers the defense capability the precondition for detente policy. Danger would arise for Western security only when the West expressly or de facto were to approve of an aspiration to superiority which the Soviet Union terms military detente.

Europe must make it unequivocally clear once again that it is and wants to be a part of the West, and it must do so not as a present to the United States but in the pursuit of its own European interests. The Western alliance serves the security of Europe and of America. The word solidarity is misused when it is understood as acting in the interests of another. In truth, solidarity means joint action for common interests.

The Western alliance differs from an old-style military alliance. It is a community for safeguarding peace and freedom based on identical concepts of values and identical interests.

It is only an unequivocal adherence to the alliance which can ensure balance, and thus also the prerequisites for realistic detente, arms control and disarmament policies. Our concept of actively ensuring peace requires security through balance, applicable to both sides.

The way we see it, this balance is to be realized on as low a level as possible. Proof of that is the offer of negotiations on medium-range weapons decided upon by the Western alliance and the United States and repeatedly submitted to the Soviet Union. The same is true for the proposal to set up a European disarmament conference at the CSCE followup conference which would be held at the ministerial level. The same applies to the proposals concerning the troop reductions in Central Europe. The same holds true for the proposal on the agreement on confidence-creating measures.

These efforts toward disarmament and arms control will be successful only if the negotiating positions of the West are clearly and unequivocally advocated. Any attempt to soften up the West's negotiating proposals from within will jeopardize rather than promote negotiations.

The Western package for negotiations of December 1979 is one of the broadest disarmament efforts made since the end of World War II. It is realistic because it does not pursue any unilateral advantages for the West, but properly takes into account the security interests of the other side. Our will for disarmament and our capability to preserve the alliance's ability to act must prove their worth in the consistent advocacy of these proposals and in the likewise consistent implementation of the decision on the closure of the arms gap.

In this decisive phase of politics we must leave no doubt about the fact that any attempt to separate Europe from the United States will fail. Hence, the central objective of European policy cannot be national or bilateral European action, but only action through our solid position in the Western alliance. Europe's place is not between the two world powers; the United States and Europe are equal alliance partners defending common security. This common security forms the basis of our freedom within and without. It is also the sole basis for the efforts toward mitigating tensions, for arms control and disarmament. Anyone who believes that European freedom of movement may now be put into play must know that it is this Atlantic Alliance which they have to thank for this very freedom of movement. Anyone who suggests that the United States is less guided by the will for peace than are the Europeans violates the basis of confidence in the alliance whose goal is securing peace.

In the current discussion people also refer to the German situation, which is appropriate as long as our interests are not defined as being at odds with our membership in the alliance and with our cooperation with the United States. We must always keep in mind that all progress in divided Germany would be, and is possible only in concert with our partners and allies. The goals of our policy on Germany can be realized only jointly with our Western partners and not without them.

One of the most important documents of postwar history is the treaty on Germany, with tomorrow being the 25th anniversary of its coming into effect. In this treaty the three powers--the United States, France and the United Kingdom--identify themselves with the objectives of our policy on Germany; they avow our responsibilities. Many documents of the subsequent period include all of our partners, not just these three, in the common objectives. What is just as significant is the actual support we have been given for our German concerns at every opportunity. This is why our affiliation with the Western community and the North Atlantic Alliance is expressive of the common interest, also with the regard to the national problem of the Germans.

The awareness that the alliance and the community are communities of destiny for freedom based on common security interests and common concepts of values also comprises the elements of the policy on Germany listed in the letter on German unity. This finding underscores our conviction that the interests of the Germans and their pursuit are the expression of Western unity and not of different interests in the Western alliance, the solidarity between Europeans and Americans, as well as the solidarity between Germans and Americans. Hence our cooperation in the alliance does not constitute any variance with the interests of the nation which is divided into two states. On the contrary, our compatriots in the GDR are aware that our freedom spells their hope.

Berlin and the attitude of the United States toward Berlin are veritably a symbol of common rather than controversial interests. We will never forget that.

What is and remains an important precondition for the Western alliance's ability to function is mutual consultation. This is not a new problem, nor should it be treated as such. What we need here is a mutual, sincere effort rather than public carping and hurt vanities.

The efforts of the Europeans should now be aimed at solving their own problems. These also include the solution of the British membership fee problem. Europe will not enhance its weight in international politics through unilateral actions jeopardizing its security, but only through evidence of its ability to act. Its influence in the alliance on the jointly prepared policies depends on its own internal cohesion.

At this point two positive findings are indicated. The United States is not an opponent to but an advocate of European unity. It has recognized that a Europe speaking with one voice is a better partner for the United States than a disunited Europe. And in Europe there is no difference of opinion between the FRG and France--without whose cooperation Europe is incapable of uniting--about the necessity and ability of the Atlantic Alliance to act. President Giscard d'Estaing is a guarantor of the unequivocal avowal of this alliance by France.

Ladies and gentlemen, we know that we can depend on the United States at all times, just as we have in the past. The American people must know that as far as we are concerned, this is not a one-way street; it also applies reciprocally. I say this not only on behalf of the Federal Government. I can also state this on behalf of the parties in the Bundestag; I can say it on behalf of the citizens of our country. This makes our policy predictable for our friends and for all those in the world whom it may concern. Predictability is an important contribution toward safeguarding peace.

PAPERS COMMENT ON DEATH OF YUGOSLAVIA'S TITO

DW051005 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 5 May 80

[Press review]

[Text] Tito, Yugoslavia's head of state and party, died yesterday at the age of 87. The life and work of this statesman concern the editorial writers today just as much as does the question about the future.

The Kassle HESSISCHE NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE advocates this view: With Tito's death, the last state leader of the World War II era has stepped off the political stage. For more than 35 years guerrilla Josip Broz Tito headed Yugoslavia as the chief of the party, the government and the army. He was the symbol and simultaneously the guarantor of the unity of a multinational state which he helped liberate and which he led onto an independent road toward socialism. The nonaligned Balkan republic has lost its respected and beloved father figure whose authority was great enough to hold together to this day the nationalities and religions which had been hostile for centuries. With the demise of the marshal, the independence and unity of the republic are more in jeopardy than ever before.

SCHWARZWAELDER BOTE stresses: What was decisive for Tito's career was a sober sense of realities, a sense of perspective and a high degree of tactical dexterity--as well as an outstanding sense of individual dignity and independence. In his case, flexibility and inexorability did not rule each other out. Thus he was staunch enough to defy even Stalin. Will his successors also be capable of threatening Moscow?

The Muenster WESTFAELISCHE NACHRICHTEN writes about Tito's life: Twice he resisted a superior adversary--the divisions of Hitler and the party cadres of Stalin. He tamed the multinational chaos of Serbs and Croats, Slovenians and Bosnians, Macedonians and Montenegrins as well as the Albanian, Hungarian and other minorities and turned it into a working state. He ventured his own variety of communism under which there is not great but still a small amount of personal liberty. He experimented with an economic system which sought to combine socialist and market economy features and scored some success in doing so: In this manner he obtained for his citizens at least a standard of living which is essentially above the East bloc level. But in the end he did die in the justified concern that his work might disintegrate from one day to the next, because the most important tie that held the whole together was Tito himself.

The editorial of WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE reads in part: To secure the individual course of his country, also internationally, Tito took the initiative in establishing the nonaligned movement whose neutral position between the superpowers he defended consistently against all attempts of Soviet influence from the Belgrade founding congress in 1961 up to the Havana meeting of 1979. Therefore, it was last but not least his merit, too, that the countries of the Third World, at the last UN General Assembly, condemned the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan with a vast majority.

Next is the Heidelberg RHEIN-NECKAR ZEITUNG: Distorted by hate and admiration, the judgment of Josip Broz Tito by future generations will be divergent. The principle of antiquity--not to let anything but that which is good count regarding a person--will not be observed by all contemporaries who judge his eventful fate by the yardsticks of a particular moment. The mourning peoples of Yugoslavia, to whom he had become a father figure no matter how much those seeking more freedom denied him this role, are filing by the bier with heads bowed: The future they must cope with without him is burdening them already at this hour.

WIESBADENER KURIER comments as follows: Suddenly a whole mountain of question marks is accumulating because the faults and weaknesses of this state have survived the old man. There is no successor. Tito invented the strange rotation principle which harbors the germ of trouble. Each year somebody else is to play president--sometimes a person from Croatia, sometimes a person from Macedonia, and so forth. The partial republics and autonomous governments will presumably return to living their own lives which have so far been kept within limits by Tito's authority and, in many cases, even brutality. His shadow will probably delay the test of strength but it will definitely come. And the question about whether the famous call on Moscow for help will then be made by somebody who would like to become governor haunts many people, and not just in Yugoslavia.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG advocates this view: The efforts of the physicians to retain the last spark of life in the body of the man who has long been incapable of acting has paid off politically. His heirs had more than 4 months in which to divide up the power behind closed doors. Only the future will show, however, whether they succeeded in doing this. For like nearly all great men of history before him, the Yugoslav dictator, too, has not settled his succession in such clear terms that it would not veritably provoke quarrels. The stability of the Balkan region which Tito has so far guaranteed, a stability which is not perfect yet adequate for avoiding conflicts, will be lacking for Europe especially in view of the world situation which is aggravating to the point of a crisis.

The following is the view of Essen's NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG: Anybody knows that what happened in Prague in 1968 will not repeat itself in Yugoslavia. Tito's heirs would fight. Tito's policy of nonalignment has ained new significance since Afghanistan. More than 50 percent of all nonaligned countries condemned the Soviet invasion jointly with Yugoslavia and the West. This condemnation of Moscow was Tito's last political word on the international stage. It was at the same time an important word for the independence of all countries, regardless of ideology and form of government. The world cannot cut off hope that this spirit will survive the era of Tito--first and above all in his country. Calm is the first commandment for the citizens there now.

STUTTGARTER ZEITUNG, too, visualizes great problems: Must the temptation not become irresistible to the Soviets now, after Tito's death, to simply take the Mediterranean ports whose use as naval bases they so often requested of Tito in vain? But no matter who has the say in the Kremlin, they will not venture a hazardous game in Yugoslavia, because Belgrade is not Kabul. There is no common border between Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union. And if worse came to worst the Yugoslavs would be prepared morally, and trained militarily enough to give the invaders a Vietnam war in Europe which would be far surpass the Southeast Asian model. This prospect alone already prohibits the Kremlin from the direct military reach for Yugoslavia.

SUEDKUERIER comes out with a similar assessment of the situation. But the paper goes on to ask: But what will happen if there is somebody who invites them, like in Prague in 1968 and in Kabul in 1979; if somebody in the 31 members of the collective leadership calls for help? The United States for its part a few weeks ago offered protection to the country on the Adriatic Sea, if needed. Belgrade took this promise extremely seriously. Yet it is not as clear as it would seem at first glance, and it also allows delaying tactics. The Europeans, characterized by anything but determined cohesion in the Afghanistan crisis, likewise have offered Tito's heirs a helping hand. The trade agreement between Yugoslavia and the EC ratified a few weeks ago classifies the Balkan state as an independent, nonaligned Mediterranean and developing country. The export economy will profit from this agreement. The consequence will be a consolidation of trade and industry between the Mediterranean and the Danube. But the stabilization of the economy is also a guarantee for a long-term development of politics free of convulsions especially here, at the interface between the blocs, says SUEDKUERIER.

In conclusion, a quotation from the daily DIE WELT: Yugoslavia remains a communist country, namely, a country in which a communist party rules all alone. But at the same time it is a country which has dissociated itself from the Soviet model. The post-Tito Titioism is a hybrid system with many contradictions and everything has not as yet been decided. But what is important to the West, first of all, is that the new men are willing to defend independence and thus their country's own road.

NEWSPAPERS APPLAUD MUSKIE AS STATE DEPARTMENT CHIEF

DW020830 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 1 May 80

[Press review]

[Text] LUEBECKER NACHRICHTEN writes about the nomination of the new U.S. Secretary of State Muskie: At a moment when his government threatened to fall apart, when the populace reacted in an insecure way, and when friendly governments hardly could conceal their concern about the course of the United States, Jimmy Carter achieved a masterpiece. He made Senator Edmund Muskie the successor of resigned Secretary of State Cyrus Vance. In Bonn, Paris, Tokyo and London there is no need any more to ask oneself whether the "hawk" Zbigniew Brzezinski has taken over completely, as it seemed to be the case after the resignation of Vance. This is not the case. Muskie is a counterbalance that cannot be ignored.

GENERAL-ANZEIGER of Bonn states: With Muskie heading the State Department, the United States will become more predictable. The man from Maine is a friend of detente, an advocate of disarmament and of a friendly solution of the crises in the Near East, Iran and Afghanistan. Regarding the Soviet Union, Muskie said in early December that one must accept it as a nieghbor with rights, hopes and fears, even if it has another political philosophy. But, similar to Carter, the "dove of Maine" was disappointed by the action in Afghanistan. He did not conclude, however, that no hope remains for understanding. He suggested to begin the whole process once more from the beginning, this time, however, with more skepticism with regard to Soviet promises.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG maintains: Compared with the reserved diplomat Vance, his successor has the invaluable advantage that his voice carries great weight in Congress. Innumerable failures of the chief of state have been caused by his underdeveloped relations with parliament. Muskie will bring along the prerequisites without which fruitful cooperation between the government and the public representation will not work. Carter has won a combatant who is in command of the complicated parliamentary business. With Muskie's help the President could succeed in improving his ability to prevail. This would be a gain for the United States and for the Western alliance which is suffering hard from Carter's domestic political weaknesses. The applause caused by Muskie's nomination in Western capitals stems from a feeling of relief.

GISCARD INTERVIEWED ON TITO'S DEATH, COMMUNITY ISSUES

LD052310 Paris Domestic Television Service in French 1800 GMT 5 May 80

[Interview with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing by French television correspondents Jean-Marie Cavada, Martine Anareigno and Francois de Clauzet on program entitled "1 Hour With the President" from the Elysee Palace in Paris--live]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr President, Marshal Tito's disappearance last night increases our concern, the people of the West. Must Western solidarity with Yugoslavia be strengthened? Must we French people draw a lesson from the more than 30 years of resistance [words indistinct] pursued in Yugoslavia by the last of the great historic leaders, first against the Nazis and then against Stalin?

[Answer] The disappearance of President Tito is, first of all, a thing to mourn. It is a cause for mourning by the Yugoslav people, which France has many reasons to know, since France was, as you know, associated with the birth of Yugoslavia. And, therefore, it is an occasion on which the French people address their condolences to the Yugoslav people.

As far as political consequences are concerned, the agony, the very long agony of President Tito led to the setting up of arrangements which came into force immediately after his passing, and thus there will not be any political vacuum, or institutional vacuum in Yugoslavia.

On the other hand, Yugoslavia's foreign policy is completely determined, known, and will continue to be pursued, I have no doubt, by the present Yugoslav leaders. Therefore, in the present circumstances there is no reason for anyone to modify their attitude toward Yugoslavia, whether to exert pressure on it or to offer at the present time support which the country does not need. [passage indistinct] and which France respects and will respect, in the coming period, the will of the Yugoslav people for independence.

[Answer] France will be represented at a very high level at Marshal Tito's funeral. It will be represented by the prime minister and by the minister of foreign affairs. The funeral will, in fact, be held on 8 May. I have two obligations on that day. First, in the morning, I will be commemorating the anniversary of the 1945 Armistice in the company of non-commissioned officers of the French Army, which represents a part of our military tradition and [words indistinct]. Then, in the evening, I will be in Nice to receive several African heads of state, who will have come to take part in our French-African conference [words indistinct]

[Question] We French people are very much interested by what fate has in store for us in the immense European crisis, which you have witnessed yourself, and in connection with which you have been involved in negotiations. I ask this question because the nine European ministers of agriculture will meet in Luxembourg tomorrow. If, unfortunately for Europe, they cannot reach an agreement, are you in favor of an agricultural policy among nine, or eight, or do you want to take independent national measures?

[Answer] This crisis, this great difficulty--the word crisis is overly used--this great difficulty was to be foreseen. What would have been a surprise, a great surprise, is if an agreement had been reached. We already knew, in fact, of the considerable demands of some of our partners, and these demands have been such that a great surge of good will would have been needed in order to reach an agreement.

This good will--we have shown it. And others besides us have shown it during the Luxembourg conference. I would say that Chancellor Schmidt's proposal--which I accepted although it was burdensome both for Germany and France and which I still supported--shows that we wanted, in fact, to be able to reach an agreement. Why did we want this? First of all, because of the subjects under discussion, of course, but it was also because under the present international circumstances to display among European leaders this long quarrel on figures or percentages was, I must say, somewhat derisory in relation to the real issues of our time. So we wanted to succeed. We made gestures toward success, but we did not succeed.

There were the subjects under discussion. One subject, which is absolutely normal, is that of the annual fixing of agircultural prices. I remind you that agricultural prices in Europe are fixed, and that they are fixed once a year. This fixing must be done by 1 April for certain produce--mainly animal produce, that is milk and meat--and by 1 July or 1 August for vegetable products, that is cereals and root crops, because this is the time of their annual production. So here we are in a debate that must be settled by its normal time, which is done every year and which must result in the fixing of agricultural prices.

And then we had a second debate--quite a separate one--which was at the request of one of our partners, Great Britain, asking that the existing rules--the ratified rules which fix the amount of its contribution--should be modified--a contribution which it considered too heavy and which it wanted reduced. So you see, there were two different subjects coming up at the same Council meeting.

Regarding the first subject, agriculture, what has happened? We have asked that the meeting go forward. The ministers of agriculture have met and a proposal was put to them by the Commission. The Commission has proposed--one can summarize it by saying an increase in agricultural prices of five percent, accompanied by a certain number of other measures. I would remind you that for France it should have been a little over 10 percent. [passage indistinct] There was on the annual problem a proposal approved by eight countries, and now it is necessary that the normal procedure should not result in its implementation. And to this end the ministers of agriculture will meet to follow up this proposal--and this agreement of eight countries out of nine.

The Community must do its work. Our ministers of agriculture and foreign affairs will ask our partners: The heads of state and government have confirmed, among eight, the agreement on agricultural arrangements. You are ministers of agriculture. Put this agreement into concrete form and let us see how we can make it work. And if this procedure should become impossible, we in France will see how we can--in a Community spirit and respecting the rules, of course--how we can ensure that the purchasing power of French farmers can be maintained in 1980.

At present Great Britain can choose between two attitudes. Either, as you say, it may decide that in fact the arrangements do not suit it, and in that case there must be a renegotiation according to the renegotiation forms, which means on the basis of profound work on proposals. Or, on the contrary, Great Britain may take the view that it accepts the arrangements and that it is simply the amount that is too heavy for it for a determined period. And then there are the proposals such as we made and which have been withdrawn by Chancellor Schmidt--withdrawn, because he considered them very generous and in face of the refusal of acceptance they were withdrawn.

At any rate, it is at the ministerial level that these negotiations and these talks must now proceed. I remind you that the European Council--which I know well because it was I who proposed its establishment and it was here at the Elysee that its first meeting was held in December 1974--is not made to do the work of the other institutions of the Community.

And if now there is any question of settling a problem of the Community on farm prices, it is up to the ministers of agriculture; if it is a financial contribution, it is the ministers of finance who are competent. And so I shall not take part in any new bargaining within the European Council over problems which have been tackled at Luxembourg.

UDF COMMITTEE PRODUCES 'ATLANTIST' DEFENSE DOCUMENT

[Pascal Krop commentary: "Defense: An 'Atlantist' Report by the Union for French Democracy"]

[Text] The Union for French Democracy (UDF) committee's recent little white book dedicated to the present problems of French military policy casts fundamental doubt on Gaullist doctrine which has been accepted until now. By proposing that the country arm itself with the neutron bomb, giving credence to a possible conventional war in Europe and stressing the antisubversion struggle and civil defense, the UDF's leaders are clearly showing their Atlantist leanings.

The various political and military officials are not waiting for the decisions to be taken by Valery Giscard d'Estaing in the summer to give a clear indication of their preferences on defense and France's role. The UDF document, "A Defense Doctrine for France," unanimously approved last Thursday by the Giscard movement's bureau, loudly proclaims things for which the government is not currently taking responsibility.

The Giscardians thus propose increasing our capacity in tactical nuclear weapons. The organization of defense in Europe, they explain, "must be conceived so as to give battle with the support of a number of tactical nuclear weapons." They could not express the hope more clearly that, during the coming months, the head of state should decide to adopt the neutron bomb for France, especially since certain people show hardly any concern when they now publicly demand the enhanced radiation weapon. "I propose the neutron bomb, whose effect on the crews of the attacking armored vehicles would be devastating," former Defense Minister General Billottee stated in Tours recently.

Then, a few days ago, it was the turn of the Armed Forces Chief of Staff General Mery to confide in the members of the National Assembly Defense Committee that this weapon "would meet our national defense needs...since it could be used against an enemy at close range without harm to friendly forces." Among the majority, rally for the Republic military expert Jacques Cressard was first to consider that "the neutron bomb is essential."

These stances seem to express a desire to modify French defense policy. It is worthy of note that the most Atlantist ideas finally determined the conclusions of the Giscardian committee which comprised some quite varied elements: centrists, Giscardians, and several general reserve officers. In the UDF's view, "It is now essential for our security to tighten our links with our allies.... As for Europe, the freedom of decision which France has reserved for itself by refusing to make its forces part of an interallied disposition with a command designated in peace time, does not imply the rejection of coordination with the countries with which its defense needs link it, of a necessary combining of effort or, should the case arise, of action, since the latter would be ineffective if it were not prepared.... For France, the Atlantic Alliance is an essential element of its defense which, far from conflicting with it, completes the national nuclear deterrent.... France's security would be at stake from the very first European battle. There must be no ambiguity about France's commitment."

Publicly, these views are highly novel. They question totally the Gaullist defense doctrine. French nuclear deterrent policy was hitherto based on the threat of massive and immediate retaliation aimed at canceling out any aggression in the European theater, from whatever source. The majority party experts and the armed forces general staffs are now naming the potential enemy for the first time: the USSR.

They assert that, in the event of a European battle in "Europe-center" itself, France should commit its forces immediately. For that it must possess the neutron bomb in its tactical nuclear arsenal. Thus, it is no longer a question of "deterring" but of giving credence to the idea of a possible conventional war in Europe.

One section of the UDF's little white book is dedicated to intellectual subversion. The "home front" must be protected in the event of crisis to prevent the rise of "an army of objectors against which military defense is powerless." This worrying call to struggle against an undefined "enemy within" is filled with Atlantist views.

EUROPE NEEDS 'ALLIANCE' WITH U.S., NOT 'ALIGNMENT'

[Paul-Marie de la Gorce article: "Europe--United States: The 'Alignment' Quarrel"]

[Text] Nobody wants to kick a man when he is down and, in closing ranks behind President Carter, the Americans are no doubt obeying noble sentiments. In addition nobody can forget that the reason for the abortive U.S. commando operation is the hostages, whose seizure was condemned by the entire international community, including the socialist countries. It is therefore only natural and approprite for the heads of state and government in Europe to show their understanding and point out that the essential thing is to secure the release of the Americans in Tehran.

However, there is no reason to conceal from the public that behind the official statements a serious debate is going on about relations between Europe--and more specifically France--and the United States and that every episode revives it, as was seen 1 week ago over the European attitude toward Iran and as we have again just seen with regard to the failure of the American operation.

In fact this debate is between two feelings and two outlooks. The dividing line between them in no way corresponds to traditional party and faction labels; on the contrary in this affair all political parties, aside from the PCF, are divided to some degree. Some think that in the current international crisis the essential thing is Western solidarity; for them this is equally valid for Afghanistan and for Iran although the two affairs are very different, not to say of opposite significance, since in the same region of the world one people are opposed to the USSR and another to the United States. However, since the seizure of the hostages in Tehran is intolerable and the Soviet intervention in Kabul unacceptable they deduce that the same attitude is essential in both cases: a united Western front.

Others, who have the same fundamental opinion on these two affairs, think that although it is desirable for as many countries as possible to share the same stance, this cannot mean alignment for alignment's sake with U.S. policy especially since this policy is both ineffective and dangerous. That should not exempt France, and if possible Europe, from seeking its own appropriate reactions to the two current crises and implementing these reactions as far as its means allow and at the very least using what authority and credibility it has to reduce the threat of war and strengthen the Middle East and Central Asian countries' desire for independence.

That is roughly the path which the president of the republic seemed to have chosen. The calm and desire for independence which he seemed to show certainly explain why, in this period, his popularity rose in opinion polls because, although this feeling is badly expressed in the traditional parties, it probably reflects popular opinion.

In any case it must be pointed out that the French leaders, however cautious their statements are owing to custom and convention, judged the U.S. policy harshly. This policy has proved quite incapable of taking advantage of the rift which arose between the Third World and the Soviet Union over the Soviet Union's intervention in Kabul. Even if there were considerable problems the result is there for all to see: The USSR is no longer isolated as it was 4 months ago, reactions to the Afghanistan affair are weaker and weaker and the U.S. steps have proven ineffective and have not been implemented as predicted.

The Iranian affair has been characterized by just as many mistakes. After the United States, at Br Mrzezinski's instigation and despite Mr Vance, had supported the shah beyond the bounds of common sense, President Carter wisely decided that the shah would not go to the United States. Despite repeated denials, everybody knows that Mr Kissinger and Mr David Rockefeller insisted that he should come to the United States although the medical reasons involved in no way justified his admission since all the treatment he needed could have been given in Mexico by American doctors if necessary. There is no doubt that Washington blundered in giving way to these entreaties and that the consequences are now hanging over everybody.

With unanimous condemnation of the seizure of the hostages behind it the United States could perhaps have taken strong action immediately; it did not do so and yesterday's unanimity is now completely forgotten. Choosing to talk with Tehran, President Carter did not or could not succeed in achieving the essential, in other words in establishing normal relations with Iran and directing them against the Soviet Union.

He then gave the impression that he had given Europe a kind of ultimatum urging it to join in the sanctions taken against Iran, without which he would engage in military action; as if he was trying to make the Europeans take responsibility for the U.S. administration's future decisions by warning them that they would have detrimental consequences for them.

After this it turned out that he had decided to act nonetheless: Unfortunately we all know the results of his decision. We now know and should always have known that the economic sanctions led and will increasingly lead Iran to conclude all the agreements it needs with the Soviet Union. This prompted Mr Couve de Murville to observe on television on Sunday evening that if the United States persuades Europe to break off all relations between the Western countries and Iran, that country will be forced to rely increasingly on Russia and he asked whether this was really the goal we should pursue....

The fact is that the French Government is caught between the obvious need not to be indifferent to the hostages affair and its view of U.S. policy which it regards as bad and which it does not want to follow. [paragraph continues]

It is only natural that, faced with this alternative, those who have always been hostile to an independent foreign policy should see this as an opportunity for ending it; it is also natural that some people should give preference to the need for solidarity with the United States in this affair. However, it is important to realize that in taking this path, however late and hesitatingly, we run the risk of making the same mistakes as U.S. policy: We would not turn a bad policy into a good policy.

Beyond the present incidents it should be reiterated that there are fundamental and lasting reasons for wanting to follow a French and, if possible, European policy which remains independent.

Systematic alignment with the United States would strip French positions of all authority and credibility and France would eventually lose all ability to act since nobody would still think that it was capable of acting independently.

In addition experience proves that it is not true that it is possible to influence U.S. policy by following it on all occasions. This is an illusion which only those who do not realize what relations with the United States mean can entertain; the United States decides and then demands support. There is no reason to blame them or grow angry: We must simply keep our ability to take free decisions.

It is not true that alliance implies alignment; indeed the reverse is true. It is only among independent states that we can talk of an alliance. Otherwise it is merely a relationship between protector and protected and, when the time comes, the protector does what he wants.

In the final analysis the situation does not correspond to Atlanticist plans; the vast majority of the world now consists of countries which do not want any hegemony, particularly not Soviet hegemony; it is in relation to those countries that France's policy and if necessary Europe's policy can be effective if it remains free, unless of course it serves no purpose.

MARCHAIS SYMPATHIZES WITH CASTRO ON 'CAMPAIGN AGAINST CUBA'

LD021217 [Editorial Report] Paris L'HUMANITE in French on 26 April 1980 carries on page 6 the 750-word apparent text of a letter sent on 24 April by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais to Cuban President Fidel Castro expressing sympathy with him over the present "vast campaign against Cuba." Marchais writes: "This campaign being waged by imperialism's forces is ignoble." He goes on to say: "It is clear that this disgusting campaign is not a sign of imperialism's strength. Imperialism is seeing its domination increasingly opposed by peoples. It has good reason not to tolerate Cuba's influence in the Caribbean and elsewhere."

OFFICIALS SEND MESSAGES ON TITO'S DEATH

Pertini Condolences

AU051558 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 5 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 5 (ANSA)--A message sent by Italian head of state Sandro Pertini to Yugoslav President Lazar Kolisevski upon learning of the death of Marshal Josip Broz Tito opened with the statement that, "with the loss of President Tito, mankind has lost a combatant who steadfastly fought for the principles of freedom and justice".

The message, forwarded through the Italian ambassador to Belgrade, Aldo Cavaglieri, continued: "The Yugoslav people have lost their distinguished leader but they will always feel that he is guiding them for the development of the original revolutionary experience and for the firm defense of their independence and unity without need to turn to foreign assistance. "The nonaligned countries--the indispensible third force in a world which is often recklessly pushed to the brink of the nuclear abyss--will remain united and will exalt the thinking and example of President Tito.

"He was the last great man of the Second World War to die, after heading the struggle for the conquest and the defense of his own people's battle for independence. He won all the battles he waged and lost only the last, against death.

"I feel deeply grieved because with Tito I lost a friend whom I thought of as a comrade in the struggle in the belief. In this spirit," Pertini's message concluded, "I will come to kneel before the bier".

Cossiga Statement

LD052117 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 5 May 80

[Text] Prime Minister Cossiga has issued a statement commenting on Tito's legacy: [begin Cossiga recording] After a long and courageous struggle against death--long and courageous like his entire life--Marshal Josip Tito, president of the friendly and neighboring Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, has died. On hearing this sorrowful news, I wish to put on record the great sorrow felt by the Italian Government at the death of a man who played such a significant part in the history of the last 40 years.

Tremendous is the loss of such a great statesman, who, after operating as an independent patriot for the freedom of the Yugoslav people, guided them through the construction of their own autonomous and specific socialist system, ensuring independence, full sovereignty and security to the republic. Tremendous is the loss that we feel of a statesman whose vision of international affairs and realistic activities contributed, combined with his personal and courageous initiatives, to a season of peace and cooperation on our continent.

On the level of bilateral relations which developed between Italy and Yugoslavia after the tragedy of the war, it is right and proper to recognize that Marshal Tito had the foresight and merit to understand the need for the two countries to overcome the recriminations inherited from the past and reciprocal misunderstandings and to move forward toward the new prospect of achieving a solid friendship--a friendship illuminated today by its flourishing and exemplary state and which is justly hailed as a model of peaceful and constructive relations between countries with differing political and social systems. [passage indistinct]

Faced with his death, the Italian Government therefore pays heartfelt homage to the memory of the founder of the new Yugoslavia, who was most firm in defending his country against any challenge or attempt on its sovereignty, and expresses its solidarity to the government and peoples of the friendly republic, to the League of Communists of Yugoslavia and to the other Yugoslav social and cultural organisations. It confirms the sentiments and the determination of the Italian people and government aimed at a permanent solidarity with the nearby friendly peoples of Yugoslavia, while safeguarding the common asset of independence, freedom, security and peace. PCI, Other Messages

[Excerpt] The Italian Communist Party's (PCI) Central Committee called Tito the architect of a unique socialist experience and a man never found lacking even in the harshest and most painfully polemic and divisive moments of the communist movement. In a message of condolence to the Yugoslav Communist League, the PCI said that Tito had carefully guarded Yugoslavia's national unity, sovereignty and independence and would be recalled as an erstwhile defender of these principles, "which are the basis of a new international coexistence".

Telegrams of condolence were also sent to Yugoslav leaders by Italian Senate Speaker Amintore Fanfani and Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

PRESS SPECULATES ABOUT POST-TITO YUGOSLAVIA

AU051520 Rome ANSA in English 1535 GMT 5 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 5 (ANSA)--The death of Yugoslav President Josip Broz Tito and the interrogatives hanging on the future conduct of the Soviet Union in dealings with the communist state which broke with the Soviets in 1948 came under lengthy front-page analysis in the Italian dailies today.

Milan's GIORNO, expressing editorial opinion shared by many of today's commentators, noted that, "Tito's death comes at a time when international tensions are running high, after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and in the immediate wake of the aborted American mission to free the hostages held in Tehran, a time when detente is only a memory from the past. For these precise reasons", the paper affirmed, "though Tito's death was foreseen and had been almost taken for granted, it appears even more serious, more serious for the world, more serious because of the precarious balance in the Balkan Peninsula and serious indirectly, therefore, for neighboring Italy".

"With Tito gone", according to the conservative Milan paper IL GIORNALE NUOVO, "fear comes from the East". The editorial argued that, "with Cuba's Castro in mind, the Third World seems now certain to be subjected to a stepped up process of psycho-ideological Sovietization and it is no longer possible to see on the horizon a leader with the stature and the strength to counter it". GIORNALE firmly predicted that at hand is "a period of instability and loss which the Soviets, aided by the Castroites in and outside Cuba, will seek to develop to their exlcusive imperialistic advantage. The death of Tito can cause," the editorial concluded "the end of stability in the Balkans, in Europe and in the world if the West is not careful".

For Milan's authoritative CORRIERE DELLA SERA, no one in Belgrade has been in doubt that sooner or later the Soviet Union would attempt to recover Yugoslavia, the hotbed of dissent in the Soviet world and the area for a possible hookup with the Mediterranean.

"Regaining Yugoslavia will not necessarily come about by following the scenario used for Czechoslovakia", the paper forecast with reference to the August 1968 Soviet invasion of the Eastern European state. "An invasion", according to CORRIERE, "could forge unity within Yugoslavia rather than take advantage of domestic discord. The intervention would more likely pass 'under' the frontier rather than 'over' it and utilize the contradictions between the six republics and the two autonomous Serbian provinces. The minimum program for the destabilization of Yugoslav federalism," the Milan daily concluded its own scenario, "might be aimed at installing two spheres of interest, the south down to the lower Adriatic as an area of Soviet influence and the north as an area of Western influence".

The Rome paper IL TEMPO took the view that, "the advantage Moscow will gain by bringing Belgrade back into the sheepfold are easily understandable" in a comment headlined "Difficult Task for the Successors". "These benefits," according to TEMPO, "can be expected to consist of a political warning to the other 'brother states' of the East with special reference for Nicolae Ceausescu's restless Romania, strengthening the Warsaw Pact and gaining a port on the Adriatic by winning the naval bases Brezhnev asked Tito in vain for in 1976, the likelihood of taking isolated and weak Albania in hand again".

The Communist Party organ L'UNITA termed the late Yugoslav president "a real communist," and noted that his death leaves behind an extremely serious political vacuum. "This moment was feared for some time now," the Italian party paper continued," and Yugoslavia is still faced with a series of difficult problems. To deal with them, the Yugoslav Communists can, however, draw widely on the political thinking and the work of President Tito".

The pro-communist Rome paper PAESE SERA predicted that the post-Tito period in Yugoslavia will probably be a time of "debate and a comparison of positions. It is necessary however to distinguish between debate and strife, the disintegration of the country. The first will take place. The second is apocalyptic speculation," the paper flatly declared. The editorial also said that it will be "inevitable that, with Tito's death the personalities and political organizations which until yesterday were overshadowed by the figure of the country's leader, will come to the fore". PAESE also foresaw that Yugoslavia's new leaders "will have the advantage of much greater stability and a quieter domestic climate than prevailing at the dawn of the Yugoslav revolution. This is also a legacy of the departed leader".

TERRORISTS ARRESTED, OTHERS ATTACK PRISON ARCHITECT

[Text] Rome, May 2 (ANSA)--A Rome architect, Sergio Lenci, was seriously wounded in the head when he was shot by terrorists who broke into his office today. Three armed men and a woman tied the architect up, shot him and then wrote on the wall "Front Line--annul the technicians of counter-guerrilla warfare". "Front Line" is one of Italy's terrorist groups. Lenci took part in laying the blueprints for Rome's Bebibbia Prison where many terrorists are incarcerated.

Meanwhile, three more arrests were made in Milan in connection with the fight against terrorism. Pietro Morlacchi, 42, and Giovanni Achito, 27, were nabbed yesterday as they were putting up posters touting the Red Brigades urban guerrilla organization. Morlacchi's wife, Ruth Heidi Peusch, 39, was arrested on charges of forming an armed gang.

EANES SENDS LETTER TO CARTER ON HOSTAGES IN IRAN

LD032352 Lisbon in English to Europe 2030 GMT 3 May 80

[Text] In a letter addressed to his American counterpart, President Eanes of Portugal expresses his support for a solution to the problem of the U.S. hostages in Tehran. After expressing his regrets at the loss of American lives in Iran, the Portuguese president also expresses his sincere hope that the hostages, who have been unjustifiably detained, be released as quickly as possible. The letter goes on to say that the Portuguese head of state is sure that, under the wise orientation of President Carter, the American Government will find a solution to such a delicate problem. President Eanes stresses that it is a case of an unacceptable violation of international law and practice, and adds that the American President can be sure of Portugal's firm support both at the bilateral level and within the framework of the appropriate international organizations in the search for a worthy and just solution to so serious a question. Finally the Portuguese head of state said that he hopes that good sense and reason will finally prevail in the decisions that are taken by the authorities in Tehran.

EANES, SA CARNEIRO, OTHERS TO ATTEND TITO'S FUNERAL

LD052324 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2100 GMT 5 May 80

[Text] President Ramalho Eanes and Prime Minister Sa Carneiro will leave for Belgrade on Wednesday to attend the funeral of the late President Tito of Yugoslavia. A statement from the Prime Minister's Office says that his decision to make a trip abroad--as an exception to the criteria which the prime minister applies to such trips--reflects the importance attached not only to the disappearance of a figure who marked the history of the last few decades but also to the solidarity which the Yugoslav people deserve at this hour in their struggle for independence, national dignity and against a threat of expansionism. [Lisbon Domestic Service at 1700 GMT on 5 May, in a poorly received report, says that Dr Mario Soares, secretary general of the Socialist Party, and Dr Alvaro Cunhal, secretary general of the Portuguese Communist Party, have also announced their decisions to attend Tito's funeral. The radio says that Cunhal's visit to Guinea Bissau, due to take place this week, has been postponed.[

Eanes Statement

LD050106 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 4 May 80

[Text] President of the Republic General Ramalho Eanes released a statement this evening on the death of Marshal Tito from which we highlight the following passage:

The international community has lost one of this century's most discerning statesmen, a political leader who displayed uncommon intelligence and vision in the way in which he achieved in a concrete way the true versions of independence, sovereignty, equality and cooperation among states. In this hour of mourning for the international community Portugal does not forget the friendship unfailingly expressed by Marshal Tito toward the Portuguese people, his personal commitment to the development of relations between the two peoples and, above all, his contribution to peace, understanding, respect and cooperation among the world peoples.

That was a passage from the president of the republic's statement on the death of Josip Broz Tito.

Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs Diego Freitas do Amaral, has sent a message of condolences to the Belgrade government. The Socialist Party has issued a communique conveying its condolences to the people of Yugoslavia.

[Text] The Portuguese Communist Party, PCP, and the Portuguese Democratic Movement, MDP-CDE, have signed a pact under which the United People's Alliance [APU] is to be reconstituted as an electoral bloc at the forthcoming legislative elections. The pact provides that, on the basis of current legislation, the APU will be dissolved immediately after election results have been published, with either member party forming its own individual parliamentary group in the ensuing Assembly of the Republic. CUNHAL SUMS UP CENTRAL COMMITTEE DELIBERATIONS ON CURRENT SITUATION

[Text] The Central Committee of the Portuguese Communist Party [PCP] is still in session. During a break a short while ago, Dr Alvaro Cunhal summed up the Central Committee's conclusions so far for the benefit of the waiting reporters.

[Begin Cunhal recording] The PCP's Central Committee has not concluded its work yet. [Sentence indistinct] the session so far has already produced the following conclusions:

In the view of the PCP's Central Committee the present political situation has two main characteristics.

The first is the continuation of the unconstitutional, illegal and violent attack unleashed by the PPD [former initials of present Social Democratic Party]-CDS [Social Democratic Center Party] against the rights of the workers and of the popular masses, against the nationalizations, the agrarian reform and the democratic freedoms, accompanied by an offensive against the mass media and the state apparatus--all of which is aimed at restoring the economic and political power of the monopolies and big landowners and the establishment of a new dictatorship.

The second characteristic is the impetuous development of the struggle of the working class and popular masses which has reached a scope and is moved by a determination and [word indistinct] without parallel in the history of the Portuguese people's struggle.

The May Day celebrations came as the culmination of an upsurgence of the mass struggle and stood as a powerful and impressive assertion of the unity, will and determination of the working class and the popular masses to defend the Portugal of April.

The Central Committee has also closely examined the short-term results of the popular struggle and of the democratic political action [words indistinct]. The Central Committee noted that the government has already suffered important setbacks and in a number of instances has been forced to draw back before the workers' firm attitude. Such was the case, for example, with the collective labor agreements and the concerns placed by the government in the category of enterprises in economic difficulties.

The government was (?defeated) in a similar manner with regard to the ruling of the draft law as unconstitutional aimed at handing over nationalized sectors to private capital. This shows that the country's institutions are functioning properly and are capable of ensuring the stipulations of the Constitution.

The Central Committee's assessment is that the Portuguese people, the workers and popular movement and the democratic forces are in a favorable position to contain and defeat the reactionary offensive launched by the reactionary alliance government and by its temporary and precarious parliamentary majority.

The Central Committee is of the view that three basic tasks lay before the workers and all democrats and patriots in the present circumstances. The first is to firmly resist--and basically by means of the mass struggle--the government's unconstitutional and illegal offensive. [sentence indistinct] The second is to insure the democratic functioning of the institutions and democratic legality. The third is to score a great democratic victory in the next parliamentary elections, reducing the reactionary alliance to the parliamentary minority that truly corresponds to its national minority status and increasing the number of seats held by the Communist Party and the United People's Alliance as a basic condition for insuring a democratic majority and a democratic government. [end recording]

CC Issues Document

LD050140 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 4 May 80

[Text] Having met on Saturday, the Central Committee of the Portuguese Communist Party today issued a lengthy document which touches on, inter alia, the three main tasks of the present situation, namely: to firmly resist the unconstitutional and illegal offensive unleashed by the Democratic Alliance government; to ensure the functioning of the democratic institutions; and to score a big victory in the coming elections to the Assembly of the Republic.

With regard to the elections, the PCP Central Committee says that they will have a determining influence on the national life for the future and that, therefore, it is the duty of all the democratic forces to ensure the defeat of reaction and the victory of democracy.

Next comes a reference to the APU [United People's Alliance], describing it as a coalition open to democrats of various tendencies. There is also a reference to the apprehension with which the PCP views the relative apathy revealed by the Socialist Party, reproving the PS's electoral goal of stunting the APU's growth.

With regard to the presidential elections, the PCP Central Committee says that the following three aspects should already start to be taken into account: the instability of the democratic regime might make it advisable to have the post of president of the republic occupied by a soldier prepared to fulfill and defend the Constitution and the democratic regime, although the election of a civilian should not be ruled out.

Furthermore the PCP Central Committee says that the man to be elected president must implement the Constitution--as indeed he is dutybound to do--and should not be associated with ideas of revising the constitution as the forces of reaction are trying to do in an unconstitutional bid to turn the election into a referedum [on revising the constitution]. Finally, the document says, in order to properly carry out his duties the future president must not be compromised by an association with any partisan force.

The document announces that the Central Committee has formed a political committee that will consider all the questions pertaining to putting forward a presidential candidate.

On the subject of the armed forces, the Central Committee says that they have a real role, a de facto role in Portuguese politics which in fact is theirs by right as enshrined in the Constitution. For this reason the PCP maintains that this role should remain in an institutionalized form, thus ensuring the armed forces' commitment to 25 years and to its gains.

On the revision of the Constitution, the Central Committee says that it must abide by three basic principles: The preservation of the interdependence, balance and mutually complementary nature of the organs of sovereignty. In the event of the termination of the Council of the Revolution as a result of such a revision--a termination that the PCP does not consider to be mandatory, as indeed Alvaro Cunhal stated recently at this microphone--it is important that its basic powers be transferred to other organs, already in existence or to be set up, such as will enable the legitimate and necessary presence of the soldiers of April in organs of sovereignty. Finally, the powers of the Assembly of the Republic must emerge strengthened from such a revision.

GIBRALTAR LEADER ON PROBLEMS OF REOPENING BORDER

LD021551 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 13 Apr 80 p 13

[Jose Maria Baviano undated interview in Gibraltar with Chief Minister Sir Joshua Hassan: "Sir Joshua Hassan Uncertain About Spanish Autonomy Process"]

[Text] Gibraltar--At midday today Gibraltar Socialist Party leader Jose Bosano will be holding a meeting in the city center to protest the outcome of the Lisbon conference. Mr Bosano believes that the world "negotiation" should never have been used and opposed the opening of the border. Nevertheless, both Sir Joshua Hassan, who has won a third general election, and opposition leader Peter Isola welcome the measure and believe that the most positive aspect of the agreement is the reestablishment of family ties among inhabitants on both sides of the border.

On the eve of his visit to Strasbourg, where he will have talks with Lord Carrington, Mr Hassan said that "the Lisbon agreement is the result of a study carried out by the new British Government, which can be summed up in its desire for Spain to join the EEC. It is believed," Hassan added, "that the present closed border situation which has lasted for 11 years would be an impediment to the development of negotiations." The Gibraltar leader said that Britain has made a gesture to clear the way so that there will be no difficulties later on, but that the disputed part of the issue is still in fact unresolved. "Both nations have maintained their stances and imposed their limitations," Joshua Hassan explained, "but the Spanish Government has been given a chance to raise the restrictions, and thus an attempt could be made to return to a climate of normality between Gibraltar and the mainland.

"Both this British Government and the previous Labor government," Mr Hassan said, "have enthusiastically accepted the idea of Spain's EEC membership ever since the change of regime. I believe no EEC country has fewer economic disputes with Spain than Britain, leaving aside the Gibraltar issue and a few fishing problems."

With regard to the possible influence on this agreement of Spain's NATO entry, the Gibraltar leader said that it is in Britain's interests that a country such as Spain join the defense of the West, "which is the defense of democracy."

"I do not believe that this is the right time to discuss the possibility of the Spanish Government's approving the idea of granting a passport to any Gibraltarian who wants one," he said, adding: "If this had been done in 1962-63, at the time of the economic boom, the clear-cut nature of the present border would have been blurred. After 11 years an understanding is unlikely to be reached quickly. Things have been done in such a way and with such bad timing that it has given people time to see what has happened in the development of modern Spain, especially with Andalusia's autonomy. There is a disenchantment with what is happening in Spain. Some children wrote me a letter opposing the opening of the border because they believe that when they leave school there will be no work for them because the Spaniards will take it from them. There is a degree of animosity, unjustified perhaps, as a result of the past 11 years. I believe that the process of opening the border must be carried out in such a way that these animosities are calmed, because in the long term it is in our interests to have good relations with our neighbours."

Conservative Election Results

Assessing the result of the 6 February election, in which Joshua Hassan gained the premiership for the third consecutive time and, commenting on the fact that Isola's party, which favors integration with Britain, gained only two seats fewer than his own party, Mr Hassan explained that "it is not that Peter Isola is an integrationist. For personal reasons he inherited Maurice Xiberras' party. This party replaced the Integrationist Party on the latter's collapse when it accepted once and for all that Britain would not approve integration, however great the pressure. The election polarized after the defeat of the three candidates advocating independence. I believe that in Gibraltar there is a vote for and a vote against Hassan. Isola has always been a conservative. My party's vote decreased slightly because this is my third reelection, and it is normal in a democratic system for the people to want to change after 7.5 years of seeing the same man in power. Nevertheless, I still received the votes of those who believe that because of my experience I understand the international Gibraltar problem. Be that as it may, I believe that this will be my last term in office."

When asked what main point he will make as a member of the British delegation to the Gibraltar negotiations, he replied: "Gibraltar's right to determine its future in accordance with the 1967 referendum, in which we decided with whom we wished to coexist politically and who should be responsible for aspects not envisaged in our autonomy, that is, defense and foreign affairs. The right to self-determination is a living concept which may or may not change in time. This new generation, which has never seen the border open, does not, I believe, want to alter this concept. But nevertheless it is possible that they will change their minds in the future."

With regard to the possibility of another referendum, Joshua Hassan said: "There is no need for it because I believe that the recent election implied a complete rejection of those advocating autonomy within [con] Spain. If there is any possibility of a referendum it would be for the very long term, because if there were one every 5 or 10 years to decide on whom we joined, who would invest here, for instance?"

The Gibraltar chief minister said that "the people know that the restrictions were imposed on us to show that Gibraltar could not live without Spain. We survived the policy of economic strangulation imposed by Castiella. We carried on, and life is now very good in Gibraltar. Perhaps this is why some people believe that it would be dangerous to open the border to an imperfect public order. Though the economic and tourist aspect which could be encouraged by opening the border is important, the aspect of a decline in public order, which may or may not occur, is also important."

For many Gibraltarians with relatives living across the border, the definitive opening of communications would be a very happy event, but the observation that "it must be approached calmly" implies uncertainty toward an area like the Camp de Gibraltar, which has changed greatly over the past 11 years.

PAPER SEES VANCE DEPARTURE AS WEAKENING STATE DEPARTMENT ROLE

LD021141 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 29 Apr 80 pt 1 p 10

[Editorial: "The Honorable Secretary Goes"]

[Text] Cyrus Vance has been one of the unobstrusive American secretaries of state who has been able to serve his President without at the same time seeking a prominent or dominant role for himself. For the public he has not been an imposing figure like Henry Kissinger, or a fascinating personality like John Foster Dulles. He worked quietly, and it is actually out of character for him to do something as dramatic as to break with his President at the most critical moment in the President's term of office and in the President's current policies. But Vance is a man of honor. His integrity is highly respected both in the American Cabinet and within the councils of the Atlantic Alliance. His resignation is the logical outcome of a situation where a man of honor found himself in an impossible position. When he could not convince the President of the correctness of his views on the central issues in American foreign policy, his capacity to formulate and represent the country's policies was exhausted and so he had to go.

Vance was unable to follow Carter in the sharp turn that American policies have taken since the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and he has not been able to support the plan for military action to release the hostages in Iran. Both ran contrary to his view of the diplomatic method as the foundation of the most productive policy even when dealing with one's opponents. When the difference in temperaments was so great, the correct course had to be that the parties moved apart. But the question has also been, whose temperaments were most at variance?

Cyrus Vance's influence on the United States' foreign policy has run aground on a reef in the form of the highest echelons of American Government. Originally a foreign minister--secretary of state, is the actual title--was the leader of the Cabinet and, as such, the President's adviser on questions of foreign policy. In more recent years presidents have expanded their offices in the White House to include a shadow cabinet of advisers in competition with the specific government departments. For the last 20 years the president has had a security adviser whose job it has been to coordinate through the National Security Council the joint efforts of the State Department, the Defense Department and the intelligence services on matters of national security. This apparatus developed during the Vietnam war into a crisis management body which gradually assumed control of the central issues in foreign policy planning. It was in this post that Kissinger started his political influence. And he knew how tough the opposition would be, when he became secretary of state himself. Vance, on the other hand, has in the long run not been able to assert the dominance of the State Department in the duel with Professor Brzezinski, who once again has made the National Security Council the President's strongest foreign policy tool.

It is the privilege of the President to follow what policies he chooses and in whatever way he prefers, for executive power rests in his hands alone and the secretary of state is appointed by him on his orders. But the fact that Vance must resign amounts to a weakening of the American State Department's historical position, for the person really in charge of foreign affairs is now sitting in an office in the basement of the White House.

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE ON NATIONALIST APPROACH TO EC QUESTIONS

LD051039 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 30 Apr 80 p 10

[Editorial: "The European Crisis"]

[Text] De Gaulle was, of course, right in his way when he closed the door to Europe on Britain since, in his eyes, the British were not mature enough to become Europeans. It was not merely meant as an insult. It also amounted to a sort of appreciation. Behind it lay his assessment that a great and proud nation with a triumphant past as a great power would not be able to yield its individual national interests sufficiently to the needs of a European Community. He knew the problem from himself and his own France, but there was a difference. It was true that Britain had lost its status as a world power since the war, as its overseas empire was gradually liquidated. But Britain had not had its national soul crushed in a European defeat. The six countries which founded the European Community had, and that taint of defeat that they always had to carry with them was a precondition of their yielding to each other even in the most stubborn conflicts.

The six entered the Community so that they would never again go to war against each other and in order to turn their defeat into a common strength. Britain did not enter Europe to lay to rest the ghost of the past, but with sober foresight to ensure itself a share in the future. There was no recognition of Europe in the British Government's step, and at the time no hesitation at all in British national opinion. It was a political decision. If the Community was the beginning of a European superpower, it was a historical necessity that Britain should have a direct influence on its course. While the Community in the meantime was a Common Market behind a closed tariff wall, it was also an economic necessity for Britain to gain access to it. After much pushing and shoving, the British forced the door open and went through, but they did not become better Europeans than De Gaulle had expected. They remained the same.

They have--as we have--preserved their individuality intact in the European milieu. It was for them--as it was for us--so exhausting a European action to enter the Community that they did not have the strength for more than the absolute minimum of further political solidarity. As a member of the Community, the task again was to defend national interests as stubbornly as possible, and successive British governments have been in permanent renegotiation over the cost of membership. It ought to come as no surprise that the crisis in this negotiation has reached its climax with the government of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. It is an indication not that it is anti-European but rather that it is pro-British. There is not the slightest doubt of the undiminished political involvement in European cooperation, but it is a strongly nationalist government. It has a very convincing belief in itself and it is determined to promote its interests beyond the limit of the possible.

From his heavenly abode De Gaulle would have nodded in recognition to Margaret Thatcher in Luxembourg. He knew how to appreciate a stubborn exponent of national sovereignty.

ENVOY TO TEHRAN DEMANDS RELEASE OF U.S. HOSTAGES

LD021419 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 28 Apr 80 p 1

[Unattributed report: "Sweden Acts in Hostage Crisis: Demands Release"]

[Text] In a dramatic declaration on Sunday, Sweden described the holding of the hostages in Tehran as unacceptable and demanded that the Americans be released as soon as possible.

It happened when Sweden's new ambassador in Tehran, Goran Bundy, together with the ambassadors of seven other countries presented their credentials to President Bani-Sadr.

At the meeting, which was undramatic despite the declaration, Ambassador Bundy explained that the Government of Sweden is following the crisis between the United States and Iran with great unease.

"We give our most wholehearted support to a solution to the dispute and to efforts to ensure that our American colleagues regain their freedom," Ambassador Bundy said.

He continued: "My government considers it self-evident that the holding of the American diplomats as hostages is totally unacceptable and would like to take this opportunity to express to you its wish that the occupation of the embassy be ended as soon as possible."

SIEGE OF IRANIAN EMBASSY ENDS; 2 HOSTAGES DEAD

LD052250 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2237 GMT 5 May 80

[Text] Crack SAS [Special Air Services] troops stormed the Iranian Embassy in London this evening--ending a six-day siege--releasing 19 hostages practically unscathed and killing three gunmen. They went in with the backing of Home Secretary Mr William Whitelaw after the terrorists killed one hostage and threatened to kill others at half-hourly intervals.

Television cameras showed the SAS men placing explosives against the first floor windows. At the rear they lobbed missiles through the windows. There were two violent explosions and clouds of black smoke and flames poured from the building. There were bursts of rapid gunfire and moments later a white flag was waved from an upstairs window.

About an hour before the raid Metropolitan Police Commissioner Sir David McNee sent in a letter to the terrorists telling them the police wished to work out a "completely peaceful solution." But soon after 7 p.m. a body of a shot hostage was pushed out of the front door and taken away on a stretcher. That sealed the fate of the terrorists. With police fearing that a second hostage was dead, the SAS men were ordered in 20 minutes later.

In the confusion that followed one of the three remaining British hostages--BBC sound recordist Sim Harris--made his escape, climbing over a flagpole on to the next balcony with flames pouring from a window behind him. More machinegun fire was heard. Armed police moved into the building and firemen trained hoses onto the burning embassy.

Stunned hostages were helped from the rear of the embassy. They include P-C Trevor Lock, who had been guarding the building when it was taken over on Wednesday morning. Most of the hostages were able to walk to the ambulances, but some were in need of assistance. A stream of stretchers was carried to the back of the building as crouching police trained guns on the front door and windows.

As a pall of smoke hung over the siege area, Mr Whitelaw--who had arrived in the closing moments--said the raid showed that "We in Britain will not tolerate terrorism. The world must learn this."

Sir David McNee confirmed that 19 hostages were safe and in hospital for a check-up. Three terrorists were dead, one was in hospital and a fifth was in police custody. He told a London press conference he had had no alternative but to order in the SAS after two people were reported dead following shots during the afternoon. Police had tried "every possible means" to negotiate an end to the siege without acceding to the gunmen's demands, but were unsuccessful. "It is a matter of deep regret that the siege had to be ended by violence."

Mr Whitelaw told the press conference he was "deeply grateful" this was an operation in the highest standards of the Metropolitan Police. He and Sir David had hoped very much that the operation could be brought to an end "without any action such as that which had to be taken. We naturally wanted to bring it to a peaceful conclusion." It was only when it became clear that failure to take further action would cost lives "that the commissioner recommended to me that it was necessary to take further action, and I approved."

The hostages were tonight in St Stephens Hospital, Fulham, where they were being interviewed by police. In another part of the hospital, relieved but tearful relatives waited to be allowed to see them. Coachloads of policemen were also ferried to the hospital, apparently for checks. The hostages are believed to be suffering mainly from shock and cuts.

In a dramatic television interview tonight BBC TV producer Chris Cramer, released by the gunmen after 24 hours because of a stomach ailment, said the terrorists were heavily armed with grenades. "One of them was playing with one the whole time," he said on BBC TV news. "He had his finger through the pin all the time. They must have had a couple of hand grenades in each pocket."

Iranian President Bani-Sadr was quoted by REUTER as saying that the end of the siege was a victory for Iran. "The brave resistance of your children in the Iranian Embassy in London has borne its sweet fruit," he said on state radio. "Resistance, refusal to surrender and coolness brought its result, which is victory."

Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, in New York to meet U.S. leaders, said he hoped the action would be a deterrent to those terrorist actions which stop "all civil diplomatic communication throughout the world."

And Mrs Thatcher visited the SAS siege-heroes in their temporary London HQ to say "well done". She had earlier been told by Mr Bani-Sadr in a telegram: "I should like to express my gratitude for the presevering action of your police force that proved its competence during the unjust hostage-taking event at the Iranian Embassy in London. The lives of all but one of our very dear children were saved in this event."

On Sunday and today, the Jordanian, Algerian, Kuwaiti and Syrian ambassadors in London called the Foreign Office for discussions on the siege after the gunmen had requested that some ambassadors mediate. At almost the same time as the dramatic SAS operation was being mounted, they issued a statement calling for a peaceful solution.

In a bizarre side-show to the drama, pro and anti-Ayatollah Khomeyni demonstrators chanted slogans. Some supporters of the Iranian leader tried to break through police barriers and were brought down by rugby tackles. Dozens of police had to be called away from the embassy to deal with the crowds.

Iran Consul General Dr Saytollah Ehdaie tonight named one the hostages shot by the gunmen as 25-year-old press councillor Abias Lavasani. Mr Lavasani had been in Britain for less than six months. Dr Ehdaie said: "He wanted to be a martyr for Islam. We do not mourn his death. We are happy his wish was granted."

After hours of confusion Scotland Yard officially confirmed tonight that two hostages had been shot before the SAS were ordered into the building. The Iranian Embassy named one of them as a press counsellor. The other has yet to be identified.

The hostages were tonight staying at a secret London address recovering from their 6-day ordeal. It could be a few more hours before they are reunited with their anxious relatives, and they still have to be interviewed by police.

Altogether 19 hostages--14 men and five women--and two dead men were admitted to St Stephen's. Early today three men, all Iranians, were seriously ill with gunshot wounds. They were said, however, not to be critically ill. The rest of the hostages, after being treated for shock and cuts, were driven out waving and smiling in a heavily-guarded coach to the secret address. They had been at the hospital for about three hours.

All the British hostages--PC Trevor Look, BBC man Sim Harris and Ronald Morris of the embassy staff--were safe and well.

The many relatives and friends who arrived at St Stephens were given information about the safety and wellbeing of their loved ones but were not allowed to see them. Both St Stephen's and Westminster hospitals had been on alert all the Bank Holiday weekend but in the end St Stepehn's coped alone. Police stayed on duty outside the hospital overnight in case of any incidents.

THATCHER MARKS ANNIVERSARY WITH REVIEW OF POLICIES

LD051207 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 5 May 80 pp 1, 24

[Tony Conyers report: "'British Pride Revived'"]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher, in a radio interview marking her first anniversary as prime minister, said yesterday she considered her biggest achievement so far to have made Britain again count for something in the world. To people abroad Britain "is an interesting, influential country," she said. "And it is good now to be British. That is a tremendous achievement."

The prime minister, speaking on the BBC's "World This Weekend" programme brimmed over with confidence when Mr Gordon Clough, the interviewer suggested that some people thought she was running ahead of the pack and that some Tory "wets" were becoming "wetter." She replied: "Of course I am ahead of the pack. What's a leader for but to lead the pack! Of course they are behind me. If they were in front of me they would be leaders. I hope I am building future leaders.

"I am doing what I passionately believe to be right for Britain. I am going to keep on doing it."

Her whole strategy, she insisted, was still intact, and would stay so in spite of what Mr Clough described as "little ruffles of differences" within the Cabinet--a phrase Mrs Thatcher obviously enjoyed.

In the same mood of confidence, she defended the decision to recruit Mr Ian MacGregor to head British Steel. Everyone, she said, recognised him as one of the outstanding industrialists in the world whose record of performance was superb. "He has taken businesses, has built them up, created employment and expanded them." She had decided she wanted the best rather than just employ an ordinary chairman.

"I knew there would be a row. Why did we go ahead? Because we said in the end that the business is losing 1 million pounds a day. Good heavens, if we get the best, a few weeks or months work will recover what we are paying for him.

"What sort of country is it that says that we can pay enormous transfer sums for footballers, but [not] to get the best person here in Britain, to get an industry which is in trouble, thriving and flourishing again?"

On America's abortive attempt to rescue the hostages in Iran, she said all of President Carter's policies of restraints and going to various international bodies had failed to produce results. "He felt, perhaps, he had to do something in response to American opinion."

She was asked if there were British hostages in the same position she would allow public opinion to push her into doing something against her better judgment. She answered: "Do you know that the possibility of us having hostages is one which has tormented me as I have thought what would I expect from our friends?

"No. I would always hope that we could lead public opinion into the paths we thought were right."

A rescue attempt to try to release people held contrary to every international law and custom and humanity was different from military intervention. She was totally against a blockade of ports or laying mines, but a rescue operation did not have the same fundamental problems.

"I cannot blame a country for trying to rescue its own people. If only we could get this problem solved, we could go ahead with tackling the wider problem, which is that Russia just marches into an independent nation like Afghanistan and puts her troops in there and puts up a puppet government. That must be of very great concern to all non-aligned nations."

On President Carter's decision not to tell Britain in advance of the rescue attempt, Mrs Thatcher said: "Do you think that if I were to put our troops in to rescue some British people, I would put the lives of our troops at risk, or the British people at risk, by spreading it all over the world on a confidential basis what I was going to do? Of course I would not."

Referring to the hostages held in the Iranian Embassy, in London, Mrs Thatcher said the situation was being tackled in the usual patient way. She hoped the Ayatollah Khomeyni and President Bani-Sadr would realise that the British Government was doing everything possible to protect the lives and interests of their diplomats in London.

The invasion of Afghanistan was astonishing, she said. If Russia got away with it, who would be next? She did not see a direct analogy as Chancellor Schmidt had done between Sarajevo and the 1914-1918 war. "The only possible analogy," she said, "is that we did drift into the 1914-1918 war and I think historians would say that this should never have happened. I do not think that we should drift into a third world war. The weapons are so hideous and terrible that those of us who are for the time being in charge of these matters would not let them drift.

"I think the danger is a different kind. You have got Soviet Russia acting by proxy through the Cubans in Angola and Ethiopia, and you have got her with subversion in many other countries in the world. This is where the main danger lies."

It was up to the West to use propaganda to counter communism.

It was not worth pushing the world to the brink of war over Afghanistan. "We must use other means on a massive campaign of a kind we have never mounted yet.

"It is not part of my philosophy to go into war.

"It is part of my philosophy that we have the same weapons as Russia to deter her, so that she knows that if she struck us she would get just as terrible a set of weapons back. Our whole objective is to stop war."

NC042216 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 4 May 80

[Cable from President Kiprianou to Lazar Kolisevski, chairman of the Presidium of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia--read by announcer]

[Text] The Cypriot people received the news of the death of President of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia Marshal Tito with feelings of deepest emotion and grief. The Cypriot people mourn the death of a firm friend and supporter who had been one of the great men, not only of our century but of all ages.

The death of Tito is not just a national loss for the Yugoslav people; it is a loss for all of mankind. With the loss of Tito our world has become poorer. Tito had been the protagonist of Yugoslavia's freedom as well as the champion of international struggles for justice, democracy, peace and human dignity. As the inspirer and cofounder of the nonaligned movement he became a leading world personality.

Marshal Tito fought for man and for the noble ideals of all mankind, both in times of war and in times of peace. His life was a hard and incessant struggle. Only death managed to subdue him after a hard contest, which he fought like a mythical hero. With his death Tito has become immortal. The immortal Tito had been a cordial friend of Cyprus and of Ethnarch Makarios. I knew him personally and he honored me with his friendship. On behalf of the government, of the people of Cyprus and of myself personally, I convey to you my whole-hearted condolences for the great loss.

PAPER URGES REMOVAL OF BASES, SPY STATIONS

[Editorial: "Any Foreign Military Presence Must Be Terminated"]

[Text] The American U-2 spy planes, which are illegally stationed at the British bases, have been flying more frequently over Iran and other countries, including the Soviet Union, which support the Iranian people's struggle.

The order for these spy flights to become more frequent came from the Pentagon shortly before Carter's adventurous and gangsterism military operation against Iran started at midnight last Thursday. These flights, which operate 24 hours per day, are not irrelevant to the strengthening of the U.S. military presence in the Indian Ocean, the Persian Gulf area and eastern Mediterranean. They are directed against countries which are friends of Cyprus and they also leave the Cyprus Government exposed, because the reason the Cyprus Government consented to the stationing of the U.S. spy planes at the British bases--namely, the supervision of the cease-fire line in the Sinai--has long ceased to exist.

The stationing of U.S. spy planes at the British bases as well as the presence of U.S. spy stations on Cypriot territory must be terminated immediately, because they constitute a serious threat to Cyprus, which is unintentionally in danger of becoming involved in any new military adventures by U.S. imperialism against Iran or other countries in the area.

Cyprus--as a nonaligned country which is also a victim of imperialist machinations and interventions--must firmly support the withdrawal of all foreign troops and the removal of the foreign military bases from its territory.

I VRADHINI COMMENTS FAVORABLY ON GREEK-YUGOSLAV RELATIONS

AT051342 Athens I VRADHINI in Greek 5 May 80 p 2

[From the "Evening" column: "Tito's Death"]

[Text] The last of the great men from our century's most agitated period disappeared with Tito's death. He was one of the protagonists of the European tragedy of World War II and during the postwar period was a political personality of great importance.

At the head of the armed resistance of the Yugoslav people, whose country had been leveled by the omnipotent military machine of Hitler, he created the strongest European military resistance force in the years of the German occupation. That army's work was the liberation of the Yugoslav territory. The Yugoslavs were not liberated by the allied armies but by their own arms.

Tito was a military man and a tough and ingenious political leader. He envisoned and brought about not only his country's liberation but also its independence. The atypical and unorthodox Yugoslav Communist regime was able to survive thanks to the strong personality of Tito, who courageously resisted Stalin. Tito followed his own road, resisted all tutelage by Moscow, ignored threats and dangers, balanced policies prudently between East and West, and was recognized as one of the top nonaligned personalities. He manifested consistency in the policy of peaceful coexistence with Greece and up until his death relations between the two countries have been more than cordial.

Marshal Tito struggled with death for almost 4 months. Perhaps it was the last service he offered to his country. During the period when the intrepid partisan was breathing his last, Yugoslavia was passing through the critical phase without internal convulsions or foreign complications and everything indicates that by guaranteeing peace and normality his successors will continue the nonaligned policy which the deceased leader has charted. The Greeks, who have followed with great sympathy his last ordeal, believe that the bonds between the two people will continue to be close and frank even in the post-Tito period.

Acceptance Statement

AT051255 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 5 May 80

[Text] Today Konstandinos Yeoryiou Karamanlis was elected president of the republic.

The chamber convened this morning under the chairmanship of Papaspirou when the third and final special session was held, in accordance with the constitution and the body's regulations, for the election of the president of the republic. After the vote, the Presidium of the Chamber of Deputies, headed by its President Papaspirou, visited the president elect of the republic and officially notified Konstandinos Karamanlis of his election to the state's supreme office. In reply to an address by the president of the Chamber of Deputies Karamanlis said:

Mr President of the Chamber, I thank you for the message you have conveyed to me and for the courageous speeches with which you accompanied it. Mr President, I am pleased to be told of my election as president of the Greek Republic because this will afford me the opportunity to serve my country from this position as well.

Accepting the honorable mandate of the Greek Parliament, I wish to express my joy because today's election has confirmed the smooth operation of constitutional institutions. I beg you to convey to the national representatives my sincere thanks for my election and my assurance that I am fully cognizant of the responsibilities I am shouldering as regulator of the regime. In this capacity I shall have two basic goals: First the consolidation of our democratic regime and the smooth functioning of its institutions and second the preservation and strengthening of our national unity above political antagonism--a unity of which I hope to be the symbol of as the president of all Greeks. I attach special significance to the consolidation of a smooth political life which constitutes the prerequisite for the operation of parliamentary democracy, because only through this can orderly succession to power be guaranteed together with political cooperation when circumstances so dictate. For the implementation of these goals I shall make every effort acting within the framework outlined by the letter and spirit of the Constitution. Dedicated to the country's general interest, I wish to cooperate harmoniously with the governments which the national representatives will elect.

Mr President, I am being called to undertake my duties at a period when the international situation is not merely confused but also dangerous and when our country is facing critical problems both internally and especially in the foreign field. These problems necessitate constant vigilance and increased national and social cohesion. It is understood that under these critical conditions my mission becomes more difficult, and in order to bring it to successful conclusion I need the sincere cooperation of the political world and the support of the people. I want to believe that everybody will respond to this need so that we may protect the democracy, the security and the progress of the nation.

AKROPOLIS SCORES TURKISH PROPOSAL TO NATO ON AEGEAN

[From the "Laconic" column: "Everything to Their Size"]

[Text] The Turks have formed their own concepts of international relations, naturally cut to the specifications of their own interests. A new expression of these concepts is the demand by Ecevit's popular party for dividing the Aegean airspace in half so that the areas of responsibility for Greece and Turkey within the NATO framework may be defined. And since eating whets the appetite, the distribution of Greek islands half and half with Turkey will also be demanded. There is no precedent in the entire world except for totalitarian states for a country dressing its rapacity and its predatory intentions with the cloak of justice. Yet its demands--because it has the right of veto--are seriously taken into consideration by the Alliance and the search for a compromise solution is sought for Greece's return to the NATO military wing. It seems that certain Western governments have forgotten that demands and guiles similar to the Turkish ones have twice led the world into bloody conflicts in the first half of our century; otherwise they would have found a way to bring the Turks to their senses and not discuss seriously with them their dangerous absurdities, thus creating one more bad precedent in international relations.

GUNAYDIN CITES BRZEZINSKI IN QUESTIONING NATO MANEUVERS

NC051220 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 3 May 80 p 5

["The Situation in Ankara" column by Teoman Erel: "Zbig Does Not Confirm Demirel's Statement"]

[Text] In speeches in Adapazari and Geyve, National Salvation Party leader Necmettin Erbakan asserted that U.S. planes have recently carried troops and equipment to Turkey, and he expressed anxiety over the fact that this strength might be used against the Muslim countries. These speeches compelled Prime Minister Demirel to make a statement.

Emerging from the Cankaya Presidential Mansion where he paid a routine visit to Acting President Caglayangil, the prime minister said: "NATO maneuvers will be held in Turkey. Turkey will not and cannot be compelled to agree to anything beyond its obligations. There is no reason for minds to be muddled over this. No government in Turkey can do anything against the will of the state and nation of the Turkish Republic. We do not stand to gain anything by misinterpreting preparations being made for the NATO exercises. These exercises were decided upon months ago."

We wish that the prime minister's statement could comfort us and relieve our anxieties. For, although the military concentrations recently being made in Turkey may be connected with the NATO exercises, the intentions expressed on the other side of the ocean are so obvious that we cannot possibly feel at ease.

The U.S. administration is inclined to use both NATO and its bases in Turkey for the Middle East and the Persian Gulf. This inclination, though not expressed openly but repeatedly murmured, was elucidated by a statement made by Carter's national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski to a Turkish journalist.

We deem it useful to quote the exact words uttered by Brzezinski, who is called "Zbig" for short and who is known to favor tough measures:

"Question: Does the United States need help from NATO to protect the Persian Gulf?

"Answer: Both geographically and for its resources, Southwest Asia is of profound importance to NATO. The disorder in Iran and the occupation of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union has confirmed the importance of this region. Therefore, appropriate steps must be taken to secure stability in the area and to contain the expansion of Soviet domination as well as to safeguard the interests of the West. The United States believes in the need to strengthen the friendly states in the region. The West must be ready to act upon any possible military warning. Three regions in the world--Western Europe, the Far East and Southwest Asia--are vitally linked. If one of these regions falls, the other two are immediately affected."

As can be seen, "Zbig" does not deny the possibility of NATO going into action in the Middle East and the Persian Gulf, though these areas are not within its zone of responsibility. On the contrary, he confirms the possibility. He says "appropriate steps serving these objectives must be taken" in our area.

We fear lest the NATO exercises--which Suleyman Bey [Prime Minister Demirel] says were planned months ago--and the military concentration allegedly made for this purpose should constitute the first of the "steps" referred to by "Zbig."

The Iraqi-Iranian tension and the abortive U.S. raid on Iran have turned our region into a powder keg. Even a mere show of force by NATO on our territory, which is so close to Iran, creates enough sensitivity. But if certain "steps" are taken against our will then we are bound to get into endless trouble.

The provision in the joint Turkish-U.S. defense agreement that the bases on our territory should only be used for NATO objectives does not offer adequate guarantees. When the general provisions of this agreement were announced, it was stated that the use of important bases like Incirlik would be governed by principles, to be contained in agreement which would determine the method of application; however, as yet no such agreements have been disclosed.

Suleyman Bey's statement that no Turkish Government can do anything against the will of the Turkish nation is not enough. A "big" ally can drag its small friend into a fight against his own free will. The Ottoman Empire entered World War I as a result of the faits accomplis created by hoisting the Turkish flag on two German warships.

The Turkish Government should not only act according to the will of the nation, it should also guard it against all kinds of "maneuvers" by its "allies."

OZAL RETURNS FROM SAUDI ARABIA WITH $250 MILLION LOAN

[Text] Under Secretary of the Prime Minister's Office and Deputy Under Secretary of the State Planning Organization Turgut Ozal concluded his visits to Qatar and Saudi Arabia and returned to Turkey today. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport, Ozal said a $250 million loan was secured from Saudi Arabia and an agreement on this subject will be signed in Ankara towards the end of this month. Pointing out that during his stay in Saudi Arabia he held talks to secure Turkey's oil needs from Saudi Arabia within the framework of a long-term plan, Ozal added that he held useful talks on strengthening relations between the two countries and significant steps were taken to eliminate the need for a visa when traveling between Turkey and Saudi Arabia.

BELGIAN CP'S TURF EXPLAINS STAND ON PARIS MEETING

LD051009 Brussels LE SOIR in French 30 Apr 80 p 3

[Unattributed report: "The Belgian Communist Party: Do Not Forget Afghanistan"]

[Text] Belgian Communist Party [PCB] Vice President Jef Turf was the first speaker at the European communist parties' meeting in Paris to bring up the Afghan problem when he outlined the reasons why his party is only participating in the meeting as an observer.

Mr Turf emphasized that two reasons had inspired the PCB's action in Belgium against the deployment of U.S. missiles: "The struggle" has never been waged "unilaterally" nor "as part of a bloc view."

"Moreover, it seems impossible to us," he added, "that the communists of a country like ours should take an interest in the European situation yet deal abstractly with events outside Europe which are helping to worsen the international situation and with the need to further a political situation which suggests the rejection of military interventions, both in the U.S.-Iranian conflict and in the Afghan problem."

The PCB will not sign the appeal to be launched by the Paris conference and is going to give its view "later" on this meeting's results.

'BIG FOUR' FOREIGN MINISTERS PRAISE STATE TREATY

AU071115 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 7 Apr 80 p 2

[Unattributed report: "'Big Four' Pay Tribute to Austria; EUROPAEISCHE RUNDSCHAU: Special State Treaty Issue"]

[Text] The foreign ministers of the four signatory powers depict the conclusion of the State Treaty as a "milestone in European postwar history' and as "one of the first steps toward the discontinuation of the cold war," in extensive articles about Austria they have written for a special issue of the periodical EUROPAEISCHE RUNDSCHAU. This issue was presented to the public yesterday [6 May] by the publishers committee chairmen--former Finance Minister Wolfgang Schmitz and Alfred Storeer, executive secretary of the Austrian Trade Union Federation--as well as by Editor in Chief Paul Lendvai.

Particular attention was drawn to the positive stance taken by Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko on Austrian-Soviet relations. In his contribution Gromyko particularly underscores the fact that the Soviet-Austrian relations are not susceptible to momentary trends and fluctuations and that they constitute an example for the peaceful coexistence of states with different social systems.

The U.S. contribution comes from Secretary of State Cyrus Vance who has since resigned. The U.S. State Department has informed the editor, however, that this stance continues to reflect the views of the U.S. Government. The contribution pays tribute to Austria's independence and neutrality as a pillar of peace and stability in Europe. Like Gromyko, Vance also speaks of the "first fruit of East-West detente."

Great Britain's Lord Carrington and France's Francois-Poncet combine praise for Austria with clear warnings against the consequences of the invasion in Afghanistan. Carrington stresses particularly Austria's contribution in connection with the human rights issue and the Helsinki Final Act. Francois-Poncet underscores Asutria's foreign policy successes and its role as a pioneer in the dialogue with East Europe.

Moreover, the special issue contains, among others, contributions by UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, Council of Europe Secretary Franz Karasek, and People's Party Chairman Alois Mock.

NORBERT BURGER'S PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDACY APPROVED

[AZ report: "Main Election Board Decided: Burger May Run in the Election"]

[Text] Vienna (AZ)--On Tuesday [6 May] the main election board accepted the candidacy of Norbert Burger, chairman of the National-Democratic Party, for the presidential elections. A joint statement released by the board says that this decision has been made in compliance with pertinent laws. A decision of the main election board that was not in fonformity with the law would allow the elections to be contested, something for which no one could assume responsibility.

The idea of enacting special laws [to prevent Burger's candidacy] was rejected. However, all parties represented in Parliament stressed that they condemn Burger's political aims. The political answer to Burger's candidacy will be given by the Austrians at the polls, the statement says.

Austrian Socialist Party [SPOe] Central Secretary Marsch declared that the SPOe firmly rejects Burger's aims. Vice Chancellor Androsch declared that he expected a very clear rejection of Burger on the part of the Austrian voters but, he added, as far as the admission of the candidacy is concerned, the government can only act in accordance with the valid laws.

Interior Minister Lanc underscored that Burger had fulfilled the formal requirements for a candidacy. Even after eliminating questionable signatures supporting his application, there still remained 2,271 uncontested signatures. Proceedings have been initiated because of the signatures that were submitted.

Anti-Burger Demonstration Held

[Excerpt] During a rally held by Burger last night [6 May] in Vienna-Doebling (40 of his followers had turned up), a counter-demonstration was staged in front of the building. Burger, who will be "candidate number one" on the official ballot because names are listed in alphabetical order, is under police protection. He issued an appeal "against the pan-Slavist and Bolshevist infiltration of our German fatherland, Austria."

STUDENTS CLAIM TO HAVE BUILT FUNCTIONING A-BOMB

[Unattributed report: "Linz Students: We Have Duplicated an Atom Bomb"]

[Summary] On 6 May students of the Linz Kepler University, members of a "Committee for Peace and Disarmament," announced that two of them had built an atom bomb that is basically functional and would merely need to be fused. Today, 7 May, the students want to present the homemade atom bomb to the public in Liz in the framework of the committee's activities, "in order to draw attention to the dangers of an uncontrolled construction and use of atom bombs."

The committee members have assured that the two students will keep absolute silence about how they managed to build the bomb, which they intend to donate to the Ministry of Science after the presentation.

ANDRE COOLS WRITES TO MARTENS ON PSB TERMS

LD061533 Brussels LE SOIR in French 30 Apr 80 pp 1-2

[Unattributed report: "Cools Letter to Martens and Socialist Party's Terms"]

[Text] On returning from participation in the Luxembourg European "summit," [premier-designate] Martens studied the letter sent to him by [French-speaking] Socialist Party (PSB) President Cools. We now publish the text of this letter which, as you will see, indicates that the Socialists are ready to continue negotiations on the formation of a "six-party coalition," but that they intend to complete substantially the draft agreement concluded last week:

Mr "Formateur" [premier-designate],

The exploratory negotiations which should have enabled us to study your proposals more deeply have been curtailed following the various parties' planned meetings and your departure for the European summit. Consequently, the PSB believes that it should be given further explanations before entering into negotiations which may result in the formation of a government.

We would like certain guarantees and to ask you various questions:

1--The State Reform:

A--In your view, negotiations on the Brussels region must begin as soon as possible, that is, with the fall [as published], and must, in any event, relate to the whole of the "Brussels problem." Above all, this implies that the regions' limits are fixed transitionally, that the six peripheral communes are under the protection of the national state and that the Brussels-Hal-Vilvoorde electoral district is not split up. Similarly, it must be clear that there can be no partial or unilateral solution to Brussels' problems. In view of the contradictory statements that we have highlighted, we would like genuine assurances from you on this matter.

B--As the three French-speaking parties have said, the intercommunal dialogue must promote solutions for the social-statute communes, in a spirit of peace and justice;

C--Are you able to provide legal assurances on the constitutionality of the law which executes article 107d for Flanders and Wallonia alone?

D--In view of the many texts which have already been submitted to the Council of States, do you consider it necessary to consult with the latter on the new bill?

E--I insist on emphasizing to you that, in my view, the modification of the finance system implies an important extension of regional powers which is explained, moreover, by the fact that we are dealing this time with a definitive reform;

F--The PS believes that the executives must be placed as soon as possible outside the central government. Furthermore, we want the 1979 government declaration upheld on the coordination of the regions in various aspects of national policy;

G--As planned during the preliminary discussions, we want the realization of the immediate regionalization of the Brussels region, in particular by establishing the SRLB, SRIB and SDRB [expansions unknown] in place of its administration;

H--I remind you of our intention to obtain "real assurances" to guarantee the vote on the the definitive regionalization bill for Flanders and Wallonia before the parliamentary recess. In this respect I have proposed to you the immediate drafting of the bill and its publication as a supplement to the government declaration without prejudice to any other more favorable guarantee that you may propose.

2--Control of Public Finances:

The PSB has published with satisfaction the commitment to implement a series of claims which it holds dear, especially the 1 January 1980 improvements for the underprivileged, the restoration of the welfare allowance, the merging of married couples' incomes, land registry standardization for small dwellings and the abolition of value-added tax on investments. However, we would like a clear view of the budgetary compensation envisaged by you to maintain a balance in public finances. Could you give us precise proposals on this matter?

Mr "Formateur," please accept my best wishes.

OECD LOAN AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH TURKEY

TA071800 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 7 May 80

In its statement on the subject, the Dutch Foreign Ministry announced that the loan agreement will go into effect immediately.

Fifteen OECD countries decided to extend a $1.161 billion loan to Turkey during the OECD meeting held in Paris last month.

JAPAN CONSIDERS SENDING EXPERTS TO STUDY CANDU REACTORS

OW070343 Tokyo KYODO in English 0048 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] Ottawa May 6 KYODO--Japan is considering sending a team of experts to Canada soon to study whether to introduce Canadian Candu atomic power reactors in Japan, sources accompanying Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira revealed here Tuesday. The question of introducing the Canadian-developed reactor in Japan is the only issue in Japan-Canada trade, pending since August last year when the Japan Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) deferred its decision over a difference of views with the Ministry of Trade and Industry.

In talks with Foreign Minister Saburo Okita here Monday, Canadian External Affairs Minister Mark MacGuigan raised the issue, reaffirming Canada's strong interest in exporting the heavy-water type reactors to Japan. It appeared certain that the issue would be raised during the second round of talks between Ohira and Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau in Vancouver Tuesday, the sources said.

Candu is a heavy-water cooled reactor which uses natural uranium and has about an 80 per cent operating efficiency, compared with around 60 per cent for ordinary light-water reactors which require enriched uranium. Since 1967 MITI [Ministry of International Trade and Industry] has advocated the introduction of the Candu reactor which, it believes, would reduce Japan's dependency on U.S. enriched uranium and provide a practical stopgap until the present light-water reactors will be replaced by fast breeder reactors using plutonium.

However, AEC deferred a decision on the matter for a number of reasons. One was the necessity, underlined by the U.S. Three Mile Island incident, to establish and consolidate independent expertise in nuclear power technology, including safety, the AEC claimed. Another was the fact that Japan is developing its own advanced thermal converter reactor, also a heavy-water type. AEC argues that from the viewpoint of capital efficiency, all available resources, including manpower, should be concentrated on this development. A third problem raised by the AEC is the need in [words indistinct] earthquake-proof construction.

In view of trade relations with Canada, however, AEC does not entirely rule out introducing the Canadian reactors. The sources said a team of experts from MITI and the Science and Technology Agency would study the safety of the Candu reactor, costs of import and the possibility of earthquake-proof construction.

OHIRA CONCLUDES TALKS WITH TRUDEAU; JOINT COMMUNIQUE ISSUED

Ohira Press Comments

OW070409 Tokyo KYODO in English 0345 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] Vancouver May 6 KYODO--Japanese Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira said Tuesday Chairman Hua Guofeng had asked to meet him in Belgrade this week, but he had no idea what topics to be taken up during talks with the Chinese leader. Speaking to reporters at a hotel here, Ohira said government leaders should be ready to meet each other any time and anywhere. "I don't think this meeting (with Hua) will have any special meaning (against Moscow)," Ohira said. They are scheduled to be in the Yugoslav capital for the state funeral of President Josif Broz Tito on Thursday.

Asked if his government will import the Candu type nuclear reactor produced in Canada, Ohira said, "It seems difficult at least immediately" since a government agency decided last year to go without the reactor for nuclear power plants in Japan.

Joint Communique, Dinner Speeches

OW070357 Tokyo KYODO in English 0225 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] Vancouver May 6 KYODO--Prime Ministers Masayoshi Ohira and Pierre Elliott Trudeau issued a Joint communique upon conclusion of their second and final round of talks in Vancouver Tuesday in which they agreed on close consultations and cooperation between Japan and Canada on international questions of mutual concern. The communique said the two leaders also "reaffirmed their commitment to work together for greater stability in international affairs."

Ohira and Trudeau held their first round of talks in Ottawa Monday. They flew to Vancouver for the second and final round of talks, which lasted some 90 minutes. At their meeting Tuesday, the two leaders agreed that the Iran and Afghanistan problems should be taken up at the Venice summit in June of Western industrialized nations for the sake of unity of Western countries, according to Japanese officials. They also said discussions were conducted on having Japanese experts study the pending problem of Japan's induction of Canada's Candu heavy-water power reactor.

The officials said Trudeau told Ohira that it was necessary for the sake of unity of Western advanced countries to study political problems at the Venice meeting since the international situation has become complicated. Ohira concurred with Trudeau and stressed that the summit meetings should take up current problems and that efforts should be made to reach a consensus among the participating nations, they said. He said that problems resulting in international tension, such as Iran and Afghanistan, should be discussed at the Venice summit and positive efforts made to cope with them.

On bilateral economic issues, the officials said Trudeau noted that economic relations between Japan and Canada were developing smoothly and that he was generally satisfied. They said Ohira also expressed satisfaction over the development made in trade partnership between the two countries. Ohira and Trudeau were joined later by officials of the cabinet level. The officials said the Canadian side requested Japan to induct the Candu reactors from the standpoint of expanding exports of industrial products to Japan. Ohira they said, replied that he will have Japanese experts make a study on the Candu reactor problem.

The officials said Trudeau showed a positive stand on export of coking and steaming coal to Japan. But he indicated an extremely cautious attitude on export of oil, saying that export of oil will be made only when there is leeway in domestic demand, according to the official.

The communique issued after the meeting said that the two prime ministers expressed deep concern over the increase in international instability and reaffirmed their common belief that the continuing detention of American hostages by Iran, the Soviet armed intervention in Afghanistan and the continuing conflict in Karpuchea caused by Vietnamese military intervention should be resolved as soon as possible in accordance with the fundamental principles of the U.N. Charter and international law.

On the Olympic participation issue, the communique said that "in view of the continuing Soviet armed intervention in Afghanistan, the prime ministers agreed that it is undesirable to send a team to the Moscow Olympic games which should be held in a peaceful and friendly atmosphere."

It said the prime ministers reaffirmed the importance two countries attach to the maintenance of peace and stability on the Korean Peninsula and agreed that the emergence of China as an active member of the international community is a positive development.

"Prime Minister Ohira," it said, "outlined his perception of the Pacific Basin cooperation concept and the two prime ministers stressed the importance of promoting cooperation in the Pacific region. It said Trudeau "expressed the interest of the Canadian Government in participating fully with other Pacific nations in exploring the concept," it said.

The communique said the prime ministers noted with satisfaction that bilateral relations between their two countries had intensified in all spheres of activity in recent years. It said "the two prime ministers expressed considerable satisfaction with the major increases which have taken place in bilateral trade, which exceeded $6 billion in 1979, and expressed the hope these increases will continue." The two prime ministers, it said, recognized the importance in the trade of the two countries of raw and semi-processed materials and food products, including coal, nonferrous metals, wood and paper products, grains, oil seed and pork.

Referring to the Candu reactor, the communique said Trudeau "noted that the sale (to Japan) of the Candu system could contribute to the strengthening of bilateral trade and economic relations " It said both sides agreed that there were opportunities for continued and expanded cooperation in a number of energy areas and that detailed discussions of these matters should take place at the next meeting of the Japan-Canada joint economic committee scheduled for this autumn.

The communique said Ohira revealed the Japanese Government's intention to contribute up to $500,000 over the next three years for Japanese studies at the Asian Center in the University of British Columbia.

It said they expressed their deep sorrow at the death of President Tito of Yugoslavia and paid tribute to the great contribution which Tito had made over several decades both to Yugoslavia and to international affairs. Ohira and Trudeau "expressed confidence that the strong and independent Yugoslavia which emerged under his (Tito's) leadership will continue to pursue the goals of international peace and stability to which he devoted his life," the communique said.

Prime Minister Ohira in a dinner speech pleasure that he and Prime Minister Trudeau, in talks in Ottawa and Vancouver, reaffirmed the importance of cooperation among the countries at the rim of the Pacific. Noting that the "Pacific Basin cooperation concept" is one of his basic policy directions since taking office in 1978, Ohira stressed that Japan, Canada and other Pacific Basin countries should play constructive roles for the peace and prosperity of the region. "I feel greatly satisfied and encouraged, Mr Prime Minister, by your active interest in their worthy undertaking," Ohira said in the speech. Ohira made the speech following Trudeau's address at a dinner hosted here by the Canadian prime minister.

Ohira said another source of encouragement was the growing interest in both Canada and Japan in learning more and knowingmore about each other. "This should be nurtured and enhanced," he said.

He then took pleasure in announcing the Japanese Government's intention to make a $500,000 contribution over the next three years to the Asian Center at the University of British Columbia for its Japan studies. "I sincerely hope that the Asian Center will play a pivotal role for the promotion of cultural ties among Canada, Japan and other Asian countries," Ohira said.

He recalled that on the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railroad in 1885, a place in British Columbia was named "Craigellachie," which means "hope and success" in Gaulish, in commemoration of the historical event. "Tonight I would like to share this word "Craigellachie" with you too, Mr Prime Minister, in expectation of a continuing prosperous Pacific society in the future," Ohira said.

ONTARIO PREMIER COMMENTS ON QUEBEC REFERENDUM ISSUES

LD012352 Montreal in English to Europe 2100 GMT 1 May 80

[Text] The premier of Ontario, William Davis, entered the referendum debate today in Montreal. And while Ontario rejects sovereignty-association, he says the status quo is equally unacceptable. Mr Davis is in Montreal for 2 days, supporting the federalist cause. National affairs correspondent Harry (Hargreaves) reports:

The Ontario premier spent yesterday and most of today in press, radio and television interviews. His one public appearance was at the Montreal Board of Trade, followed by a news conference. Mr Davis told the mainly Anglophone audience that sovereignty-association means the end of partnership, the end of Canada. He said people sometimes thought that he and the people of his province have no passionate commitments and are just pragmatists.

[Begin Davis recording] You know, I have been described as a pragmatist. I am, when it comes to some activities of government. I'm a pragmatist on some occasions when it comes to dealing with issues within our own province. I make no apologies for it. But I just want people to understand when you're talking about the future of our country, that I am not a pragmatist; the people of Ontario aren't pragmatists; we are emotional about the future of Canada. We are emotional about having Quebec and Quebeckers within that nation; and no one should underestimate my feelings about this nation, nor should one underestimate, in my view, the feelings of the people that I have the honor to represent. [end recording]

Mr Davis said he was equally committed to a renewed federalism and changes in confederation. Mr Davis has, in just the past week or so, cleared up one of the problems bedevilling Ontario Francophones in the (Pelletinguishin), Ontario area, an argument about the construction of a new building for a French high school. He was questioned closely about this at his news conference, and about Ontario's commitment to language rights in general. Obviously the "no" campaign hopes that his visit will have some impact on Quebeckers, when they hear that their next-door neighbor categorically refuses to consider the option that Mr Levesque is promoting.

JAPAN'S DSP CHAIRMAN VISITS BRANDT, DISCUSSES IRAN

[Text] Bonn, May 6, KYODO--Ryosaku Sasaki, chairman of Japan's opposition Democratic Socialist Party, said Tuesday he was very much impressed by West German political leaders, who expressed grave concern over the situation in Iran and Afghanistan because they thought it had a direct bearing on their national security.

Speaking to reporters after a second round of talks with Willy Brandt, chairman of the Social Democratic Party, Sasaki said the West Germans favor quiet diplomacy on the hostage crisis at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran no matter how long it takes. They believe that undue sanctions against Iran by the United States and its allies to press Tehran into releasing the hostages might adversely affect other Gulf region countries, Sasaki added. He said Brandt and other SPD leaders showed keen interest in how far Japan can go along with nine European Community countries inimposing sanctions against Iran. Sasaki also quoted the West Germans as saying that they hope a proposed visit to Moscow by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will be made only after winning Allied approval. The foremost concern of the SPD leaders is solidarity with Allied countries, Sasaki quoted them as saying.

Sasaki, chief of the no. 4 opposition party, has been in the West German capital since Sunday. He was scheduled to head for Abu Dhabi later Tuesday.

[Georg Hofmann-Ostenhof report on Chancellor Kreisky's press conference in Bonn on 6 May]

[Excerpt] Bonn (AZ)--"Mr Chancellor, what is your assessment of the world political situation?"--"I am going to talk about it for an hour tomorrow but, if you want it in a nutshell: It is bad."

This is an excerpt from the press conference held by Chancellor Kreisky for foreign newsmen in Bonn on Tuesday. Kreisky particularly outlined the differences between the NATO state of the FRG and neutral Austria regarding their positions on various foreign policy questions.

Regarding the question of anti-Americanism, the Austrian Government chief declared that Austria sharply dissociates itself from it. The United States has been our country's most reliable friend, Kreisky said. He referred to the U.S. occupation that was marked by a positive attitude toward Austria and toward democracy, especially to the Marshall Plan to which Austria partly owes its current prosperity.

We will not indulge in anti-Americanism when U.S. foreign policy has had some bad luck here and there, the chancellor stressed. But it is precisely our friendship with America that enables us, or gives us the right to express an opinion on foreign political issues, an opinion which we regard as correct.

In this context Kreisky named three differences:

--No consent to, and nonparticipation in the Iran blockade because Austria could not even do that in the event of war.

--No advocacy of the boycott of the Moscow Olympic games.

--Reserve regarding all military actions.

We believe, Kreisky said, that military actions do not lead to success. The road of negotiations is certainly more successful. Although we have much understanding for the American policy, it is precisely because we enjoy Washington's friendship that we can afford to hold different opinions on certain issues.

In reply to the question as to whether--despite the latest PLO attempt--he was still of the opinion that the PLO should continue to be recognized, that the recognition was a good move and need not be revised, Kreisky replied that he favored the PLO's recognition because he was against the senseless murdering of people. How many more people should die before negotiations begin? There should be negotiations so that this murder, this war will cease.

I fully realize that the FRG has to employ different yardsticks, Kreisky said in reply to the question of whether he had urged Schmidt also to recognize the PLO.

Regarding the FRG chancellor's [forthcoming] trip to Moscow, the guest from Vienna declared that Schmidt certainly knew best what he was doing, "but I regard that trip as sensible and good. Twenty-five years ago we were in a similar situation and, at that time, we were told: Don't go. But the trip did bring results. At a time full of great tension it was possible to accomplish a creative act of understanding. Trips of that type should always be made."

According to Kreisky the State Treaty anniversary events will be attended by Muskie (United States), Gromyko (Soviet Union), and the French, British, FRG, CSSR, Hungarian, Yugoslav and Italian foreign ministers. "We have kept one afternoon free for talks. We will provide the opportunity. Whether it will be used is not within our discretion."

Are there chances for the nonaligned countries to mediate in Afghanistan? "Yes, I do see a chance, an initiating spark for a solution to the Afghanistan problem. And it must be quite clear: The solution to the Afghanistan problem is the withdrawal of Soviet troops."

In reply to the question as to whether the intervention of the Soviet Union in Afghanistan was a preventive intervention: "That is something one cannot know, but I do not think that the action in Afghanistan was designed to serve as a first step toward the Gulf. However, if the situation continues this could lead to a Balkanization of the region; then the situation on the Gulf might also change. But an advance to the Gulf was certainly not planned. On the other hand, it is certain that the Amin regime was very cruel. One proof of it is that, even before the Soviet Union's intervention, a great number of refugees were in Pakistan.

SCHMIDT EXPRESSES CONCERN ABOUT MILITARY MEASURES AGAINST IRAN

LD071218 Hamburg DPA in German 1128 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has expressed his "great concern" that the conflict between the United States and Iran, resulting from the hostage-taking, could widen to such a point "that the use of stronger military measures might appear to be the only possible next step." In an interview for the Cologne EXPRESS (Thursday's issue), Schmidt said that an exacerbation of this situation would certainly have unforeseeable consequences for other regions too. He hopes, however, that U.S. President Jimmy Carter will act moderately.

The chancellor added: "My concern is all the greater because the Soviet Union is unfortunately making no contribution toward solving the crisis which has arisen from the seizure of the hostages but is, instead, trying to exploit it in order to strengthen its influence in Iran."

On the question of Bonn's solidarity with the United States, Schmidt said there was no limit to this in the Atlantic Alliance. Solidarity in the Alliance today still means that every member state takes into account the vital interests of its partners, that each consults the other and that an attempt is made to work out, as far as possible, a common policy. Solidarity could not mean, therefore, that the European allies automatically follow U.S. decisions.

SCHMIDT REITERATES CALL FOR DISARMAMENT TALKS

DW080908 Bonn Press Release by the Federal Press and Information Office 7 May 80

[Prerelease of excerpts from the speech by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at an SPD election rally in Wuppertal on 7 May]

[Text] Tomorrow, 8 May, heads of state and government chiefs from many parts of the world will gather in Belgrade to pay their last respects to the late Marshal Josip Broz Tito. Surely it will be in the spirit of the distinguished statesman and communist who conquered independence for his country that many meetings will take place between responsible political leaders to discuss the critical world situation. I plan to participate in these talks.

We, the Germans, must be aware of the fact that this 8 May has yet another, historical significance which has not faded from the memory of many peoples in East and West, just as it has not faded from the memory of the older generation of our people. What I am referring to is the 35th anniversary of the final surrender of the national socialist state. When the war ended, which Hitler had planned and willfully started, we had 5 million lives to mourn. The Soviet Union had 20 million dead. Countries like Yugoslavia and Poland and Czechoslovakia, our neighbor states France, the Netherlands and Belgium, as well as Denmark and Norway suffered from the Hitlerite aggression and make terrible sacrifices.

Since the surrender on that 8 May, 3 1/2 decades have passed. But when this historic date is recalled in many capitals tomorrow we Germans must realize that the thought of World War II is as vivid as the memory of the horrors of the concentration camps. Why do I recall this so expressly today? I mention it because, in view of the German catastrophe, we have a special, inevitable duty to work for peace and not just to talk about it.

Since 1945 the Social Democratic Party of Germany has proceeded from the idea of creating a Germany which will preclude the repetition of the horrors of the past. This is how Kurt Schumacher, the first chairman of our party after the war and himself a democrat and patriot persecuted by the national socialist state, put it in 1952 in a preface to the SPD program of action adopted at the Dortmund party congress. Let me remind you of that because, in my opinion, the preservation of peace through concrete, purposeful, political work controlled by reason must be the political task which outranks everything else.

We Germans do not have any right to tutor others as to what their contribution should be toward preventing dangerous crisis developments or toward overcoming conflicts which actually exist and whose consequences are not exactly predictable. Yet, in being a nation in whose name a terrible war of aggression was waged, we must exploit every option--without overrating our potentials--and made every conceivable attempt to counteract a repetition of the horrors of the past in keeping with what Kurt Schumacher has said. In this effort we will not allow anybody to surpass us. This is why I stated at the Berlin SPD congress last year: Never again must war emanate from German soil!

I considered it very significant that the responsible man in the other, in the communist-ruled German state, has made exactly the same statement independent of me. We will do what we can also in the future to doggedly and persistently continue our policy aimed at cooperation in Europe. There is no sensible and responsible alternative to this policy. We do not underrate the weight of our contributions to peace policy. But we also know exactly the limits of our possibilities which are sometimes inaccurately viewed by others. That cannot be prevented.

On the eve of the 35th anniversary of German capitulation, on the eve of numerous talks I plan to hold which will concentrate on safeguarding peace, it must be strongly demanded again that:

First, the sincere preparedness of the Federal Government must be expressed for actively taking part in detente policy, a policy of cooperation on the basis of equal rights.

Second, the two world powers must be urgently asked a second time to take up mutual talks so that every one will know what the other's actions aim for.

Often enough and with all clarity I have characterized the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan as a grave violation of international law. But particularly because the world cannot tolerate the change of balance in this part of Asia, the return to the dialogue of the leading powers is a categorical necessity.

Third, I would like, 35 years after the end of World War II and out of a special German and European experience, to again call for an active revival of negotiations on every sensible measure regarding arms limitation and arms mitigation. Little has happened in this field lately. Neither Salt II has been ratified nor has the Soviet Union accepted the offers of the Western alliance to reduce nuclear armament to as low a level as possible. It is high time for the East and the West to sit down at a table to discuss this significant issue.

LUNS-ATTRIBUTED STATEMENTS ON U.S. TROOPS, FRG NAVY REFUTED

[Excerpts] Bonn--As far as the Federal Government knows, the United States does not plan to withdraw troops from the Federal Republic. Speaking at a press conference in Bonn today in connection with statements by NATO Secretary General Luns about a possible movement of U.S. troops from Europe to crisis areas in the Middle East, State Secretary Boelling said that, according to the impression in Bonn, this could "by no means be the case." Boelling conceded, however, that he cannot "enter into a discussion of the overall subject" on the strength of the reports of Luns' statements issued by news agencies. It is necessary to ask for a "first-hand report."

Boelling added that there has been little time to examine Luns' statement "very precisely." It is his "reliable impression" that maybe as a result of the reports the "mistaken impression" has arisen that the United States is considering the transfer of units stationed in the Federal Republic. Some thoughts on this subject matter had "of course" engaged the Federal Government's attention some time ago and "have been the subject of information as well as of talks within the Federal Security Council" whose deliberations were "not a matter for public knowledge." The Federal Security Council is a Cabinet committee whose discussions are secret.

Informed military quarters in Bonn confessed themselves" extremely astonished" by the statement attributed to Luns. Hitherto nobody in NATO knew anything of this, it was stated. What Luns is reported to have said "cannot be correct."

"There is no reason for Luns to say this," it was argued in Bonn. It can only cause confusion in the Western alliance. There can be no substitute for U.S. divisions which are no longer available in the Federal Republic. It is conceded that a situation might arise "in which one is subjected to increased demands."

The remark attributed to Luns that the German Navy might assist the United States in strengthening its military potential in the Indian Ocean is also strongly denied. "Nobody has authorised Luns to make such statements," it was said in Bonn. There will be no German presence in the Indian Ocean. "Our navy will operate only in the NATO area," it was categorically stated.

DEFENSE MINISTER APEL INTERVIEWED ON NATO POLICY

DW070828 Cologne Deutsche Welle in German to Europe 0710 GMT 7 May 80

[Reporter Mueller-Witte interview with Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel; date, place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Exactly 25 years ago the Federal Republic became a member of NATO. In this jubilee year the question has come up and is being discussed as to whether the alliance will stand up under the burden created by the crises in Afghanistan and Iran. The defense and foreign ministers of the alliance will meet in Brussels next week. Minister Apel, can the degree of solidarity be achieved which is necessary for the defense community's existence and ability to act?

[Answer] We have now been a NATO member for 25 years. In these 25 years there have been NATO crises over and over again, or what have been considered crises. An alliance of sovereign states has difficulties in forming opinions because of differing interests with which it must come to terms. This has been achieved in the 25 years of the FRG's membership.

At present we are confronted with a special challenge. It is not so much a matter of NATO in Europe; actually, this is not involved at all. We agree on all those things dealing with the organization of Europe's defense ability. We made unanimous agreements in Brussels in December. It is our assessment of the world situation that is involved, what consequences we will draw from the crises: in the Near East the Palestinians' right to self-determination, in the Middle East the liberation of the hostages, and in Southwest Asia the right of the Afghan people to self-determination. We will meet to further develop our strategy.

It seems important to me that all of us together must understand that a militant spark can easily jump from this region to other regions and that we, therefore, must pursue a purposeful policy in this region aimed at the liberation of the hostages--alive--aimed at pressing the Soviet Union to leave Afghanistan. Actions which might eventually blur the picture or produce dangers would mean following an incorrect policy. Therefore, the NATO debate will take place; therefore, there is a need to meet in Brussels and to have a frank and maybe critical debate.

[Question] You do not see any signs of a crisis if I understand you correctly?

[Answer] No, I do not see a crisis at all. I see a challenge that is unique for Europe and North America. It gives NATO a political dimension beyond Europe.

[Question] I will come back to that matter in just a minute. But, Mr Minister, let me first insert another question: What additional defense burdens will the Federal Republic have to cope with in the framework of a coordinated overall complex? Will the expectations of the United States be fulfilled?

[Answer] We, all NATO partners together with the United States, decided in the spring of 1978 on NATO's long-term defense program. We voiced various reservations, saying that we cannot do this or that at present. The United States has voiced exactly as many reservations. It says it cannot do this or that or the other. Now the United States says we must implement the long-term defense program also with regard to those issues that were debated. We will discuss this in our next session. It will then be included in our discussions in the coming months. In the end, only those things can be done that can be financed. That pertains to the United States as much as it pertains to us. In other words, at present there are no demands from the United States where I have to say it will not work. There are demands pertaining to all of us, also to the United States--demands we must debate together.

Naturally, there is one thing that I cannot accept at all, namely, that individual NATO countries such as the Federal Republic, for example, should take over a greater share than others. All must make their contribution because NATO is a defense alliance. There are no members with minority rights.

[Question] Will the core contribution of the Federal Republic be a 3 percent increase in the defense burden in real terms?

[Answer] We have agreed to that, independent of actual events. We will have to make efforts in the coming years to implement this real 3 percent every year. That will be difficult because the finance minister is facing great problems.

[Question] Mr Minister, I would like to return to what you have just mentioned. You said in one of your last speeches: There is no national security without international security. Does that not mean that in the future NATO will have to defend the security of its members beyond the treaty area in other parts of the world?

[Answer] Let us view the current situation quite soberly. What are the reasons for our concern? We are concerned about Soviet expansion, about the improvement of the Soviet Union's strategic positions. By the way, it cannot be shaken out militarily; Afghanistan is topographically in such a situation that nobody can go into action there even if he wanted to. Second, there is the concern of endangering our oil supply. Third, we are concerned about the solution of the hostage drama--the hostages must be freed alive.

Who bears responsibility here? Only the NATO states? The United States? Western Europe without France? Or does France also belong to it? Shouldn't New Zealand, shouldn't Australia be invited to become involved in solving the problem? Shouldn't a number of already developed and developing countries of Latin America become engaged? I think all these questions have to be answered in the affirmative. This indicates that it would be a grave mistake if we tried to put all these problems on the narrow shoulders of NATO. These are worldwide problems where all are urged to make their contributions to the solution of the problems.

[Question] Yes, but NATO also....

[Answer] Also NATO.

[Question] ...is supposed to help solve worldwide problems, Mr Minister.

[Answer] Correct, but not NATO as NATO, rather, NATO in its role of 14 member states which need to act on their part via NATO but particularly also via other organizations such as OECD, GATT and the International Monetary Fund. They should also be involved in bilateral actions. NATO would totally overstrain itself if it wanted to solve the problems. At best, NATO can contribute if the Americans say: We are more deeply involved somewhere else, you must relieve us in Central Europe. That must happen then, and we have debated that already.

[Question] In addition, the Bundeswehr will face a special situation if and when NATO is called upon to share in worldwide responsibility, namely, the situation resulting from the partition of Germany.

[Answer] The point at issue is not just Germany's partition. What matters is that our basic law says in no uncertain terms and without any contradictions: The Federal Republic has, and is allowed to have troops for defensive purposes, for home defense. And this makes it absolutely clear in legal terms that a Bundeswehr mission outside of Europe just cannot take place. And let me add that it is the will of those currently in government there not be any mission either.

[Question] Mr Minister, the policy of balance as you define it is the basic guideline and a basic component of the policy of the Federal Republic. Where do you see this balance disturbed at the moment, or where do you think is it threatened now? Let me also ask: How serious do you consider the danger of a major war at this time?

[Answer] I am convinced that nobody in the world, either in Moscow or elsewhere, wants war because all of us know what this would mean. War nowadays is no longer the continuation of politics with other means; rather, it would entail the destruction of our civilization. Yet there are some intensifications of the situation, some dangers which make it necessary to make greater use of war-management mechanisms. This is why we hold our continuous dialogue with the United States. This is the reason for our clear request to the Soviet Union, too, to refrain from using certain demagogic tones, because nobody will benefit in any way from a fanning, an aggravation of the climate which is rather critical already; it would merely tend to produce dangers which nobody wants.

[Question] What do you think could be the main expediency of a Moscow visit by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt?

[Answer] To begin with, this visit can take place and will take place only in close coordination with our Western allies. For this reason it can take place only after the Venice summit conference which will be in June, in late June. Secondly, thorough preparations are necessary. This must also be a visit held within a world political framework which will offer a chance of success. In other words, we are still far away from being able to say: Yes, sir, the visit will take place.

[Question] Do you, Mr Minister, think the suggestion by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt concerning both great powers not stationing nuclear medium-range weapons in Europe has a chance? I just cannot recall the Soviet Union ever having surrendered a unilateral advantage without quite concrete return concessions by the other side. As the chancellor has pointed out, the Soviet Union currently puts one SS-20 missile into position each week and commissions 2.5 medium-range bombers each month, whereas NATO will only have usable medium-range weapons 3 to 4 years from now. What is the objective of the chancellor's suggestion?

[Answer] I think we ought to tell the Soviet Union with all coolness and clarity that, unless results are attained--after all, negotiations on the limitation of these weapons are the precondition for any results--these weapons will come to Europe in late 1983 and will be stationed here, though remaining in U.S. possession. The Soviet Union terms these weapons a very special threat to its own territory, and I will readily admit that surely there is something to this argument. Yet the Soviet Union can prevent this deployment only if it does not let the potential which is under development in the Soviet Union grow even further; you have referred to it already. This is the reason for the monition, the request of the chancellor, to the Soviet Union: Please halt the production, halt the deployment of these weapons and then make negotiations easier. If the Soviet Union builds up its potential week after week in such a way hardly anything reasonable can come of negotiations unless the Soviet Union is prepared to scrap these weapons unilaterally. It is more prudent to negotiate today. This would reduce tension and would save a great deal of money.

[Question] So do you believe, on principle, that negotiations on SALT II, meaning on the nuclear medium-range weapons, between the Soviet Union and the United States can and will take place in the foreseeable future?

[Answer] I am not a prophet, but if I try to put myself in the shoes of the Moscow politicians I come up with the result that they should actually want these negotiations. They cannot have them at the price that NATO rescinds its decisions beforehand, as they have demanded so far. They can have them only if there are negotiations without preconditions, so to speak. For this reason it is important to let world politics cool down so that reason will again prevail everywhere and a course will be pursued which is in one's own interests, yet in the interest of peace in general.

[Question] From this alone we might draw the conclusion that you believe that detente policy is more than just a tactical variant of a world revolutionary objective for the Soviet Union.

[Answer] Detente policy has been beneficial to both sides economically as well as with respect to improved security. It has also been beneficial to people at large. It goes without saying, however, that detente policy has not done away with the race between the systems at any time: On the contrary, the competition between two rival social systems has intensified. There are, after all, movement in Eastern Europe as well. I am convinced that the Soviet Union is bound to be interested in a continuation of this policy. However, detente policy can be successful solely on the basis of the balance of forces. If militarily and economically unequal parties want to negotiate agreements with each other, then negotiations on agreements become supplications and the negotiated result turns into a diktat. We cannot and will not allow that.

[Question] Mr Minister, you consider energy policy and the North-South dialogue important components of balance policy. Is it necessary to do more in these fields in the future?

[Answer] Let me discuss just one aspect. If the Europeans and the North Americans fail to make themselves even more independent from the energy supply from the critical region, that is to say, unless we use domestic coal to a greater extent, save energy or also utilize nuclear energy, then we will remain too dependent on regions whose future development we cannot predict. This is why energy policy is also part of a correctly interpreted security policy. Anyone failing to make themselves independent in this regard will contribute toward peace being jeopardized because a shortage in energy sources can only too easily lead to conflicts.

ANDREOTTI DECLINES INVITATION TO VISIT IRAN

[Text] Rome, May 7 (ANSA)--Lower House Foreign Affairs Commission Chairman Giulio Andreotti has declined an invitation to visit Tehran next week. The former premier explained that he had to refuse the invitation, extended officially today by the Iranian charge d'affaires in Rome, because of previous commitments in Brussels where the Interparliamentary Union convenes next week. Andreotti is president of the Italian section.

Iranian authorities invited the Italian politician to visit Tehran so that he could get first-hand information of the country and the "real intentions" that allegedly led the United States to carry out the abortive raid to rescue the hostages in the Iranian capital. Referring to the second round of elections for the Iranian parliament Friday, Andreotti voiced the hope that it will be able to convene immediately and get into contact with other European parliamentarians, the Italians in particular. He also said he hoped the Iranian parliament will join the Interparliamentary Union.

COLOMBO ADDRESSES DEPUTIES ON ATLANTIC 'OBLIGATIONS'

[Excerpt] A foreign policy debate is in progress in the Chamber of Deputies following a speech by Foreign Affairs Minister Emilio Colombo. Angelo Haver reports:

Foreign Affairs Minister Colombo has replied in the Chamber of Deputies to questions and inquiries on the international situation, a situation which is providing additional reasons for preoccupation and alarm every moment.

As in the Senate a few days ago, Colombo softened the criticism which was initially addressed to the American Government regarding the Tehran blitz initiative. As for European adherence to the sanctions decided upon by the United States, this must be understood as an instrument of pressure on Iran so as to obtain release of the hostages in a bloodless fashion, according to Colombo.

Colombo asserted that Iran, and more generally the situation in the region to the north of the Persian Gulf--in which Afghanistan, subjected to the drama of the Soviet invasion, constitutes the focal point--confronts us as Italians and Europeans, with difficult choices which first and foremost concern the bonds of Atlantic solidarity. In this connection, concerning Atlantic solidarity, Colombo specified the commitments which we must meet: In the event of attack against any territory belonging to member countries, there is the obligation of common defense; in the case of events in other parts of the world, which can also exert influence on the interests of the member countries, there is the obligation to hold frank and timely consultations.

The minister's ample survey, which also touched on other international problems, such as those of the European Economic Community, was followed by a debate which will continue tomorrow.

The minister of foreign affairs did not mention the death of Tito and the possible repercussions, whether good or bad, of his nonalignment policy. This was discussed instead by the Communist Bufalini in an editorial to be published in RINASCITA. Bufalini laments the lack of initiatives--however partial--aimed at launching concrete negotiations and, he asserts, it is precisely here, that the lesson of nonalignment must be drawn by Europe, too, and by Atlantic Europe especially.

MAGISTRATES ISSUE FIVE MORE ARREST WARRANTS IN MORO CASE

AU030825 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 3 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 3 (ANSA)--Rome magistrates issued five new arrest warrants yesterday in connection with the spring 1978 kidnapping and killing of Christian Democrat Party Chairman Aldo Moro. The warrants, containing charges similar to those filed earlier this week against Rafaele Fiore after his capture, were signed by magistrates following up on leads provided by Patrizio Peci, the "repentant Red Brigade" terrorist picked up in Turin on February 20. In his confession, Peci has reportedly identified virtually all of the "Red Brigade" urban guerrillas who captured the Christian Democrat statesman, shot down his five-man police escort then, 53 days later, on May 9, 1978, killed Moro and left his body in a car parked in downtown Rome. The talking terrorist is said to have fingered Mario Moretti, at large, as the brains behind the spectacular act and as the go-between linking the "Red Brigades" policy-makers and the terrorists responsible for strategy. Fiore allegedly had the job of drugging Moro and removing him from the vehicle used during the kidnapping to another getaway car. The only person identified in connection with yesterday's arrest warrants, 26-year-old Luca Nicolotti, was allegedly one of the gunmen who shot and killed the victim's escort. Two other alleged participants are Prospero Gallinari, captured after a shootout with police last year, and Moretti's girlfriend, Barbara Balzarani, large.

BERLINGUER EXPRESSES SATISFACTION WITH CHINA TRIP

AU260942 Rome ANSA in English 0840 GMT 26 Apr 80

[Text] Rome, March 26 (ANSA)--In an interview appearing in the next issue of the Italian weekly L'ESPRESSO, Italian Communist Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer voices satisfaction for his visit to China. "First of all because the resumption of relations with the Chinese Communist Party, which is important in itself, came about on the most correct and solid foundations: recognition of the full autonomy of each of the two parties; frankness and clarity in the exposition of their respective points of view even if they are in conflict on important issues; and a mutual effort at understanding and rapprochement", Berlinguer said. In reply to a question, the PCI secretary ruled out that this trip to China can lead to "negative repercussions" in the international workers' movement. "On the contrary, I believe that the resumption and development on relations between the Chinese and Italian Communist parties can have positive consequences in the international workers' movement. We have shown that even when there are serious differences, it is possible to have a dialogue, to have good relations and to work together to find areas of cooperations", Berlinguer added. "An affirmation of this method in relations between all parties and the subsequent overcoming of so many conflicts would represent a virtual leap forward in the development of the world workers movement", the PCI leader concluded.

FOREIGN MINISTER CITED ON OLYMPIC BOYCOTT ISSUE

LD071553 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 4 May 80 pt 1 p 1

[Chr. Brondum report: "The Government May Be Forced To Boycott Olympics"]

[Text] The Danish Government, which until now has left a decision on Danish participation in the summer Olympics in Moscow to the Danish Olympic Committee and the Danish Athletics Association, will no longer dismiss the idea that it may become necessary to ask Danish sportsmen to stay away from Moscow. It is, however, the government's hope that political interference in sporting matters can be avoided.

The government's problem is that, whereas the Danish Olympic Committee will reach its decision at a meeting next week, a number of Western European countries, including West Germany, will not reach a decision until later in May. This could mean that Denmark might come to stand alone in agreeing to participate. Norway has already decided to boycott the games.

Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE that he and Culture Minister Lise Ostergaard made the government position clear at a meeting last week with the Danish Olympic Committee, the International Olympic Committee and the Danish Athletics Association. It is still the government's intention to let the sporting organizations reach their own decision.

"But if it turns out that other countries' governments make requests to their Olympic committees, then the Danish Government will have to consider the situation again. It is my hope that if West Germany's and other countries' Olympic committees decide against participation, the Danish Olympic Committee will of its own accord take up the question of Danish participation again. If this does not happen, then I cannot dismiss the possibility of a government initiative. But the government would only enter into such a situation with great reluctance," Kjeld Olesen maintained.

MUSKIE APPOINTMENT IS 'BRIGHT SPOT IN DARK PERIOD'

LD071003 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 1 May 80 pt 1 p 10

[Editorial: "The Man Sitting Next to Carter"]

[Text] President Carter has greatly strengthened his administration in the present crisis through the appointment of Senator Edmund Muskie as secretary of state. It is one of the grand old Democrats in American politics whom Carter is now introducing to his administration, and the only man in the Cabinet who can be compared with the President in political stature. He has not only been on the road to the White House in his own right as a presidential and vice-presidential candidate, but he has been one of the leading figures in the Senate and is, moreover, liked and respected in Congress as well as by the general public.

The appointment represents something of a return to the tradition, which evaporated at the beginning of the century, that the secretary of state should be a politician, of virtually the same political stature as the President. But it is, however, less an expression of historical continuity than of President Carter's admission of his own political weakness. He has need of a symbol of new confidence, and he has found it. For a long time now the Senate has not contained a man with a better reputation for personal honesty and political moderation than Muskie and his name ought to vouch for the continued [fortsatt] solidity of American foreign policy. [paragraph continues]

It will always be the President who has the final decision, but it seems unthinkable that Muskie would have accepted the post after the departure of Cyrus Vance without having made sure of certain guarantees of a decisive influence. His appointment must mean that Carter has undertaken to follow a more uniform foreign policy, with the implication that Professor Brzezinski's strategic influence is on the retreat and will be limited to a coordinating role within the National Security Council. It is a bright spot in a dark period that Carter has been able to bring off such a fortunate appointment for such an important post.

PRICE OF OIL DISCUSSED WITH IRAN

LD061340 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1030 GMT 6 May 80

[Text] The state oil company has said that Finland and Iran are at present discussing the price of 250,000 tons of oil currently being shipped from Iran to Finland. Iran decided at the end of March to raise the price of its oil from $32.5 to $35 a barrel. Iranian Oil Minister 'Ali Akbar Mo'infar announced that the increases would come into effect at the beginning of April. Finland will import altogether 1 million tons of oil from Iran this year. Of this amount a quarter is at present on the way to Finland. Finland imports 7 million tons of oil from the Soviet Union, 2 million tons from Saudi Arabia and 1.2 million tons from Iraq. It has been estimated that Finland's oil bill this year will be $13 billion, while last year's oil bill was about $9 billion.

PAPER VIEWS CARTER'S REASONS FOR APPOINTING MUSKIE

LD070931 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 2 May 80 p 2

[Editorial: "A Middle-of-the-Road Man"]

[Text] President Jimmy Carter's action was as swift as it was surprising, when on Tuesday he appointed Edmund Muskie as the United States' next secretary of state. The choice of the 66-year-old senator from Maine was for once a well-kept secret in Washington, where news leaks are legion, and it is a decision which has without exception been greeted with positive comments.

Edmund Muskie cannot consider himself an expert on foreign affairs. During his 22 years in the Senate he has primarily devoted his interest to tax and budget questions, but he has other qualities that can make him the secretary of state that the United States needs today. Even if he did not make it all the way, when he fought against Nixon in 1968 with Hubert Humphrey, or when he tried to get into the White House 4 years later--and when he on one occasion broke down under sniping from political enemies--he is one of the politicians who enjoys the highest esteem in the United States and who is respected abroad. With his general background and his reputation, his prospects of becoming the first secretary of state in many years to have a greater say on policy matters than the President's security adviser are good.

There is an obvious touch of domestic political tactics in Carter's choice of Muskie. With his quick decision he is trying to silence criticism from Congress and patch up the rift that arisen in the Democratic front since Cyrus Vance resigned in protest against the Iranian gamble. The fact that Muskie comes from the northeastern United States, where Carter's support has collapsed more quickly than in other regions, can also contribute to an improvement in the President's prospects before the election in the fall. Last but not least, the choice of a liberal Democratic and a moderate is an attempt by Carter to convince his allies, whose concern is still growing, that American foreign policy will be handled differently from in the past.

COMMITTEE REPORT SEEN AS IGNORING NEED FOR STRONG DEFENSE

[Stif Lofgren article: "Defense Policy in Disrepair"]

[Text] The parliamentary standing committee on defense appointed in 1978 by the three-party government of the day has the task of preparing and submitting to the authorities information to serve as the basis for the next long-term defense resolution, to be adopted in 1982. Properly approached, this is a responsible and difficult task because, after many years of directionless policies, the most important and most expensive component in our overall defenses, the armed forces, is experiencing a far-reaching reduction in armanents which unfortunately is anything but planned. Conscripts' basic training has been shortened, annual military refresher courses have been curtailed or completely abandoned, and renewal of material has been neglected. In this way the fighting strength of the armed forces has been sapped and, in particular, the number of trained units has been drastically reduced, so far mostly in the navy and the air force.

However, the committee's task does not mean, in case anyone thought so, that experts examine Sweden's need for different types of defense equipment, both military and civilian, and then propose measures which will stop the continuing weakening of the defense system. That would have required a much bigger budget, something which no politician at the time even dared to discuss, much less authorize. That the aim was continuing, planned disarmament is obvious from the directives signed by Minister Kronmark--then, as now, defense minister. The "thorough analysis" that was called for should lead to the goal of "creating a balance between aims and resources." This sounds correct, and it ought to be recorded to Mr Kronmark's credit that he clearly dissociated himself from earlier laissez-faire policies. But the instructions, in plain, unpolished language, mean that the committee should take the ax to an organization which suited the given economic framework tolerably well, and compose a motivation for this action.

The defense committee carried out the first part of its task, the motivation, in the report published last year called "Our Security Policy," where it deals with international trends, the strategic situation in northern Europe, the risks for our country and the objectives of Swedish defense. In the committee's view, in the event of war in Europe the great power blocs will rely, at least initially, on conventional weapons, and military operations can most readily be expected to take the form of geographically limited assaults. Pointing to the Arctic areas of the Nordic countries and the Kola Peninsula and to the exits from the Baltic Sea--generally recognized as strategic focal points--it reaches the conclusion that great importance should be attached to northern Norrland and southern Sweden, whereas on the other hand a lower troop strength would be sufficient for the country's central region.

It is not necessary to question the committee's estimates of the nature of a major war in order to offer serious objections to the low priority given to central Sweden with, for example, the capital, seat of our civilian and military authorities, and a prime target therefore for a surprise attack. If an emergency defense force is needed anywhere, it is surely here. It is remarkable, to say the least, that Gotland, that vulnerable part of our nation, is not mentioned at all.

Another curious thing can also be mentioned. The experts write in several places that in a conflict between West and east Swedish territory could be of interest as a corridor region. But, apart from a hidden hint that Swedish territory could serve as "an advance defensive position," there is no word of what significance our country could have as a base area. The majority of serious observers are, however, agreed that it would be of great advantage, both defensively and offensively, to the Soviet Union, for instance, to be able to use Swedish Air Force bases in a war with the West. Even if the committee should happen to hold a different opinion, the question of bases ought nevertheless to have been analyzed.

It must finally be pointed out that the committee has slipped unconcernedly past the problem of initial preparedness during peacetime as protection in the event of the country being put on a war footing. It states that in the event of a war in northern Europe the Scandinavian region could be quickly involved, and that the technical possibilities for surprise attack are growing. But is it then defensible just to continue along the old tracks and rely on the intelligence service to save us from being caught napping? Does Sweden, almost alone of the countries in this part of the world, not need a standing defense force? The question deserved detailed consideration, but the committee shies off. Why? With great verbal skill the 1978 defense committee follows a line of argument that, when considered more deeply, is intellectually dishonest. The argumentation is colored by the intention of convincing the Swedish people that we can retain the current objectives for our defense forces without having to increase investments of money or labor, that is to say, with a weaker organization. It would have been more honest if the experts had refrained from painting a pretty strategic picture and instead illuminated the risks connected with the continued reduction of the military forces.

How is the equation to be solved within the current difficult economic framework? It has been clear for a long time that politicians from different camps, in an attempt to save the material quality of the defense forces, are prepared to sacrifice personnel and even universal conscription. While it is true that they do not use the dirty word "category splitting" [kategoriklyvning], that is what in reality lurks behind the talk of "total defense obligations" often heard in the past. It is clear that these ideas have also been signposts for the defense committee: They can be seen in the above-mentioned report's final chapter, where the experts give an account of their view of the investigatory work that remains.

This new direction in defense policy has now received official sanction through Mr Kronmark's supplementary directive to the committee. Referring to the strains on the economy and the equal strains on state finances, the minister speaks of the need for attempts at rationalization and restructuring--read: limitations on the military forces. While paying lipservice to universal conscription, he recommends a regulation under which a number of able-bodied young men are exempted from military service to be directly transferred to the civil defense sectors of total defense, and under which training time is further shortened for some military conscripts. Defense Minister Kronmark and his colleagues in the government realize of course, that a military force needs both good equipment and well-trained personnel, and that 'category splitting' means significant and, as it were, practical disadvantages and can have disastrous psychological consequences. They are bound to realize also that these new signals hardly strengthen the credibility of Swedish security policy. But to ask the Riksdag for the necessary resources--for that they have not sufficient political courage. Continued disarmament is the current password at a time when the heady delights of the detente era of the seventies have long disappeared and the rate of rearmament is being stepped up around us, when the Soviet Union has invaded a small neighbor, and when Danes and Norwegians are reflecting on the 40th anniversary of 9 April.

SVENSKA DAGBLADET pointed out a while ago (11 January) the necessity for "the democratic parties to direct themselves toward a new defense resolution which will break themselves toward a new defense resolution which will break a trend which today seems completely irresponsible and in the long term could be catastrophic." No amount of skillful advocacy can hide the inability of those in power to put things back on the right road. Their ritual assurances that a strong defense force will be maintained, for the defense of the nation and as a contribution to the stability of Scandinavia, can only give cold comfort.

CARRINGTON CANCELS BELGRADE TRIP; IRAN SANCTIONS DECIDED

LD072140 London BBC Television Network in English 2000 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] The foreign secretary, Lord Carrington, has cancelled his visit to President Tito's funeral tomorrow so that he can concentrate on new [security] safeguards. Among them could be the closure of the Libyan Embassy here and the reintroduction of the visa system for all Iranians entering the country. This report on the fight against terrorism by our political editor, John Simpson:

Something like 30 million people pass through Heathrow Airport every year and among them there are maybe 30 terrorists. That's one in a million. Not surprisingly they are almost never stopped; their passports are genuine and anyway they enter Britain as visitors. The immigration officials tend to concentrate on people who are coming here to settle or to pork, not on visitors, The two countries most involved are Libya and Iraq. Again, the number of people entering Britain from there is very large--33,000 and 35,000 respectively--the great majority of them completely innocent. But there is no doubt that some have been coming here in order to commit acts of terrorism. Since the beginning of 1978 the feuds of the Middle East have been breaking out in London; 12 dead in 2 years. Some of the killings had been linked with the Palestinian question, but there has been a distinct Iraqi involvement as well.

Then, in the past few weeks, a new trend has established itself: the settling of accounts by Libya, though it was Iraq, not Libya, which was suspected of being involved in the siege of the Iranian Embassy. Iraq's own embassy is now under heavy police guard, no doubt to protect it from the possible vengeance of Iranians in London. But in the wake of the siege the one surviving terrorist in custody is being interrogated about the hostage-takers, and if Iraqi diplomats turn out to be involved the government will throw them out.

The Libyan Embassy is different. The government has no doubt that the two Libyan dissidents who've been murdered recently were killed by men connected with the embassy. There are few genuine diplomats left here. The British attitude has hardened since a top official went to Libya last week to see Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's government and was given the cold shoulder. Labour is pressing the government for action.

[Begin Merlyn Rees, shadow home secretary, recording] I think one ought to look very closely at the Libyan Embassy, particularly when their leader, Colonel al-Qadhdhafi, has said that certain people from his country living here ought to be liquidated if they did not go home. I have heard stories of Libyans who are afraid because, after all, there was a murder of a Libyan last week. Given the fact that a head of state says "liquidate people living in that country," then I think serious consideration has got to be given to closing down the Libyan Embassy which is not at the moment being used by accredited diplomats but by people who have simply occupied the place with the agreement, admittedly, of the head of state. Well he can't change the international rules. [end recording] That is very much the government's attitude as well, and it now looks as though some at least of the people at the Libyan Embassy will be thrown out within the next week.

In the meantime the government has taken its decision on what to do about sanctions against Iran, assuming that the American hostages in Tehran are not released by the deadline set by the EEC foreign ministers, that is, 17 May. This morning ministers approved the final details of a sanctions bill but it won't go all that far. The sanctions will cover any future contracts with Iran but it looks as though existing contracts and financial dealings such as banking and insurance won't be touched. With the prudence which the government does not seem to be adopting in its approach to Libya, it will leave the question of sanctions on present contracts with Iran until the Common Market countries as a whole have reached agreement.

PRESIDENT KIPRIANOU DEPARTS FOR BELGRADE, LAUDS TITO

[Excerpts] President Kiprianou has just left for Belgrade to attend the funeral of late Yugoslav President Marshal Tito that will be held tomorrow afternoon. President Kiprianou is accompanied by Foreign Minister Rolandhis. Earlier, Mr Kiprianou and Mr Rolandhis visited the Yugoslav Embassy in Nicosia and signed the book of condolences.

In a statement at Larnaca Airport President Kiprianou said that his visit to Belgrade is the least tribute that can be paid to this great leader. Marshal Tito, he said, was not only a great leader of his fatherland but he was also a world personality of immense stature. He added: In many difficult moments Tito helped through his initiatives in bringing about relaxation and detente guided by world peace based on freedom and justice.

Mr Kiprianou added that the late leader inspired and guided the nonaligned movement--within which his role has been tremendous--and was also the friend of small nations struggling for freedom. He continued: He was a great world personality of our era and the void that remains following his death cannot be filled. Marshal Tito loved Cyprus, not only because we are a small country but because our great leader Ethnarch Makarios attended the first Belgrade conference in order to sign the nonaligned declaration. I had the great honor and privilege to accompany him, as foreign minister.

Mr Kiprianou said that a close friendship and cooperation had developed between Yugoslavia and Cyprus, between Tito and Makarios. He continued: During that period I had the great honor on many occasions to accompany Ethnarch Makarios during his contacts and talks with Marshal Tito. He loved Makarios and he loved Cyprus, not only because it is a small country but because it is a small country that struggles for the ideals of freedom and human dignity, ideals which Tito, the great leader of Yugoslavia and the whole world, believed in and struggled for.

President Kiprianou continued: It is said that the last of the great leaders has gone. Truly it was a great period with great leaders. He was among the great and he was the last of the great. History will record with gold letters all that Tito has offered, not only to Yugoslavia but to all mankind. Mr Kiprianou continued: The last time I had the great honor of meeting with Marshal Tito, who honored me with his friendship, was during the latest nonaligned conference in Havana. Despite his old age and the many problems that he had to study, resolve or handle, he also showed interest at our private meeting in becoming aware of developments in the Cyprus issue and very vividly and strongly stressed his multifaceted support for the Cyprus people's struggle for freedom and justice. Like all the other freedom-loving nations, Mr Kiprianou continued, the Cypriot people also owe a debt of gratitude to Marshal Tito for all that he has done for humanity and the great ideals.

He added: After Belgrade I will go to London as planned, for a general medical examination because of the prolonged and unremitting lung inflamation from which I am suffering. There is no reason, he said, for any concern. I will return, he concluded, as soon as possible in order to continue my duties and struggles at the head of the Cypriot people for the good of the Cypriot people and their national issue.

The president was seen off at Larnaca Airport by the president of the House of Representatives, Mr Mikhailidhis, who will be the acting president, ministers, members of the diplomatic corps and other officials.

Visit With Enclaved Populace

NC071750 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] President of the Democratic Rally Party Kliridhis visited the enclaved people inthe Karpas Peninsula today. His visit started from the St Barnabas Monastery and covered the villages of Rizokarpasso, Ayia Trias and Leonarisso. After his visit, Mr Kliridhis stated that he had talked privately with many residents of the area and his own appraisal was that the main problem facing them was the feeling of being cut off from the rest of the island. Mr Kliridhis said: They hope and pray for the solution of this problem as soon as possible. He also established that the morale of those enclaved was high and that it was their wish that the talks be resumed so that a just and viable solution of our problem might be found.

Mr Kliridhis said that during his visit he called at schools and delivered gifts to schoolchildren. Mr Kliridhis went on: One of the problems facing those enclaved is alienation from their loved ones--their children and their relatives. He added: It is their desire that arrangements be made for children to spend holidays in their villages. Mr Kliridhis also said that another problem facing those enclaved was medical treatment, noting that they would feel more comfortable if they could go to Nicosia for medical services. He said that another problem was the inability of those enclaved to communicate with their relatives through correspondence. He also said that, as far as he was told, the distribution of foodstuffs was being carried out regularly by the United Nations.

In conclusion, Mr Kliridhis said the enclaved people gave him a memorandum on their problems that will be submitted to the government.

TA071902 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1630 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] The leader of the Greek Cypriot Democratic Rally Party, Mr Kliridhis, has stressed the importance of establishing an atmosphere conducive to constructive intercommunal talks over the Cyprus problem. Mr Kliridhis was speaking at Bogaz Hotel in Famagusta at the end of a visit to the Greek Cypriots living in the Karpas area today. Mr Kliridhis, who was accompanied by the director of the Turkish Cypriot Public Information Office, Mr Cagin, also visited the St Barnabas Monastery. In a statement, Mr Kliridhis said that too much was being said publicly and too little was being said in a friendly atmosphere privately, which might have helped to remove misgivings and misunderstandings by both sides. He added that his visit had been very profitable.

Mr Kliridhis said: I wish that both sides will soon find a way to sit round the negotiating table not merely to find a solution to the Cyprus, but also to [word indistinct] to build real bridges of trust and confidence between the two communities, which I sincerely believe and have always believed would be the benefit of both Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots. If we are sincere in our wish to live side by side in friendship and cooperation and understanding, it is necessary to establish bridges of contact between the two communities. He concluded by saying that he had always believed that beyond the things which divide the two communities, there were many things which could unite the two communities in an effort to live and prosper on the same island.

QOTBZADEH STOPS OVER IN ANKARA ON WAY TO BELGRADE

TA071812 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] Iranian Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh, who is on his way to Yugoslavia to attend Tito's funeral, met with State Minister Ekrem Ceyhun at Ankara's Esenboga Airport. Replying to reporters' questions before the meeting, Qotbzadeh expressed the [word indistinct] that the historical ties of friendship between Turkey and Iran will always continue. In reply to a question of whether Iran will increase its oil sales to Turkey, he said: We want to cooperate with Turkey in every field. We sincerely wish to meet the requests of our brothers in Turkey. In reply to another question, Qotbzadeh said the problems between the United States and Iran do not necessitate mediation.

Remarks on Current Situation

TA072030 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 7 May 80

[Excerpt] Replying to reporters' questions at Ankara's Esenboga Airport today, Iranian Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh said that the U.S. hostages are in the hands of the students and that if the United States continues with its attacks, his government will not protect the hostages.

In reply to another question on whether his praise of the attitude of the British Government during the siege of the Iranian Embassy in London would justify a similar operation by the United States, Qotbzadeh said: There is no connection whatsoever between the embassy siege in London and the incident in Iran. Persons who were provoked by the Iraqi Government and who wish to divide Iran raided our embassy in London. The Americans who are being held hostage in Tehran, on the other hand, are people who were involved in torture incidents during the shah's regime and who have been spies.

Replying to another question on his country's oil sales to Turkey, Qotbzadeh noted that his government wishes to develop its relations with Turkey in every field, saying that, if Turkey makes a request on this issue, they can meet this request. He said that this subject should be discussed between oil ministers.

[Excerpt] National Salvation Party leader Necmettin Erbakan has announced that he will pay a 3-day visit to Iran from 15 to 17 May at the invitation of Iranian President Bani-Sadr.

In a news conference he held at the parliament today, Erbakan expressed the hope that during his visit to Iran he will have an opportunity to meet with Ayatollah Khomeyni, President Bani-Sadr, Islamic Party leader Beheshti and Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh. Pointing out that the aims of his Iranian visit are to develop fraternity and solidarity between Turkey and Iran, Erbakan said: This trip does not signify that our party supports a certain side in the disagreements between Islamic countries. He noted that his party is in favor of the establishment of genuine and sincere fraternity and cooperation between Turkey, Iran and Iraq.

Noting that the United States is attempting to prevent the Islamic countries from growing stronger and is following a policy in this direction, Erbakan said that the embargos imposed on Turkey and Iran are the results of this policy.

We will always remember him with respect.

Please accept our communist greetings.

FRANCE

FOREIGN MINISTER ON MOSCOW MAY DAY PARADE, AFGHANISTAN, IRAN

NC071525 Paris AFP in English 1510 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] Paris, May 7 (AFP)--France sees no reason to disturb everyday relations with the Soviet Union, though it finds Soviet justifications for the military intervention in Afghanistan unacceptable, Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet said here today. The presence of the French ambassador at the May Day parade in Moscow last Thursday when many other Western diplomats stayed away should not therefore be given undue significance, he told the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee. France had information indicating a "vast movement of popular resistance" to the Soviet presence in Afghanistan, he added.

Mr Francois-Poncet also commented that the activities of United Nations Secretary General Kurt Waldheim remained the most likely to achieve release of the American hostages in Iran. France would not comment on the abortive American mission to free the hostages, of which it had not been informed, but any state whose citizens had been taken hostage was justified in launching an operation to free them, he added. France like other nations had used this right in the past, Mr Francois-Poncet said.

PORTUGAL

GOVERNMENT URGES OLYMPIC COMMITTEE TO BOYCOTT MOSCOW

LD071412 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] The Cabinet yesterday sent a letter to the chairman of the Portuguese Olympic Committee conveying its decision regarding Portugal's nonparticipation in the Moscow Olympic games. The Cabinet justifies its stand on the following grounds:

The Portuguese Government is of the opinion that the Soviet Union committed a grave infringement of international law by invading Afghanistan with its regular army, by maintaining this country under military occupation and violently repressing the armed resistance of the Afghan people, despite the formal condemnation approved by the United Nations and expressed by world opinion.

Secondly, the government takes the view that the Soviet authorities will not refrain from exploiting to their advantage the presence in the Moscow Olympics of those who, in spite of all, may decide to participate, and will seek to derive dividends in favor of the USSR and of its intervention in Afghanistan from any attendance of the games, even if those present are solely motivated by sporting reasons. The government believes that the only way of keeping sports and politics apart and of not harming the Olympic games in the present situation is to stay away from Moscow.

Thirdly, the letter adds, in view of the number of countries that have already decided not to participate in the 1980 Olympics--from the United States to the PRC, including West Germany, Kenya and Saudi Arabia--the government takes the view that Portugal's presence in Moscow would make no sense. The letter goes on to say that, while fully respecting the Olympic committee's autonomy of decision, the Cabinet has decided to recommend that it should follow the example of its foreign counterparts that have already decided not to attend the 1980 Olympic games in Moscow. The government says that it is aware of the great sacrifice that must thus be asked of the Portuguese sportsmen who have been training for the competition, but pledges to facilitate and support the participation of those who will accept this sacrifice in all international competitions over the next 2 years.

LEGAL ADVISERS STUDY SANCTIONS AGAINST IRAN

AU081946 Rome ANSA in English 1915 GMT 8 May 80

[Text] Brussels, May 8 (ANSA)--The European Economic Community sanctions against Iran, awaiting application on the decision of a May 17 Council of Ministers meeting in Naples in consideration of possible progress made toward the liberation of (?the) American hostages, will mean the cancellation of all new and current contracts between the Community and Iran.

The group of legal advisers established by the Council of Ministers, after agreement on the projected sanctions was reached on April 22, is expected to reach this ruling on contracts at the end of its study on [words indistinct] of the sanctions through measures enforced at the national level.

Diplomatic sources in Brussels and sources close to the EEC Executive Commission disclosed this development today and pointed out that the nine Community foreign ministers, in the decision to formulate the sanctions, explicitly referred to the United Nations Security Council resolution of January 10 which was blocked by a Soviet veto. This resolution, according to the interpretation expected to be applied by the Community's legal experts, calls for an across-the-boards cancellation of all old and new contracts with Iran.

These sources said that (?political) considerations could, however, condition the final ruling of the Council of Ministers and indicated by way of example current contracts held by Italian industries with a total value of some three billion dollars and involving about 1,800 Italian technicians and workers.

TARIFFS TO BE ELIMINATED ON TURKISH AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

TA080857 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] The tariffs applied to Turkish agricultural products exported to EEC countries will be eliminated by 1987. The Turkish representatives were advised of the EEC ministerial council decisions regarding the requests of the Turkish Government during the EEC-Turkey Association Committee meeting in Brussels today. According to information received by a TRT correspondent from Turkish Embassy officials in Brussels, the tariffs applied to Turkish agricultural products exported to EEC countries will be automatically reduced in accordance with a schedule as of 1 January 1981.

It was also decided during the meeting today to start preparatory talks for Turkey's adaption to the EEC's joint agricultural policy and to establish a special agricultural group.

On the issue of the free movement of Turkish workers in EEC countries, there was no concrete reply by the EEC. However, the proposals submitted by the EEC to Turkey include the issue of adding the number of working years in Turkey of Turkish workers in EEC countries to the number of working years in the EEC countries. The EEC also decided that the special aid to be extended to Turkey within the framework of the OECD be used by the Turkish Government in whatever projects they wish.

Turkish Embassy officials in Brussels noted that the real talks between Turkey and the EEC began after the EEC-Turkey Association Committee meeting in Brussels today.

KURIER CRITICIZES CARTER FOR FAILING TO ATTEND TITO FUNERAL

AU081048 Vienna KURIER in German 8 May 80 p 2

[Heinz Nussbaumer commentary: "Only One is Absent"]

[Text] Today's mourning ceremony for Tito will be the occasion for probably the only group photograph of leading political figures in this century. But many years from now historians may still be wondering why one single top ranking statesman excluded himself from this graveside meeting, voluntarily, without political reason, probably out of a no longer controllable urge for self-destruction: Jimmy Carter.

At the most vulnerable spot between the two big blocs, at the most emotional hour of a people fearing for its future, at a great moment of symbols and gestures America's President is absent. The dimension of this mistake became clear when Leonid Brezhnev, after Carter had declined, suddenly announced he would be coming. If there was any need for further evidence--Jimmy Carter has now finally taken the step from being an unlucky politician to being a political risk.

The man who was elected after the Vietnam tragedy as the antithesis of bureaucrats and "internationalists" has failed owing to his own small-town image. Town between power and morals, caught in the contradiction between anticommunism and credulity, he has ultimately failed to pass the central acid test of U.S. foreign policy: the permanent double game of competition and cooperation with the Soviet Union.

The failure becomes obvious through the example of Belgrade: Carter is not flying to the funeral so as not to have to meet the Kremlin leaders face to face. What he would like to see as "punishment" for Brezhnev is actually a bad sign of lacking or misconceived steadfastness.

The more clearly Carter has felt his powerlessness in the power game with the Soviets, the more strongly he has sidestepped the issue by resorting to mere gestures such as the Olympics, or to muscle flexing far afield from the actual duel. Thus the life of the 50 hostages in Tehran (whose survival has never really been called in question) has been paralyzing the world power America for months already.

What is behind this policy which involves great losses has long since ceased to be the great claim to humaneness, but is pure tactics. For quite some time America's crises have no longer served the President as political tests for proving his worth, but merely as a means of temporarily wooing the voters.

This risky game has its pitfalls. Carter's party is more and more clearly reminded of a nearly forgotten reality: The choices made at innumerable primaries in the spring need not necessarily be the choices that will be made at the convention in the summer. This idea might grow on many U.S. citizens who today, via satellite and television, will be spectators of the Belgrade events.

LINZ STUDENTS ADMIT 'A-BOMB' IS ONLY A 'DUMMY'

AU081252 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 8 May 80 p 11

[Summary] Linz (APA)--The Linz "Committee for Peace and Disarmament", formed by some physics students of the Linz Kepler University, claimed that two of its members had built a functioning A-bomb and on Wednesday, 7 May, staged a public display of this bomb in the Linz pedestrians' zone. On Wednesday afternoon the students admitted that their self-made bomb was merely a dummy. They explained their unusual hoax by saying: "We merely wanted to draw attention to the problem of worldwide armament, and to animate the public to come to grips with the problem of peace."

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON TALK WITH HONECKER

DW090951 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2030 GMT 9 May 80

[Reporter Pelletier 9 May interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Belgrade--recorded]

[Text] [Schmidt] Mr Honecker as well as I were happy to have an opportunity today to continue the personal talk here which we had 5 years ago in Helsinki--almost 5 years ago. We agreed, by the way, that Tito's death was a great loss not only for the people and nationalities of Yugoslavia, but also for the whole world. We have also agreed that this funeral ceremony was a very dignified ceremony. We were both impressed by it.

The talk between Mr Honecker and me was friendly, as was to be expected. Both of us first expressed concern about the developments of the international situation. We then discussed at length various aspects of the international situation. Since we do not need an interpreter, the time was used most intensely.

We realized that the world powers have a great responsibility, but that the other states also bear some of the responsibility. We then dealt with bilateral problems and are very satisfied with the fact that our treaties, particularly the basic treaty but also the Quadripartite Agreement on Berlin as well as the other agreements and treaties that have been effected on the basis of the basic treaty--that all function well. We are satisfied by the fact that just a few days ago we achieved a new agreement. We intend to continue this work and to further develop and intensify the network of cooperation.

[Question] Did you discuss whether or not you will still go to the GDR, and was your planned visit to see Brezhnev discussed?

[Answer] The latter is correct. [sentence as heard] In discussing international problems we naturally did not leave out anything which particularly involves us. The visit to the GDR also will come about in due time. But presently we have not set a date. One must take one step at a time.

SCHMIDT DISCUSSES IRAN, SOLIDARITY WITH U.S., GDR RELATIONS

DW081005 Cologne EXPRESS in German 8 May 80 p 2

[Peter Kutschke undated interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, presumably in Bonn]

[Text] EXPRESS: At the moment we have a number of hotbeds of crisis in the world. Is the situation so serious that we need to speak of the danger of war?

Schmidt: What is currently the most explosive crisis is surely the taking of the hostages in Tehran--a brutal violation of international law. The American people and President Carter have reacted to this provocation, this humiliation, with admirable patience and self-discipline for a long time.

I am confident that President Carter will act moderately. Nevertheless, I am greatly concerned that the conflict might escalate to a point where the use of stronger military measures might appear to be the only possible next step--with unpredictable consequences, to be sure, for other regions as well. My concern is all the greater because the Soviet Union is unfortunately making no contribution toward solving the crisis which has emerged as a result of the taking of hostages, but is instead trying to exploit it in order to strengthen its influence in Iran.

EXPRESS: Where do you see the limits of our solidarity with the United States?

Schmidt: There are no limits to solidarity in the Atlantic Alliance. Solidarity in the Alliance has always meant, and continues to mean today, that each member makes allowances for the vital interests of his partner, that they consult each other, that the advice of the other Alliance partners is taken seriously, and that an attempt is made to map out a joint policy to the extent possible. Therefore, solidarity cannot mean that the European allies automatically abide by American decisions and accept American proposals. The Atlantic Alliance is an alliance of free, sovereign and equal states. In this alliance the United States is by far their most powerful partner.

EXPRESS: Have the Europeans reacted adequately to the taking of the hostages?

Schmidt: The EC foreign ministers have decided on very drastic sanction measures even though economic sanctions against Iran will entail greater disadvantages for some European states, including the Federal Republic, than for the United States; even though such sanctions could well weaken the moderate political forces in Iran which are receptive to cooperation and drive Tehran to the side of the Soviet Union. Thus, our decision quite clearly emerged from our solidarity with the United States.

EXPRESS: Can German-German relations remain unaffected by the development of international crises?

Schmidt: The GDR is also involved in an alliance; it is also not a neutral observer. Therefore, nobody can rule out the danger of setbacks. It is my intention to preserve what has been achieved with regard to progress and cooperation based on contracts between both parts of Germany. It is my impression that the responsible persons in the GDR do not see matters differently and that they do not want to have it differently--within the framework of their room for maneuver.

EXPRESS: As regards the election campaign, Mr Strauss has called you a panicky war chancellor; Mr Kohl has called you a coward.

Schmidt: These kinds of faux pas do not hurt me because every citizen can see for himself how the federal chancellor is trying to make his contribution to safeguarding peace and what the results are. Such words hurt only the originator who thus again demonstrates with his lack of discipline that the role of a statesman does not fit him: Strauss remains Strauss.

EXPRESS: Young voters seem to be turning away from the SPD. Are you worried about this?

Schmidt: As regards younger voters, the SPD is still in a clear lead with regard to other parties. But it is correct that for some time young voters have increasingly been turning away from all parties, believing they can find salvation in the "Green Party." I am indeed worried by that. In doing this they would give their vote to a grouping that aims for one single important problem, without being able to offer responsible solutions for the other difficult tasks we must handle in foreign and domestic politics today and in the eighties. Many of these young voters do not seem to have realized that, by voting for the "greens," they could involuntarily support Franz Josef Strauss and his policy.

OHIRA ARRIVES IN BONN FOR TALKS WITH SCHMIDT

OW090023 Tokyo KYODO in English 0010 GMT 9 May 80

[Text] Bonn May 8 KYODO--Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira arrived here Thursday for talks with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on the current international situation centering on Iran and Afghanistan and the scheduled summit of industrially advanced nations at Venice next month.

A special Japan Air Lines jetliner carrying Ohira touched down at Bonn airport at 10:56 p.m. (5:56 a.m. Friday Japan time) from Belgrade where the prime minister represented Japan at the state funeral for Yugoslav President Josip Broz Tito.

Ohira was reported to have expressed a strong desire to meet the West German chancellor and exchange views on the international situation, including economic sanctions against Iran to seek an early release of the American hostages held by Iranian militants and the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan. The two leaders were also expected to exchange views on the world situation in the post-Tito era. Ohira was expected to stress solidarity among Japan, the United States and Europe in the wake of his just concluded tour of the U.S., Mexico and Canada. The prime minister indicated a desire to hear from Schmidt on the result of the European Community (EC) summit conference in Luxembourg on April 27-28.

The meeting between Ohira and Schmidt was arranged at Ohira's strong request, particularly after he decided to fly to Belgrade to attend the funeral for Tito. Ohira now is scheduled to return to Tokyo at 5 p.m. Sunday.

KREISKY TALKS WITH PREMIER RAU, ENDS VISIT

[Summary] Duesseldorf--Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's 3-day official visit to the FRG ended on 7 May in Duesseldorf, where he had talks with North Rhine-Westphalian Premier Johannes Rau and delivered a lecture at the local Chamber of Commerce. The Austrian delegation had come from Hamburg, where a meeting of prominent socialist politicians took place at FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's house. "At this meeting, primarily economic problems such as the North-South dialogue were in the foreground.

"Summing up his 3-day visit to the FRG, the Austrian chancellor declared that it was generally marked by the particularly close relationship between the two countries. Kreisky stated that he had invited Chancellor Schmidt to visit Austria next year, and that the invitation was accepted.

"In his talks with Chancellor Schmidt, Kreisky continued, the German Government chief was very outspoken, leaving no doubt about the fact that he was worried about the world political situation. This is particularly due to the fact that there are so many hotbeds of crisis, that they tend to become intermingled."

PLO'S AL-FRANJI CRITICIZES STRAUSS STATEMENTS ON NEAR EAST

DW091007 Saarbruecken Saarlaendischer Rundfunk Network in German 1920 GMT 6 May 80

[Statement by 'Abdallah al-Franji, permanent PLO representative at the Bonn bureau of the Arab League--recorded]

[Text] We Palestinians have heard with amazement the statements made by Candidate for Chancellor Strauss in Israel. We were amazed because he practically opposed the Palestinians' right to self-determination, the Palestinian people and thus the entire Arab people. [passage indistinct].

We Palestinians cannot accept Strauss, neither as mediator nor as a responsible politician, because he changes his opinion as quickly as the weather. This attitude is an attitude that would torpedo peace in the Near East and that would block his way as a politician in the Arab area. The German politicians may not use the Palestinian problem and the Near East problem for their election campaign.

I will not interfere in the affairs of the Germans, and therefore we condemn every attempt by Strauss to interfere in the affairs of our people. If Mr Strauss now, for example, assumes such a hostile attitude against us, he must expect that the Palestinians will not passively look on.

CSU Response

LD081642 Hamburg DPA in German 1516 GMT 8 May 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--In connection with critical remarks made by the PLO representative in Bonn of recent statements made by Franz Josef Strauss in Israel, the chairman of the CSU group in the Bundestag, Friedrich Zimmermann, today sent a telex message to Chancellor Schmidt terming the criticism as an outrageous personal threat against Strauss and urging the Federal Government to respond.

In a broadcast over Saarland Radio yesterday, 'Abdallah al-Franji, the PLO representative in Bonn, accused Strauss of torpedoing peace in the Middle East by his statement: Strauss--as a possible chancellor--who has always given the impression he would adopt a neutral attitude, was no longer acceptable as a mediator; if Strauss were to adopt a hostile attitude toward the Palestinians they would not remain passive.

In his message to the chancellor Zimmermann says that this amounted to an open threat against the Bavarian premier. If Al-Franji spoke of "not remaining passive" the whole world knew what the PLO meant by action.

CDU REPRESENTATIVE KIEP INTERVIEWED ON USSR BOYCOTT

DW081130 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 9 May 80 p 11

[Unidentified correspondent interview with Walther Leisler Kiep, member of the CDU Presidium and finance minister of Lower Saxony; date not given]

[Text] ZELT: Jimmy Carter's appeals to the allies of the United States to impose economic sanctions on the Soviet Union because of Afghanistan have met with nearly unanimous rejection in our country. What do you think about it?

Kiep: To begin with, I think everybody should beware of lightheartedly advocating political interference in the free international exchange of goods. Particularly a country like the Federal Republic is very much dependent on the prevention of any further shrinking of the freedom of world trade. But, unfortunately, now more than ever before our ideal of free trade is suffering jolts in the sphere of hard political facts. For Eastern countries with planned economies, foreign trade has always been a component of their policies. Politics unequivocally has primacy over the economy. So far, economic sanctions have not forced any state to capitulate. But neither have economic sanctions been completely abortive all the time. They have often left their mark on the economy, led to losses in production and growth, and caused supply bottlenecks.

ZEIT: How compatible are state-ordered economic sanctions with the concept of a "liberal order"?

Kiep: Economic sanctions and liberal order are not two concepts which would be totally incompatible. After all, the economy is part of our liberal system. To me it seems to be legitimate to expect our economy to make its contribution in times of crisis toward maintenance of this liberal system.

ZIET: Is the Soviet Union vulnerable at all?

Kiep: Hardly anybody will want to contend that it is possible to make the Soviet Union withdraw from Afghanistan through economic means. Such an exaggerated objective would be at odds with all historical experience in dealing with totalitarian states. But it is just as one-sided and adamant to say that economic sanctions against the Soviet Union would come to naught. Moscow is not independent. The technology gap is a great structural weakness of the Soviet economy even today.

ZEIT: Thus our sanctions would harm the Soviets more than they would us?

Kiep: In the 24 years of the expansion of our trade relations with the Soviet Union it has always been said that the trade with the East is an instrument by which our interest can be ensured on a long-term basis. In view of the current discussion one sometimes gains the strange impression that we have become dependent on our own economic interest and therefore are prevented from employing that instrument.

Zeit: In the event of a technological trade embargo, might the political harm to us be perhaps greater than the economic costs we impose on the Soviet Union?

Kiep: The Federal Republic is definitely not interested in a worsening of the relations with the Soviet Union. Yet, for reasons of its own security, it is even less interested in seeing the Western alliance leaving military interventions unanswered. In the difficult situation in which the United States finds itself today, it justly poses the question concerning the solidarity of its Western allies. For years the United States has borne the unpopular burden of the Western defense predominantly alone by itself while the Europeans have gone their own ways under the protection of U.S. deterrence. Today our very own interests are at stake. The reference to U.S. responsibility would be merely dangerous provincialism.

ZEIT: Even if the foreign policy attitude of the Soviet Union should harden?

Kiep: One has to ask oneself about possible alternatives to economic sanctions. A gradual instrument is necessary. If it is necessary to respond to world political challenges, economic measures are still milder reactions than military measures. Primarily it should not be forgotten that the measures of the Western alliance are only in answer to the action of the Soviet Union. The reasons are a hardening of international relations and the situation created by the Soviet Union, namely, the military intervention in Afghanistan.

ZEIT: Shouldn't the West have done a better job of thinking about the political character of trade with the East prior to Afghanistan?

Kiep: The question poses itself with regard to whether and to what extent the countries of the Western alliance can use their economic power in an effective foreign policy way--not only to ward off aggressions and protect freedom, but also as a positive basic beginning to better safeguard world peace. It would indeed have made sense to have used our economic strength earlier for safeguarding in the long run the introduction of peaceful political cooperation in international relations. But even today it is not too late for that.

ZEIT: Can international trade be at all "apolitical"?

Kiep: The popular formula that trade and politics are two basically different matters has always been wishful thinking. Foreign trade, also by German exporters has not functioned completed without politics. The problem is only where the right limit should be drawn. We certainly do not want to have completely political trade. But we cannot pretend either that it is at all possible in these times to pursue international trade in a completely sterile political sphere. I would like to say: Free trade as much as possible, politics as much as necessary.

ZEIT: So an end will be made to the idea of business as usual?

Kiep: Business as usual would be a confession of our inability to react at all properly to Soviet actions in view of the economic advantages which are undoubtedly offered by German-Soviet trade. In other words, business as usual would be an alibi for doing nothing.

PAPERS CRITICIZE CARTER FOR NOT ATTENDING TITO FUNERAL

DW090812 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 9 May 80

[Press review]

[Excerpt] FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE wonders why the U.S. President failed to come to Belgrade to attend Tito's funeral. The paper then goes on to say: Some justifications are conceivable, though none of them would be reason enough. Perhaps Carter now wants to concentrate on the U.S. election campaign--in which case presidential candidate Carter would have improperly pushed President Carter aside. Or he wanted to deprive Brezhnev of the chance to push the crisis, into which he has plunged the world through the invasion of Afghanistan, out of the mind of this world a bit through a meeting with the U.S. President which does not commit him to anything but which would make many headlines and pictures. It is a fact that this adventure must not come so cheaply to the Soviet Union. But did Carter have to stay at home for this reason? He could have easily avoided the dialogue with Brezhnev in Belgrade. Demonstrative aloofness would have recalled to mind the fact that after Afghanistan the Soviets have not even created the preconditions for a dialogue with the Western world power. This was a quotation from FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE.

HANNOVERSCHE ALLGEMEINE advocates the following view: By his unfortunate decision not to participate in the state funeral for Tito in Belgrade Jimmy Carter is in fine, or better yet, in embarrassing company. Fidel Castro, being the incumbent president of the nonaligned movement whose co-founder Tito had been, also would have had to go to Belgrade. Only it makes a considerable difference whether the world power United States or tiny Cuba shows a lack of smooth political touch. Castro is Castro, to be sure; but Carter? Could he afford on such an occasion to make himself the captive of narrowminded domestic calculations? What causes trouble this year time and again is the fact that the constant feedback of foreign policy considerations to calculations under election tactics produces one undesirable effect after the next.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG Editorial

DW071120 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 7 May 80 p 4

[Josef Riedmiller editorial: "Indistinct Signals by the Great Powers"]

[Text] After it had become clear that Jimmy Carter would stay away from Tito's funeral in Belgrade, Moscow withdrew its originally nominated mourning guest Kuznetsov and substituted Leonid Brezhnev instead. It is doubtful whether the Soviet party and state leader would also undertake the trip to the Yugoslav capital if he had to count on running into the U.S. President.

It is all too obvious that the Soviets in this case adapted their behavior to that of the Americans. It seems that, at the moment, Carter does not wish to meet Brezhnev but to punish the Soviet leadership through disregarding them. This is more than an election campaign trick because the President feel challenged and forced into defensive moves by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the generally aggressive behavior of Moscow in world politics. Thus Carter has deprived us of seeing how he handles Brezhnev and China's party Chairman Hua at the same place.

However, on the occasion of Tito's death Carter came out with a statement which exceeded the framework of an obituary. The "statement" by the U.S. President goes beyond current affairs; it seeks to make it clear to the heirs of Tito and their potential adversaries what significance the United States attaches to the independence, territorial integrity and unity of Yugoslavia. The Yugoslavs are promised U.S. "support" which is not further defined. What is even more amazing is that Carter is trying to deter from acts of terror against Yugoslavia and its representatives. Croatian terrorists of this kind have already appeared in the United States, and they wield influence there as well.

Apparently the President seeks to make U.S. policy on Yugoslavia continuous and predictable. This policy has not always had these characteristics, and Carter himself also shared in the dissemination of insecurity. During the election campaign 4 years ago he gave the Kremlin leadership freedom of action by saying that, in the event of a Soviet aggression against Yugoslavia, he would not dispatch any U.S. Armed Forces. This was a turn away from a policy that had been pursued by Washington until then, namely, claiming toward Moscow a Western interest in developments in the Balkans without, however, explaining in detail in what way these interests would be pursued. This harbored an undefined risk for Moscow. Kissinger's adviser, Sonnenfeldt, made it more predictable by conceding to the Soviet Union the exertion of influence in Eastern Europe and in the Balkans, calling on the peoples there and on the Russians to find "organic" relations with each other which he accorded a war-preventive effect. The excessive plainness of Carter's current mode of speech is obviously intended to eradicate those mishaps from memory.

The Soviets, too, were not stingy with gestures and words after Tito's demise. Their value for the future cannot as yet be assessed today. What is striking in the letter of condolence from Moscow is the reference to former Yugoslav-Soviet agreements which have not always--and most recently less and less so--been successes for Belgrade. What emerged instead of a communique during Tito's last meeting with Brezhnev (a year ago in Moscow) was a mere "information," and the host refused to be committed on any of the points important to Yugoslavia. The Yugoslavs will now be glad to hear Moscow promising them not to intrude in their internal affairs and to respect their rights of sovereignty, yet they cannot overlook the fact that the Soviets on this occasion neglected to mention terms which have always played a central part in their controversy with Tito: territorial integrity, equal rights, and the right to the country's own course. Meanwhile, in dealing with the Russians the Yugoslavs are experienced enough not to be deceived about the value or lack of value of words which are used to excess.

Granted, the Soviets engage in politics with extreme meticulosity and, properly interpreted, their words reveal their intentions. But future developments in Yugoslavia, to the extent they will be influenced by the Soviet Union, will not depend on guarantees on paper but on objective circumstances. The policy of nonaligment, for example, must be viewed today in a different light in Belgrade than prior to the Vietnamese intervention in Kampuchea, or the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, differently than prior to Castro's attempts to lead the nonaligned states over into the East bloc. And Moscow has quite a few instruments with which it can bring pressure to bear on Belgrade and make the leadership there insecure.

It is probably realistic to assume that Moscow will test the nerves rather than the army of the Yugoslavs. The Macedonia conflict with Bulgaria is suited for this purpose, as are economic dependencies. The Cominform archipelagos which Yugoslavia's courts sought to eradicate, too, will probably continue to provide starting points for Moscow. What will continue to be decisive, however, is the manner in which the power ratio between the military blocs will develop in Europe. For the time being it is still such that each side has to carefully consider the steps it takes.

COMMENTATOR VIEWS POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF U.S. UNITS FROM EUROPE

DW090809 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 9 May 80 P 12

[Article signed ein.: "Luns Is Right"]

[Text] Nothing confirms a news item better than a denial, the NATO secretary general indicated that, if worse came to worse, American troops could be withdrawn from Europe and dispatched to the Gulf region. Since Joseph Luns had come from President Carter, he thus came from the "town hall" and was wiser than the others. An explosion of horror followed. The most indignant were those who do everything in Bonn to annoy the American donkey. The secretary general had become guilty. The denial machine was running. But it cannot be denied that the thing "would happen" which should not. The United States disposes of four divisions as a strategic reserve. They would be the core of the additional corps that would be dispatched to Europe in an emergency. This unit would also be suited for emergency planning in the Persian Gulf. But only the 4th Infantry Division and the 82nd Airborne Division are fully fit for action. In order to remain credible, the Pentagon would have to withdraw additional units from Europe if the situation in the Middle East aggravated. So reality disproves the denial. And Luns is right.

EDITORIAL ON U.S. 'VISION OF GREATNESS' IN CURRENT AFFAIRS

[Robert Held editorial: "The Weak Work Power"]

[Text] The new American secretary of state, Muskie, will meet Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko in Vienna on 15 May. Many things in connection with this event indicate the point American foreign policy has reached in the year 1980. The occasion is the anniversary of the Austrian State Treaty. For those who like the truth, it is also a reminder that the West lost the end of the world war to the Soviet Union. The secretary of state is a veteran senator. In picking his secretary of state Carter had to make a bow to the power of Congress. What possibilities does American really have at a time when it speaks of sanctions and when it would like to oust the Soviet Union with an imposing gesture from Afghanistan? It has the opportunity of grabbing the Vienna chance and of negotiating.

Criticism of Washington's foreign policy may now be awakened anew. But the Europeans forget that the figure of "America" was not created to please them nor to act always according to their wishes. The design of this nation deviated from the very beginning in a grandiose way from such ideas. The then still embryonic state system, which was revolutionary and completely directed toward future greatness, did not tend toward alliances; he who joined up with it did so on his own, so to speak. It has hardly grasped the continental area lying before it when it confirmed this super-sovereignty that was superior to alliances: in the Monroe Doctrine through which it made itself the guardian of the new world without asking the neighbors of the double continent about it, thus founding a hegemonic position, ideas which have not been buried at all.

As early as in the middle of the 19th century, prior to the Civil War, the future economic, technical and maritime power of America announced itself. The Europeans missed the political significance of an uncanny early symptom, the fantastically modern architecture of Chicago around 1880. So the analogous conclusion offers itself that in 1980 the Europeans do not quite see where the way of America leads to. They think of their own benefit and not of America's thus preventing insight.

Gradually America has filled out the outlines which its founders gave it. It used its strange super-sovereignty when in 1956 it caught the British and the French in the Suez invasion like two small sinners, reprimanding them, certain of Soviet assistance: That was the peak of world guardianship.

Fifteen years later nothing much was left of all that: neither the substance nor the will. In order to make an end to Vietnam, Kissinger began to negotiate in 1969, but the drama of this slow defeat dragged on until 1975. In the course of this time the United States had lost its capability to contain Soviet armament. Now, in 1980, even the power is lacking to stop Soviet expansion. Neither the American public nor the friends of America condescend to realize that the great draft of stability has become void. It must negotiate.

SALT II is not lack of carefulness but the attempt to avoid, through negotiations, a deterioration of one's own position. So America's foreign policy is forced to act in a more subtle way than ever before, also with regard to its domestic support. Simultaneously with the Vietnam debacle the isolationist tendency of Middle America has increased together with distrust against the too absolutist and "imperial" power of the President. What has remained is only the vision of the greatness, the special grandeur of America.

As a mediator between this middle America awareness [binnenbewusstsein] and the realities of world politics, the President gets into a fix. Outwardly he cannot act as sovereign as would be proper for the authority of the world power, and inwardly he cannot show world political achievements in line with the expectations. There are gaps between the wheat price and the wheat boycott, between antagonism to the atom and the unsuccessful nonproliferation efforts, between human rights and regional security policy. The President has to accept the public representatives, Congress, as a mediator; he has to deal with men behind whose mandate often stands an opinion that is only oriented toward middle America. Therefore, the consideration to turn the flow of opinion around, to bring educated influence to bear on one's own public via the representatives and senators; therefore, the selection of Muskie, who has sat in the Senate for 22 years. Middle America is supposed to be prevented from reacting to world events in an irritated, uninformed or insulted way which would lead to policies becoming a mere function of this irritation.

In any event, the Europeans need to be prepared for Carter's foreign policy not being a one-time accident, but the rather typical first phase of an era in which America will embark on other ways that leade away from Europe. Strong efforts by the Europeans cannot stop this secular development, but they ought to slow it down as long as possible. The time gained in this way ought to be used by Europe to replace the guardianship of America with something else, a guardianship often criticezed but then considered natural anyway and accepted free of charge. It seems that repentant reflection is already in vogue.

YVON BOURGES INTERVIEWED ON DEFENSE CAPABILITIES

LD081118 Paris Domestic Service in French 1710 GMT 7 May 80

[French Defense Minister Yvon Bourges' interview on "Face the Public" program on 7 May presented by Gilbert Denoyan, with Paul-Marie de la Gorce of LE FIGARO, (Paul Mahon) of Channel 2 television station, Thierry Pister of LE NOUVEL OBSERVATEUR, (Paul Jacques Truffaut) of OUEST-FRANCE and Alain Johannes of France-Inter radio station]

[Excerpts] [Denoyan] For nearly a year, Mr Minister, the debate about the problems of defense has been filled with topics as never before or filled with propositions at times contradictory. And, on the eve of the anniversary of 8 May 1945, there is surprise at the debate on the organization of our defenses and on the choice of alliances. This suddenly assumes a topical character. The events in Afghanistan, the situation in Iran, the death of Tito and the destabilization that may ensue in Yugoslavia bring risks to peace, risks which must not be exaggerated but which must neither be minimized. The hesitations, the contradictions of U.S. President Jimmy Carter can cast doubts on any situation of conflict, can cause doubts to be cast notably on an American presence in a European operational theater. Must Europe organize its own defense? Must France equip itself with the neutron bomb? On these questions, Mr Minister, your replies will enable us to get a better grasp of the importance which the problems of defense have today.

We will, Mr Minister, question you first about the events of the past few months, which demonstrate the inability of the most powerful nation on earth, the United States, to come to the aid of its own citizens held in Tehran. Now, Mr Minister, has France, a nation with 1.3 million of its citizens abroad, the means and the capacity and the manpower which would enable us, if we were in a similar situation, to come to their rescue?

[Answer] In situations like the one which you have just been describing the problem is not so much one of size or the importance of the forces as one of being able to deal with the situation by means which are appropriate. It has been clearly seen that the greatest nation in the world in the military sphere and in the economic sphere--namely the United States, which has just tried out something which did not succeed to release the hostages in Tehran--in the end mounted an operations which was fairly limited, since it was only a question of a few planes, a few helicopters and about 100 men.

I believe that one must clearly see that in these matters it is not a question of denying realities and appearing stronger than one really is. So I do not think there can be an absolute answer to the question you have put. Each time one must consider the situation in which one finds oneself, factors which are necessarily particular to a given situation, and the need to assemble the means which may be necessary. In this connection, I think that France has certainly the capability of facing situations like the one you have evoked. Rather than a question of material means, it is a question of the bravery of men, of determination, and even I would say of the commanders' sense of appraisal.

[Question] Mr Minister, coming closer to home, one fact which came to light notably in the operations in black Africa was namely that France did not possess all the material needed, that it was not merely a question of men, that it was obliged to call on its allies over problems of air transport even though it only had to resolve problems that were extremely limited--just police operations. But in the case of a more generalized destabilization, notably in the oil regions, has it today the military hardware to deal with these situations?

[Answer] Well, I will not make a generalized reply because it would be imprudent on my behalf, and I do not think that anybody can give with certainty an absolute guarantee that we would be in a position to face up to any situation, regardless of the importance of the means which it would be necessary to engage. I should like to return to what you said at the beginning--that we were obliged to intervene in Shaba, in Kolwezi, on two occasions in 1977 and in 1978. In 1977 we used our own transport for transporting not just one regiment but several regiments of the Moroccan Army and their material; we only used French planes for the Kolwezi operation in 1978, which had a different character--a character that was primarily humanitarian and one of solidarity. We sought to make it clear that it was not a question of French intervention but of an action to save lives. Its humanitarian character was stressed, if I remember rightly, by the president of the republic himself. You know that after France, Belgium also sent a detachment and that the participation of the Americans in the field of transport was asked for by the government not because France lacked the means of providing transport for our regiment of paratroopers ourselves, but for reasons of the very character of the operation. Later on we transported as did the Americans, African elements, coming from Senegal, the Ivory Coast and Gabon, who constituted... [minister interrupted]

[Question] Mr Minister, nobody questions the competence, the efficiency of the units entrusted with an eventual action abroad, and who enjoy a very good reputation as much in France as abroad. The problem of air transport is the one to be considered. One knows that the main instrument here is the Transall. Is this plane, which was jointly built by the Germans and the French but with very different viewpoints, is it suitable for the kind of missions for which the government could use it? It has been decided to make more and eventually to increase its range by in-flight refuelling or other such solutions. Could one not look rather to another kind of plane and would this not appear to be a better solution?

[Answer] I have been looking into the matter since 1975. What are the possible solutions? First, if we want to plan for a national military transport plane and opt for large capacities and long ranges, this is a problem that will require much time and that will be very onerous. There are two countries which have transport aircraft of this kind, namely, the United States and the USSR.

I must confess that I have had no thought of approaching the USSR. But, as far as the United States is concerned, it has three kinds of aircraft: It has the Galaxy, of which I believe it has only 82, and it has not been manufactured for a long time. It also has the C-141; this plane suits us very well, more so than the Galaxy, since it has interesting capabilities both regarding load capacity, which I believe is some 40 tons, as well as its volume and range. We have therefore asked--I have personally asked first Mr Schlesinger and then Mr Brown and, through them, a higher level--to purchase a certain number of these planes. As these two planes, the C-141 and the Galaxy, are no longer being manufactured in the United States, the U.S. Army, considering that it needs all those it has, has refused to let us have any of these planes. There remains the Hercules, a ubiquitous plane, since one finds them everywhere. But the Hercules is a Transall and, in fact, the Transall has certain characteristics, particularly regarding volume and load capacity, that are more interesting than those of the Hercules [as heard] or C-130. But there is one handicap of the Transall as compared to the Hercules, namely its range; this is something essential.

That is why, before embarking on the acquisition of the Hercules, a plane which will not have sensational improvements, it is better, I think, to consider a possible resumption of the manufacture of the Transall. The Germans bought 150 of the first series and we bought 50. This is not enough.

But fortunately there has been progress, and the new Transalls, even without refuelling in flight, will have a greatly improved capacity and with in-flight refuelling will be able to cover distances of some 10,000 km. This corresponds perfectly with the zones where we might find it necessary to intervene.

[Question] Would you like to speak of the navy, Mr Minister, because it is evident that the presence of France in the far seas is increasingly indispensable, particularly to protect the oil supply lines. We have at our disposal two aircraft carriers--Clemenceau and Foch--which surely are obsolete. Is the construction to start soon of nuclear aircraft carriers? I must put one further question: It is said--rumors have--that the Arabs, that a certain Arab countries is prepared to finance the Dassault Mirage-4000. Have you any comment on this subject?

[Answer] I will answer the question as I can according to the information I possess. On this first point my information is evidently very precise. We have two aircraft carriers, as you noted. These two aircraft carriers will reach the end of their normal life span between 1990 and 1995. Consequently, the problem will be to replace them. We are carrying out studies, and I am to submit the conclusions of these studies to the Defense Council which will take place this year. It is therefore difficult for me to answer, since there is no decision yet. The decision will be made in the Defense Council.

There are, however, certain points on which I can give you an answer. First, there will be two of these aircraft carriers. It is a question of replacing Foch and Clemenceau, and these aircraft carriers will be nuclear propelled. Moreover, we already have allocated sums of money in the 1979 and 1980 budgets to produce the nuclear power unit, and this is very interesting proposition in these ships' case, because of the range of action, the fact that they have great independence and autonomy. This is, evidently, a great asset for the aircraft carriers. In fact, the Americans have nuclear-propelled aircraft carriers. The choice in our case is: Should we again build 35,000 ton-carriers with catapults or must we embark on smaller aircraft carriers for aircraft with short or vertical take-off? Regarding this option, the decision has not yet been made, but studies are very advanced. There is clearly more uncertainty regarding the possibility of implementing the second solution than the first solution. The decision will certainly be made in the course of the year. [passage indistinct]

I can tell you the following: The Mirage-4000 basically enjoys the financial backing of the Defense Ministry for it has similar parts with the Mirage-2000 and because of the piloting system--for the first time we are producing in France an airplane with electronically-controlled piloting-and because of its arms system and its radar systems, RDM or RDI--radar systems which we finance. Furthermore, it is a twin-engine jet. Consequently, it is size and power which account for the differences. But apart from that, it is not a plane which is different from the technological point of view. It is its power and transport capacity which makes the difference. We have Mirage-4 aircraft for the mission of penetration. On the one hand, we have not yet made any decisions on whether or not to maintain the air structure within the strategical nuclear system. This is a subject on which we are still reflecting and on which I cannot give you any information today. On the other hand, regarding aviation, our first necessity is above all to cover the territory, that is to say, air defense. It is then evident that the single-engine jet answered perfectly well our most urgent needs, and that is why we gave priority to the Mirage-2000, the plane which we needed immediately.

[Question] Thus, France will not buy the Mirage-4000 plane. But will it accept the fact that another country will finance a French plane?

[Answer] We are not opposed. I mean not just any country. We are not opposed to the fact that Maison Dassault should find a country interested in this aircraft so that the necessary industrial investment is financed by this or that countries.

Evidently, regarding the government's decision, all depends on the country or countries involved. I am not going to give a blank check to the entire world via this broadcast.

[Question] Thus, the information given by Jacques Truffaut is not false?

[Answer] Well, what I do not know is whether Saudi Arabia is indeed interested or not. What I can say is that should certain countries [words indistinct]. You have read this in the press and this is no revelation made by myself. What I have just said and in any case, in this case, I do not know. I cannot say today we should be interested in the purchase of this aircraft, but the hypothesis is not to be ruled out.

[Question] I would like here, Mr Minister, to remark on information given by you on a previous question--on the forces aimed at foreign action. Theoretically speaking, a few years back the reform of the land forces aimed at achieving the homogenization of this army, at obtaining versatility, as they say, the versatility of all units. In fact the opposite has happened regarding all units for external use which you spoke about. It is a case of forces with a very precise external mission. As far as I know, their recruitment is not quite the same as in the case of the general forces. In short, there is a very clear-cut distinction between the mission and the structures of these forces and that of the rest of the units or large units of the French Army. This is a mere remark [words indistinct] I can well imagine that there are forces with different destinations and missions and, therefore, they should be different.

[Answer] Well, I do not contradict you but I want, however, to make a small rectification. It is true that we have been in favor of homogenization and it is, in fact, being carried out. On the other hand, it is also true, as you have pointed out, that there is a certain specialization of the forces. We have seven armored-car divisions; and we also have five infantry divisions which are not quite the same because they have different missions. We have a division of Alpine troops; we have a paratroopers' division and a division of Marines. But what we should be clear about is that intervention is not necessarily limited to this or that unit.

I myself believe that there is nothing worse than to have diagrams, plans and structures decided on once and for all from which one never departs. This is how one could fail, naturally, because one will never know precisely in what situation one will find oneself. One may not find a solution which corresponds exactly to that already envisaged. The important thing for the defense minister and for the commander in chief is to have no more nor less than a tool which is above all correctly equipped to face all these hypotheses, trained to answer the requirements and to do so in a simple way, because we do not possess a very strong force and may need to adapt it. If you intervene in a mountainous country, then most likely the paratroopers will be used first of all to establish a bridgehead. Once this bridgehead is set up you bring in other troops. Consequently, in a mountainous country you then bring in units of the Alpine troops division because they know the mountains better than the Marines, who are in Brittany and so on. This is why you should not consider that the specialization of certain units makes those alone suitable for intervention. Intervention is the political decision made by the government. Then it is up to the commander in chief to define the military tool suitable to the situation in which one finds oneself.

[Question] Regarding the proposals currently made regarding the reorganization of the French Army, I would like to ask what you think about the current situation when taking into consideration the events mentioned: Afghanistan, Iran, Marshal Tito's death and perhaps the destabilization of Yugoslavia. Do you not think there is an increase in international tension at the moment?

[Answer] Yes. I believe one cannot deny it. We are living in an uncertain and dangerous world. We have been saying this for a long time. Looking back to what we have been doing for the past 5 years, well, I think I can say that all the events which occurred have merely confirmed the line adopted by us and even have shown in some way the well-founded character of the defense policy defined and followed by us. Thus, far from concluding from these events the necessity to alter and adapt this defense policy, I see on the contrary in them a justification to continue this policy.

[Question] However, some suggest it should be changed. The French Democratic Union [UDF] report, for example, suggests a change, a withdrawal of our links for example with the American countries [as heard], by implication perhaps with NATO. It means perhaps the abandonment of some of the defense principles of the Gaullist policy.

[Answer] Yes, well, wait a minute. First of all I want to finish my argument, and then I will come back to it. What one sees in the evolution of the situation, one sees an occurrence of zones of destabilization which obviously creates worrying situations. Our defense policy aims at defining a military tool which can answer four different types of situations: First, national independence--this is the deterrent force. Second, to participate in the security of Europe, should the situation warrant it and the government decide on it together with our allies within the alliance; this is one of the missions of our armed forces. The third mission is to guarantee communications with remote regions or to ensure our supplies. The fourth mission is the safeguarding of our interests throughout the world, if necessary, through military intervention. The whole reform, the entire organization, all arms programs ordered by us as well as the structure of the forces are aimed at providing us with a mobile, versatile, light tool which not only enables us to carry out all these missions at the same time but also enables us to give a satisfactory answer to the hypotheses we might have to face.

Therefore, the situation, or more exactly the situations which we have been facing in the past few years do not invalidate the contracts regarding neither the Transall nor the renewal of the air force, nor the production of the Dassault gun which I believe the French Army was the only one not to possess--not only among the industrial and developed countries but also among many others. I believe that nothing clearly demonstrates our efforts. Therefore, there are many suggestions put forward when there are debates. When one lives in a democracy there are divergent viewpoints, differences within the majority and differences with the opposition. There are also preferences. I am slightly embarrassed in the present debate insofar as less than 48 hours ago I received the UDF report on defense sent to me by Mr Daillet, and I asked some departments to study it and make a study of its proposals, first of all to judge the proposals for themselves and then to judge them against our defense policy. I have not yet received the result of this study and therefore I am not yet acquainted with the document.

[Question] Let me read three lines--it will not take me long--from this report. It is on atomic, tactical weapons which, the report writers say, certainly have a prominent place, and their action is integrated with that of classical means: ground, naval or air, in the context of battle. Well, let me say, Mr Minister, that this is exactly the contrary of what is (?taught) by French military staff, certainly on your directives, where, on the contrary, the use of tactical weapons is totally excluded as super-artillery and as a tool in a conventional battle. If I may say so, the tactical atomic weapon is exactly the contrary.

[Answer] What must be excluded in fact is the battle. I think one has to be realistic. First there are hypotheses which can be very different, for example, a hypothesis where, in the end, an aggression against the forces of the countries of West Europe would be faced with failure from the outset. It is evident that the problem would not be the same.

If, on the contrary, Europe were totally turned upside down, then it would be very dangerous here to define a single principle, a single line of conduct. What I mean is that when you look at the realities, let us say of France, since I am talking about a national defense policy, I think the falsest idea is that of getting involved in escalation since then you would necessarily be confronted with the weight, the relative dimension, even civil, of some countries in relation to others. I believe that, faced with countries like the superpowers, it is totally unrealistic to imagine that you can say: Well, if I were subjected to an attack limited to one or two regions, one or two towns in the territory, my response would be limited because in this game I know perfectly well who would be the loser.

[Question] Well, if you do not choose escalation, Mr Bourges, that means that you would perhaps no longer choose the neutron bomb?

[Answer] Well, the neutron bomb is not necessarily....

[Question--interrupting] It is a battlefield bomb in fact.

[Answer] This is true. But you know that tactical nuclear weapons are made for the battlefield, even the Pluton. Therefore what is the difference? First the neutron bomb is an atomic weapon. It simply has particular effects, that is the blast effect, the destruction effect is very scaled down in favor of the radiation effect, which kills.

Thus, for us tactical nuclear weapons are linked with the deterrent strategy and are part of it; they are not dissociated from it. There is no separation between strategic nuclear weapons and tactical weapons. Moreover, you only have to look at the number of these weapons which is extremely small. They show that our wish is to warn, to reprimand, to say: Stop, our vital interests are threatened: we cannot accept this aggression and we are ready to raise the battle to the strategic nuclear threshold. This is what it means. But you can give this warning to forces equally as well with a neutron weapon as with another. What one might even say is that, in the hypothesis that you have to use these arms on a friendly territory which has been invaded, the advantage is that you may perhaps avoid killing your friends at the same time as the enemy's army. Since these are weapons whose effective area is much more limited--on the order of 500 meters at maximum--you can perfectly well imagine that this weapon will enable you to achieve the result, that is, delivering the warning to enemy forces without having the disadvantages of destroying others: what are called the collateral effects or damages. This is why I do not believe one can say that the nature of the weapon alone changes the concept of deterrence. I do not believe that. I would say that it is much more a question of use, and it is a question of political will and concepts.

[Question] There you have just made a case for the neutron bomb to some extent.

[Answer] I have just shown you that the neutron bomb does not have the disadvantages on the level of deterrent strategy that some attribute to it. I do not see how one can say that a policy or strategy is defined by the means you apply.

[Question] Has France decided to equip itself with the neutron bomb?

[Answer] The decision has not been made. I had no intention of announcing to you that France has a neutron bomb. This is certainly not the case. We are conducting studies--I have never hidden this--because this is after all a factor which deserves reflection.

In any case we have not decided to deprive ourselves of it, and certainly it will not be I this evening who will tell you what we will do, what we will decide. The decision will be made by the Defense Council, which is chaired by the head of state.

[Question] Mr Minister, all this debate on the notion of battlefield, on nuclear deterrence seems to me a little theoretical, and frankly speaking, I get the impression it almost has a religious connotation, that is, the military doctrine as it was established 20 years ago--20 years is the time which separated the two world wars--by General de Gaulle. There is a reluctance to go back on it, a reluctance to debate it too much. And I wonder whether nuclear deterrence--I am going to shock you--has not become the Maginot Line?

I will explain briefly. We are protected by a nuclear deterrent force directed against cities, against a frontal attack on Europe, in fact, directly threatening our national territory. While this case is not, in view of the present international situation, the most probable, what threatens us is a phenomenon of diversion and destabilization. We are in danger of being deprived--not only us, but all our allies in Europe, and here we cannot get out of it--of our resources of raw materials and energy. On this point it is not at all evident that the economic and thus strategic interests of Europe are the same as those of the United States. It is even probable that on many points they are contrary. Faced with this type of threat Europe appears to be completely without any means of military response.

[Answer] First, I was going to say [words indistinct]. I am certainly not in conflict with your analaysis; in fact, I think it is correct. This is why I have said myself that we are certainly not going to lock ourselves up in a 'nuclear Maginot Line.' The policy of all or nothing that some people recommend to me, you know, seems to me totally unrealistic. This is why we must have forces which are called conventional but which are precisely the kind to respond to this sort of situation. This is the whole sense of what we have done, which I will not repeat, since I think I have explained it in detail.

Now, your question goes beyond the national aspect alone to extend our view to examining the situation on a European level. First, I think one should not say that Europe lacks arms. This is not true. In Europe there is a military capacity which is far from being negligible. The German Army is a well-trained, well-equipped army, and there are other national armies. The British Army has an undoubted military value. The Netherlands has good units; it particularly has a navy which is fairly remarkable. Therefore there is real ability here.

On the level precisely of protection--what is called the nuclear umbrella--well, you know there has been criticism, an expression has been thought up (which incidentally I believe no member of the government has ever used), which is the convenient image for the press of the enlarged sanctuary [sanctuaire elargi]. What we are saying is that the fact that France, which is in Europe, has autonomous national weapons, whose use is only up to it to decide, naturally contributes to the security of Europe insofar as I think everyone recognizes that the security of France cannot be understood as limited merely to the border of the metropolitan territory. We cannot remain completely indifferent to our surroundings. This is nothing new. It is a truth that you will find, for example, in the White Paper of 1972 by Michel Debre. So it is in this respect that France's defense policy, an independent policy, provides an original contribution; but I believe it to be very effective since it also provides an element of uncertainty or indetermination in relation to the situation which could develop in Europe. On the contrary, in the remarks you made, and which again I would very willingly share, I see a justification for the defense policy we pursue. Do not think it is brought about by an inability to imagine another policy or other directions over 20 years.

[Question] Mr Minister, a while ago you replied very honestly to the question I put on the (?UDF) report. You say no to the basic strategic thoughts which are suggested in various places in the report, and in the same manner you spoke of the possibility of a neutron weapon being integrated into the present strategy, not opening the way to linear strategy, as the usual promoters of the neutron bomb propose: All this is extremely clear.

Would you say that the ground forces overall are adapted to this strategy? Do you not feel that a large part of the body of the ground force is in some way suspended in the air in relation to this strategy? These are old structures with men who are [word indistinct] adopted, and, many of whom in reality do not know what mission they would perform in the perspective fixed by this strategy.

[Answer] I must say that I see that much progress has been made, first due to the fact that the equipment which was decided on 5 years ago is arriving in the units, and I believe moreover that missions are now understood much better. We could debate this at length, but since we have little time I will not dwell on it. I would like to tell you, however, that I do not share your pessimism. The French Army has changed greatly. What is true, however, is that with 160,000 soldiers in our ground force, it is false to claim that we have an army of manned strength and large battalions.

[Question] There has been much talk of war and guerrilla war. Let us think of the civilians, that is those who are outside the army, outside politicking. What do you think of the calls to develop fallout shelters? And is wanting to build fallout shelters not in full contradiction with deterrence? If you cannot deter, if you protect our citizens, does that mean that we cannot really deter the enemy?

[Answer] Well, firstly there is propaganda for atomic shelters; this is propaganda of a commercial nature.

I will reply to your question very precisely. It is true that as soon as you have a policy of deterrence which is aimed at avoiding a battle, as you would say, this means it has failed if you need to take shelter. There is just one point--deterrence is based on the damage you will cause your aggressor. Thus if your aggressor has provided shelter for its population from this damage, it is quite obvious that you are faced with terms of deterrence which have developed, which are different.

Now you know that an effort has been made in many countries--in the USSR, in Switzerland and in Sweden precisely--to build civil defense shelters. It is obvious that this is a new factor which damages deterrence itself, since populations should be sheltered [sentence as heard]. Therefore we must consider that the implementation of a policy of civil defense, of sheltering the population does not contradict deterrence; it can be a necessary element of it. This was not the case up to now.

SEVENTH FRANCO-AFRICAN SUMMIT OPENS IN NICE

Gabon's Bongo Arrives

AB072105 Libreville Domestic Service in French 1830 GMT 7 May 80

[Excerpts] Nice, the capital of the Cote d'Azur, will host the seventh Franco-African Summit, which opens there on Friday morning under the chairmanship of the French President, Valery Giscard d'Estaing. On this occasion, our country's delegation, led by the head of state, His Excellency El-Hadj Omar Bongo, left Libreville this morning for Nice. Here is our correspondent's report from Nice:

In fact, the president, El-Hadj Omar Bongo is leading the Gabonese delegation to this seventh Franco-African Summit in Nice. A summit that is held alternately in France and in Africa. This year, instead of Paris, the summit is being held in Nice on the Cote d'Azur. The president of the Republic arrived in Nice at 1500 Libreville time aboard a private jet. He was welcomed on his arrival by Mr Robert Galley, French minister of cooperation, who, it will be recalled, was in Libreville just a few days ago.

Some African heads of state are already in Nice for the summit, notably President Habyarimana of Rwanda and President David Dacko of the Central African Republic. President Dacko met our head of state and discussed relations between our two countries. The two statesmen reviewed bilateral cooperation and the topics to be tackled during the summit.

Economic problems are expected to dominate this summit, but the situation in Chad is also expected to dominate this summit, but the situation in Chad is also expected to be discussed since that country has been plunged into a fratricidal war for more than 10 weeks now. It has been officially announced here in nice that Mr Kamougue, the Vice President of Chad, is leading the Chadian delegation to this summit. It is also being rumored that a delegation from Hissein Habre's faction is also arriving here for the summit.

As I have already said, this summit will be dominated not only by economic problems, but also by problems of security--two problems that have dominated current African affairs.

President Bongo is accompanied by the deputy prime minister, Mr George Rawiri; Mr Martin Bongo, minister of foreign affairs; minister in charge of coordination of economic and financial affairs at the presidency, Mr Jean Francois Ntoutoume; as well as several advisers and experts who will be working with the president at the summit.

Sierra Leone's Stevens Interviewed

AB082210 Freetown Domestic Service in English 2000 GMT 8 May 80

[Excerpts] President Siaka Stevens arrived in Nice this afternoon to a full-scale ceremonial welcome on the airport tarmac. At the presidential lounge, President Stevens was received officially by Mr Robert Galley, French minister of cooperation. Signing the visitor's book at the lounge, President Stevens expressed his delight at being in Nice and looked forward to a most fruitful and interesting summit. Sierra Leone and Somalia are the only non-French-speaking countries attending the Franco-African summit. Twenty-six countries are attending the summit and are represented by their heads of state, prime ministers or foreign ministers.

Speaking in Paris in an interview with the second television network, Antenna 2, President Stevens described the Franco-African summit which started in Nice today as a most welcome orientation in current Franco-African policy in an attempt to reach out to African states across linguistic barriers.

President Stevens said that he considered the summit a venture that will cement the basis of enlightened cooperation between African states and France to the mutual benefit of both sides. Dr Stevens further said that the summit also underscores the long-standing French interest in African affairs and her desire to build a basis of cooperation between African states in general.

Answering a question on the Organisation of African Unity and Sierra Leone's preparation for hosting the OAU summit in July, President Stevens said that the entire exercise marks the determination of African states not only to consolidate their independence but to accelerate the process of cooperation and the economic situation in the continent. President Stevens added that the coming summit has provided Sierra Leone with much needed impetus to accelerate the provision of (?surface) infrastructure, which includes road network, improved telecommunication and power supply. President Stevens acknowledged with gratitude the cooperation received from friendly countries in this exercise, which include France.

On Franco-Sierra Leone relations, President Stevens noted with satisfaction the great assistance Sierra Leone is today receiving from France, particularly in the economic and educational training areas of development cooperation. His excellency cited the recent financial agreement concluded with Caisse Centrale under which 4.1 million leones was advanced to service the new international telecommunication exchange linking Freetown and the rest of the world on an automatic dialing basis; 4 million leones was provided to service and expand the water supply project for Freetown; and a further 3.7 million leones was provided for the establishment of a cement factory.

On Sierra Leone's economic development, President Stevens reiterated his government's priority on agricultural intensification as the basis for economic growth. Commenting on the pope's African visit, the president said that it will provide inspiration for Catholics in Africa with the resultant effect of a general reaffirmation of faith.

Foreign minister, Dr Abdulai Conteh and Sierra Leone's ambassador to France, Mr Eya Mbayo were present at the interview.

COLOMBO, FORLANI DISCUSS FOREIGN POLICY, DEFENSE IN CHAMBER

Colombo on Iran, NATO

AU080945 Rome ANSA in English 0850 GMT 8 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 8 (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo reaffirmed the position of Italy and the European Economic Community in favor of "negotiations and peaceful avenues without the use of force" for freeing the American hostages held in Iran since November 4 in a statement to the lower house Wednesday on the international situation.

Responding to a series of parliamentary queries, Colombo, who is the current duty chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers, also reaffirmed that "no prior information was provided to Italy on the aborted American attempt to liberate the captive Americans in Iran". For Italy to fulfill the requirement of "preserving the prospects for consolidating liberty, progress and cooperation among peoples", the foreign minister said, it is indispensible to maintain "fully friendly ties and relations of solidarity with the United States but in a dialogue which must be sincere and, precisely for this reason, not [word indistinct] consenting, a dialogue supported by a real desire for cooperation".

Speaking of the commitments connected to the Atlantic Alliance, Colombo affirmed that, "in the case of attack against the territory of any member country, there is the obligation of joint defense, one and indivisible". The foreign minister then added that, "in the case of events possibly occuring in other regions of the world which could influence their interests, there is a requirement for frank and timely consultations on these events".

Addressing the issue of sanctions against Iran, Colombo declared that Italy "has not been unaware that the United States, which has asked us to take part in these sanctions, is on the correct side and is acting for the reestablishment of law. In answer to this (U.S.) request," Italy's diplomatic chief continued, "we gave a reply which was neither precipitous nor uncritical. We, therefore, (?promised) an adequate diplomatic initiative".

Turning to developments in Afghanistan, Colombo said that an outcome of these developments in keeping with the United Nations General Assembly resolution calling for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from the country might be obtained through a formula which would allow Afghanistan to remain outside the superpowers' contest and return to its neutral and nonaligned status. "The disturbance the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan caused in the detente process and the patent violation of the most elementary norms of international law committed by Iran underscore the need for articulated and concrete policy initiatives from the European countries as regards the Middle Eastern question", Colombo concluded.

Forlani on Defense System

LD082042 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 0600 GMT 8 May 80

[Excerpts] The foreign policy debate, which opened yesterday preceded by a meeting between President of the Council of Ministers Cossiga and the secretaries of the three majority parties, is to be concluded in the Chamber of Deputies today. Here is Angelo Haver:

Let us forthrightly say that there has been a new element raised in the debate which took place in the Senate last week. It did not come from the foreign affairs minister. The new element occurred in the speech by Forlani, president of the Christian Democratic Party, who set out to elaborate on and formulate in greater detail certain statements already made at the recent meeting of his party.

Our country must equip itself for an autonomous system of defense on the model of the one organized by Tito in Yugoslavia. Forlani said that our country cannot resolve the problems of its own defense by entrusting them to the decisions of the nuclear powers. We must implement our own conventional security system, adapted to the shape of our territory and secure through its internal cohesion in the same manner as the arrangements made in the past by President Tito for his country, Forlani said.

BERLINGUER LAUDS TITO, WARNS AGAINST PRESSURE ON YUGOSLAVIA

[Article by PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer: "His Legacy"]

[Text] Although we had been prepared for it for a long time, Tito's death arouses deep emotion in us which unites us at this time with our Yugoslav comrades and the citizens of Yugoslavia. We pay the same grief-stricken tribute to him. Tito was a political leader of exceptional caliber who, despite his old age, remained consistently committed to his multifaceted battle right to the end. He leaves a great legacy behind him.

His political stature was revealed at many levels, above all within Yugoslavia as a leader of an exceptionally broad and valuable antifascist resistance, as an architect of an original socialist experiment--based on self management--and as a builder of friendship and unity among the country's different peoples. It was also revealed in the international communist and workers movement, as a vanguard figure from 1948, even in face of Stalin, in the rejection of the principle of the leading state and leading party and as an advocate of the right of each party and state to choose and follow its own path in full independence. However, this policy was also revealed throughout international life. Tito was one of the founders and leading exponents of the nonaligned movement, and a staunch advocate of a policy of peace, cooperation and equality among all peoples.

His action always took place principally in the political sphere. However, now that we can make an overall assessment of all his work as a leader we also understand how much of it was based on strong and profound ideological and theoretical convictions. In his writings, therefore, as well as in his actions we can find the structure and development of a powerful political thought.

When a leader of such stature dies--a leader who for 40 years played such an important role in the difficult events affecting his country and the world to such an extent that he won universal respect--it is inevitable that he will be missed. We have reached that moment which the world press has designated the "post-Tito" period: A moment which has already given rise and will continue to give rise to all sorts of inferences and conjectures based on the complex needs for coexistence among an assortment of nations which still face considerable differences in levels of economic development, interwoven with different cultural traditions. However, aside from this, the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia faces the great problem of defending its own autonomous options in the international sphere--options which can now be more useful than ever at a time when new and serious threats to peace are gathering in the world as a result of the setback in the detente to which Tito and our other Yugoslav comrades made an extremely important contribution.

We must not underestimate the grave tasks facing Yugoslavia. However, on one point our views and expectations differ from those so often encountered in other circles. We have deep faith in the Yugoslav people and communists, in their strength and their wisdom--a faith which has grown in the course of the close political and personal relations which we have had with them for years.

We are convinced that the League of Communists of Yugoslavia will be able to carry out the duties facing it through its ties with the people and its political understanding, which it has already demonstrated so valuably on many occasions. This conviction of ours is an essential part of the solidarity which we wish to express to your Yugoslav comrades at this painful time.

As Italians, and particularly as Italian Communists, we have a vital interest which we have demonstrated many times and which coincides with the interest defended by the Yugoslavs themselves. Yugoslavia, which is our neighbor and is linked to our country by strong ties of friendship, will have our full support in its work aimed at calmly continuing its process of building a socialist society--designed and implemented in full autonomy--and in its courageous policy of nonalignment in the international sphere. These are the pillars of Tito's legacy.

Moreover, it is not only in our interest for Yugoslavia to be able to follow its path; it is a stabilizing element in Europe and hence a fairly important factor in peace on our continent. Pressure on Yugoslavia, from any quarter whatsoever, to try to change its policy in one direction or another from outside would be a shortsighted and dangerous attitude. We hope that the protagonists of world politics are wise enough to avoid this: for our part, we will firmly oppose any such attempt.

L'UNITA TEXT OF PCI CONDOLENCE MESSAGE TO LCY

[Unattributed report: "PCI Central Committee Message to League"]

[Text] After learning of Comrade Tito's death the PCI Central Committee sent the following message to the League of Communists of Yugoslavia Central Committee in Belgrade:

Dear comrades, we send you, your party and your people our most heartfelt condolences on the death of Comrade Josip Broz Tito.

With [the death of] Comrade Tito we lose a great protagonist in the history of the international workers movement and an eminent statesman who has left a deep and lasting mark on the contemporary world.

A communist fighter since the days of the Third International and the leader of an anti-fascist liberation war which was, at the same time, a national and social revolution, Comrade Tito was the architect of an original socialist experiment which never faltered even during the most bitter and painful polemics and division in the communist movement.

Comrade Tito was jealous of Yugoslav independence, sovereignty and national unity and of his party's autonomy and he will be remembered as a vigorous advocate of these principles for all countries in the world, whether big or small, as the fundamental principles for a new international coexistence. A staunch advocate of detente and peace, Comrade Tito was one of the founders of nonalignment and of the vast movement of peoples and countries which made a valid contribution to overcoming the Cold War and which are still fighting against the growing threats posed by the extremes of great-power and bloc politics and to open up new paths of peace and cooperation for the world.

We also remember Comrade Tito as a friend of Italy, its people and our party in the painful and difficult search for a solution eventually produced by the Osimo treaty which remains an example of constructive and peaceful relations between neighboring countries.

Dear comrades, it is with sincere emotion and grief that the Italian Communists lower their flag. Your struggle is ours, too. The lesson which he leaves to you and your people is an extremely important contribution for us too and, we are certain, for millions and millions of men in the world fighting for freedom, justice and peace.

PCI Central Committee, 5 May

L'UNITA REPORTS BERLINGUER LOCAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN SPEECH

LD090901 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 5 May 80 pp 1, 4

[Unattributed report on speech delivered by PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer in Rome on 4 May: "Enrico Berlinguer Opens PCI Election Campaign in Rome"]

[Excerpts] Rome--PCI Secretary Comrade Enrico Berlinguer yesterday launched the Communist election campaign for the local government elections on 8 June with a rally in the sports stadium at the Rome conference center attended by a large crowd of comrades and citizens.

It is an indisputable fact, now generally recognized, that the PCI is now the most active Italian party in international life. Comrade Enrico Berlinguer devoted the first part of his speech yesterday to the dramatic questions and tragic events which have characterized the world situation in recent months, weeks and days.

I imagine that you expect me, the PCI secretary general said at the beginning of his speech, to talk today mainly about the significance and results of the party's initiatives in the international sphere including the recent visit to China and Korea. For several months now the PCI's positions and initiatives have been the object of attention and interest in Italy and abroad.

Berlinguer recalled the most significant aspects of this PCI initiative, ranging from the opposition expressed toward the deployment of new missiles in Europe and on our national territory--accompanied by a specific and feasible alternative proposal--to the condemnation of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan; from the stance taken in the European Parliament in Strasbourg in favor of detente and an autonomous role for Europe--even in connection with the Iranian situation and the pressures being exerted by the United States in this sphere--to the meetings with SPD and Socialist International President Willy Brandt, French Socialist Party Secretary Mitterrand, British Labor Party leaders and leaders of Scandinavian social democratic parties; from the contacts--which PCI leaders have always had--with the League of Communists of Yugoslavia, the Algerian National Liberation Front, the POLISARIO Front and Indira Gandhi's party to the Communist delegation's trip to China and Korea. Therefore, people have had to admit, Berlinguer said, that the PCI is the Italian party which is most active in international life: Certainly nobody can say, for instance, that the DC is taking any noticeable initiative in the world. The PCI is active with its own individual positions--the fruits of careful and original formulation. Abroad, this responsibility and commitment by the PCI is a fact which nobody dreams of disputing. In Italy, however, there are some people (but there are fewer of them and they are increasingly discredited) who try to suggest that all our initiatives in the international sphere are dictated by internal political aims and by an alleged concern to provide "proof of autonomy."

This subject of autonomy, Berlinguer exclaimed, has now become almost comical. This is especially the case when it is raised by DC or Italian Social Democratic Party leaders who maintain that we must stand by United States at all times even when (and even especially when) they stage adventures like the one attempted in Iran, which lead the world to the brink of war, and when the U.S. secretary of state himself--Cyrus Vance--dissociates himself from such adventures and resigns.

Agitation over the PCI's "autonomy," Berlinguer continued, reaches the limit of effrontery when even those people furthest removed from politics readily grasp that the PCI speaks with equal frankness and consistency in Rome, Strasbourg, Moscow, Beijing and Washington. And they also learn that the PCI says what it deems right and necessary to political leaders of the United States, the USSR, the PRC and the European countries.

When I read the commentaries on the recent visit which I and Comrade G.C. Pajetta made with our delegation to China, I saw that somebody, who did not know what other criticism to make, accused us of not being able to "choose" between the USSR and China. Clearly these people cannot imagine an Italian party which does not choose to identify with some party or state in another country. Since they are incapable of thinking for themselves they are disconcerted when they realize that others do think for themselves and do so responsibly.

Indeed, Berlinguer said, in the present world situation, in view of the serious erosion of the ability of the superpowers and the old ruling classes to make objective analyses and lead world affairs and in the face of so much ideological narrowmindedness, so much sectarianism and factionalism being demonstrated in international life and in the life of individual countries, we believe that every responsible political force must now think for itself and try to ensure that reason, politics, dialogue and negotiation prevail over the use of arms, acts of violence and faits accomplis.

The real and most fundamental motive for our initiatives is this: We acted, Berlinguer said, not out of a desire for spectacle or applause but in the knowledge of how serious and dangerous the present international situation is and with the intention of making our own serious contribution to extend the network of relations among communist, workers, democratic and peace-loving forces whether or not they are in government. We did this and are still doing it, constantly trying to repair broken ties, defuse the situation, reduce tensions and promote cooperation--in short, to unite and not to divide. This proposal, which has formed the basis of all our initiatives, also motivated us during our recent trip: in Korea where our aim was to consolidate longstanding relations of friendship and cooperation with our Korean comrades which are based on a broad similarity in our analyses of the situation, and in China where the aim was to restore relations which had been suspended for a long time.

In our contacts with our Chinese comrades (which started last March to a limited extent) we agreed not to go back over the reasons which led to the two parties breaking off relations; this was not because the subject was a source of embarrassment but because the situation has changed so much--in the two countries, in the world, in the international workers movement--that it rendered the former differences futile and highlighted entirely new and different problems and needs. The top CCP leaders, the PCI secretary continued, have described the resumption of relations with our party as an event which "will make history." We do not think that this statement was made for reasons of courtesy or convenience. The impression which we had throughout our stay in China is that the central and local leaders, the workers and students, the peasants and teachers, the women and children that we met did indeed regard our presence in their country as an innovation of exceptional significance: Moreover, it was no accident that exceptional importance was attached to the event by the press, radio and television.

We were conscious of and felt, in a welcome of this type, not only our shared satisfaction with the revived friendship but also the presence of real understanding of what our party--the PCI--really is. First, the articles published in China in preparation for our arrival and then the public and private speeches revealed an understanding of the PCI's individual characteristics not only as a party which has its own autonomous and independent place and its own well-defined role in the international workers movement on the world scene, but also as a party whose original definition of a path toward socialism in Italy and Western Europe people were interested in trying to understand.

From our viewpoint, Berlinguer then said, the visit, the information gathered, the many contacts we made served to show us the real nature of this huge country which has experienced a great liberating revolution and which is now inhabited by a population which amounts to almost 1/4 of mankind. The impression which we obtained is that the problems of development and modernization in this country are vast, especially after 10 years in which not only political life but also productive life--especially in industry and transport and in the running of schools and universities--was thrown into complete disarray by the "Cultural Revolution," whose origins and effects were not explained in a simplistic and propagandist way by our Chinese comrades but they were discussed as a phenomenon whose causes are now being analysed--both the causes inherent in objective conditions and those dependent on party mistakes.

Therefore, we gained the impression of a country which is committed to a great effort to overcome the negative consequences of events in the past 10 years and which is also facing the remaining problems with great realism. This is the reason for our great interest in what is happening there, convinced as we are that a modern China is a factor contributing to mankind's general progress. Of course, Berlinguer added, in our meeting with our Chinese comrades, as always in socialist countries, we explained our view of democracy and socialism and the relationship between them which can develop in different conditions in each country but which we think should always be developed so as to guarantee the fundamental rights of individual and collective freedom.

Our Discussions With the Chinese

We had fairly broad and sincere exchanges of information and discussions with our Chinese comrades on international problems and international relations. We explained, Berlinguer said, our assessment of the PRC's role and the need for everybody to fully recognize its place on the world scene. Moreover, these are positions which were fully expounded at our 15th congress. Our Chinese comrades explained their positions in turn. This revealed that there are points on which we agree and points on which we disagree.

One of the points on which we agree, for instance, is the will to work actively to defend peace, respect for sovereignty and independence of states, the defense of full autonomy for communist parties, our views on the nonaligned countries' role and the importance of maintaining their unity.

However, the PCI secretary added, as you know, we disagree on the subject of the avoidability of war and on the fact that the USSR should be regarded as an enemy country (and even as the "main enemy"). We expressed our disagreement on these subjects, adding of course that we are not in agreement with any country which regards China as an enemy. Furthermore, we expressed our concern over relations between China and Vietnam. With regard to the Kampuchean question we reaffirmed the need to find a political solution which guarantees the Kampuchean people's full sovereignty.

Berlinguer recalled that agreements and disagreement which were examined in long discussions, were also aired in public: in the toasts, in the final press conference given in the presence of 160 journalists, and in the Chinese newspapers. The type of relations which we have established and which we intend to develop with the CCP is such that they will have a value beyond relations between two parties which, to different degrees and in different ways, have their own international role. The method and principles on which these relations are based are those of mutual respect and better mutual understanding: free discussions, even in public, of controversial viewpoints; equality in autonomy; and, finally and, above all, the effort to reach understanding and to seek areas of common interest and action. Comrade Hu Yaobang, secretary general of the CCP Central Committee, bidding farewell to the PCI delegation on its departure from China, was right when he said that "the differences and divergences which exist in our analyses and viewpoints on some problems can only inspire us and prompt us to work together and, through continual verification in practice, to achieve progress on the basis of Marxism."

If these criteria and rules, the PCI secretary general observed at this point, were adopted by all parties, states and movements which claim to follow socialism and to support the emancipation of peoples, it would be extremely positive not only for the workers movement but for the whole world. This must be achieved as soon as possible. This is our hope and pledge, especially now that the world is poised between peace and war, between progress and barbarism and between change and destruction: This is the dramatic alternative which we are facing as Italians and Europeans.

Why have we come to this pass, Berlinguer asked? I will not repeat the analysis of the prime fundamental causes of the tensions throughout the world (we have discussed this several times on the basis of our 15th congress). On the other hand, I would like to draw the attention of comrades and public opinion as a whole to the political cause which has come to light in recent times and which is the main reason for the threat to world peace. This cause--which we have seen escalating in recent months--is the increasingly acute confrontation and rivalry between the two superpowers: the United States and the USSR.

The facts show that detente entered a critical phase precisely when dialogue and the search for agreement broke down between the United States and the USSR and when they turned to a policy of unilateral action, the use of force, intervention and exerting pressure in other countries' internal affairs. There is no need to recall all the actions which marked this course of events until the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and the U.S. military adventure in Iran. It is a fact that, through a whole chain of actions and reactions over a period of time, we have come to a spiral which has become extremely dangerous for peace in the world.

The preservation of peace, Berlinguer then said, dependes primarily on a resumption of dialogue and cooperation between the United States and the USSR. However, we must realize that in present circumstances this dialogue will not be resumed unless other forces take the field--other states which act autonomously to end the currently prevalent logic of power and to urge the two superpowers to show moderation and to return their relations--and the whole of international relations--to the course of discussions and negotiation. It would therefore be a serious mistake both to fan the flames of division between the two superpowers and to uncritically espouse the positions of either. This, Berlinguer stressed, is equally valid for countries which belong to an alliance.

If for example, he continued, we accede to U.S. demands for sanctions against the USSR and for a boycott of the Olympic games (and in this connection we welcome the appeal by the West European Olympic committees to all nations to send their athletes to the Moscow Olympics) or if we show solidarity with the United States over their military "raid" on Iran--an operation which could have sparked off a chain reaction leading to world war--we would not be serving the cause of peace and detente or helping the United States solve the dispute with Iran or trying wisely and effectively to secure the release of the Tehran hostages.

We understand that the American nation feels outraged by the unacceptable imprisonment of U.S. citizens. However, so far the U.S. leaders have failed to take account of the fact that the Iranian nation also feels outraged by the fact that the United States has not admitted its weighty responsibility for the shah's terrible crimes.

Furthermore, let us not forget that if the United States' objective is not just to secure the hostages' release but also to destroy the Iranian Revolution and restore a reactionary regime similar to the shah's, Italy and Europe cannot follow it on this path because it is in our interest to establish a policy of economic and political cooperation with Iran and the other Middle East nations. This, the PCI secretary added, is also the best way of making a contribution to building a democratic society and state in Iran which can gradually overcome the extremist demonstrations of fanaticism and religious sectarianism which still exist in that revolution. In this situation the Italian Government has behaved in an inconsistent and hesitant manner. At first it seemed as if it intended to express criticism of the U.S. operation but, after a few days, it virtually expressed advance, blind support for other possible adventurist U.S. initiatives. In Florence the honorable Cossiga stated that the international situation could "place grave responsibilities on our country which could be called upon to make complex choices which might divide us." What did he mean? Everybody is wondering. It is surprising that a prime minister should speak in such an enigmatic way on such a delicate subject. The country has the right to know and demands that the government make itself clear.

International Relations

Which forces in the world can act to place international relations--above all, relations between the United States and the USSR--back on the path of detente, the peaceful solution of existing conflicts, disarmament, cooperation and for a world development based on independence for all countries and on mutual advantage?

There are many such forces and they are important, Berlinguer said. He cited the non-aligned movement and countries whose unity must be encouraged; Western Europe, particularly its workers movement and democratic forces; the liberation movements; the forces of progress and peace present in every continent; and those religious institutions and cultural movements whose aims include peace, fraternity and justice.

If all these forces, each with its own makeup and policies for action and operation, were to act to defuse the world situation, to effect a return to the prevalence of reason and mankind's permanent and universal interests, the course which is leading or could lead--even unintentionally--toward war could be barred, Berlinguer stressed, and could be reversed.

It is in this context that we place the task which falls to the working class and to our party as an Italian party and as a party which is part of the whole world workers movement and, in particular the workers movement which has its roots in Western Europe.

We are convinced advocates of European unity. We do not call into question the European countries' membership in the Atlantic pact--and that includes Italy--nor the resulting defense duties in the geographical area defined in the agreements ratified in this pact. However, this should not prevent Europe from taking autonomous initiatives and asserting and developing its own world role which should be aimed now more than ever before at detente, the resumption of East-West dialogue, a rapprochement between the United States and the USSR and an arms reduction which ensures the security of all European states.

Therefore, we are fighting for a Europe with different economic and social structures and a new ruling class, and are striving to establish a relationship with Third World countries and peoples no longer of a colonialist type but cooperation based on equality and justice.

While I was in China and Korea, the PCI secretary general said, the new tripartite DC-Italian Socialist Party-Italian Republican Party government was presented in Parliament. Having read the prime minister's "program exposition" I realized that (despite the fact that the speech lasted a good 2 hours) there is no program. On many fundamental questions and above all on questions relating to economic and social policy we heard either soothing words (which indicated that no choice was being made) or procrastination. Therefore the government parties reached agreement only on the posts of "minister" and "under secretary" (85 ministerial and under secretarial posts were required to balance the accounts); an agreement, in short, reached purely on the criteria of dividing power among the parties and their factions. This system--which they are now also trying to follow for appointments to other public bodies, banks and the Italian Radio Broadcasting and Television Company--has in the past few days already led to the resignation of National Hydrocarbons Agency Chairman Egidi in protest of Craxi's move to appoint a man loyal to him as vice chairman. The voters, Berlinguer exclaimed, should ask how the Italian economy and Italy's relations with foreign countries can benefit from this whole interminable, troubled affair of the National Hydrocarbons Agency.

Meanwhile the DC--or rather the so-called "preamble" majority which won the congress and, with the president, secretary and deputy secretary, controls the major party positions--is revealing the spirit and political objectives which motivate it in a way which could not be clearer. And, faced with the wave of scandals in which many DC officials are involved and faced with a public opinion which is resolutely demanding honesty and integrity, the current DC leaders--instead of singling out and punishing the corrupt members of the DC ranks--are mounting a trumped-up and staged campaign against the PCI (they have even raked up the Moscow NEW TIMES accusation!) [possible reference to charges against PCI of manifesting excessive obedience to Moscow] which is solely aimed at raising a great cloud of dust to ensure that the DC is able to maintain and extend its system of power which is so widely based on patronage and corruption.

However, in a meeting held by the DC in Brescia on local government issues, nothing specific was said about programs but instead an obsessive attack was launched on leftwing councils, the only ones which can offer the citizens a positive account of achievements despite--in many cases--the burden bequeathed by previous DC councils and despite continual obstacles raised by the central government. This is an attack, the PCI secretary exclaimed, which is aimed at curtailing the very autonomy of local authorities.

And finally, making the control of the "preamble" DC quite clear, Donat Cattin (who bluntly says out loud what his friends whisper to each other), is affirming that Italy needs "a healthy reactionary wave." This therefore marks the end of speeches on "national solidarity" with which they tried to conceal a political decision to break away and swing to the right even at the recent DC congress.

I do not deny, Berlinguer added, that there are forces and men in the DC (and even in the government) who would like to maintain the possibility of building effective national solidarity and a government which expresses it fully. However, the very way in which the government was formed and the line taken by the main forces which determine its direction move in the opposite direction, in other words, toward deeper divisions, anticommunism and an attempt to achieve the greatly desired "five-party government" (DC, PSI, Italian Social Democratic Party, Italian Liberal Party and Italian Republican Party)--the most backward solution which could be pursued in present circumstances. Such a solution would, in fact, stifle all aspirations to change government methods, economic and social policy and foreign policy.

Therefore, each day provides further confirmation that our criticism of the existing government solution is valid and this further confirms the need to mount a serious, consistent and clear opposition.

We have already seen that this government and this majority are weak. In the course of a few days the government has been defeated in Parliament four times; either by the absence of members of the majority or by internal conflicts which divided it when the vote was taken. However, this is not all. If you consider the political positions upheld by considerable political factions in the DC and PSI--positions which differ from those held by their secretariats--it can be seen that the present government, politically speaking, does not have a majority and that, on the other hand, there is a potential majority of forces convinced of the need for a different political solution based on effective national unity.

This means, Berlinguer said, that our policy--while not immune from mistakes on which I think we have dwelt enough in the past few months--has shifted directions, has set the seal on new areas of agreement and has clarified the situation. In other words our line has obtained political results in the direction and along the path that we have been following for years. It is a path which--as we have always warned--is not and cannot be made up of successive victories but which--even through harsh conflicts--never stops pursuing the objective of uniting the people's forces following various lines and having different inspirations; in other words the Communist, Socialist and Christian forces. This is still a cornerstone of our political action whatever our party's position in Parliament. This, Berlinguer added, is still true today and this is our objective more than ever before because it corresponds to the country's basic needs.

At this stage, our struggle to attain this objective involves the local government elections on 8 June, the PCI secretary then said. This election should concentrate on questions relating to the budget and to the method of governing the communes, provinces and regions. We Communists have everything to gain from urging citizens to discuss such questions and to ensure that their political choice and their vote is based on an assessment of what the parties have and have not done in the local authorities and the regions.

However, it is clear that the result of these local government elections will also have an undeniable influence on political relations at national level, on policies and on government prospects. For instance, it is clear that a victory by the DC now led by the "preamble" men--by men motivated by the will (as Donat Cattin has told us) to prompt a "reactionary wave" would open up prospects of serious regression and hence of acute tensions in the country and would also represent a serious blow to the political positions and prospects for initiatives and progress by the more open DC members themselves.

'MARCH 28 BRIGADE' CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR SHOOTING

AU071715 Rome ANSA in English 1515 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] Milan, May 7 (ANSA)--Guido Passalacqua, a journalist for the Italian Daily LA REPUBBLICA was kneecapped in his Milan home this morning by three terrorists. The attack occurred at 7:25 local time and was claimed a short time afterward by a group calling itself the "March 28 Brigade" in an anonymous telephone call to a Milan daily. The caller said, "we are the March 28 Brigade. We have crippled Guido Passalacqua from the REPUBBLICA. Get it right: March 28 Brigade". It may be the group wanted to underscore the date last year when a Red Brigade hideout on Via Fracchia in Genoa was raided by police and four terrorists were killed: three men and a woman. Passalacqua's condition was not serious. The journalist had often written about investigations and trials of terrorist suspects.

AGRICULTURE MINISTRY ISSUES NOTE ON DISMISSED FARM WORKERS

LD082158 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 8 May 80

[Text] The Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries has issued an official note in connection with dismissals of rural workers currently taking place in a number of collective units of production. The note reads as follows:

The government has learned that workers are being dismissed from collective units of production--UCP's--(?by initiative of those in charge of running the said UCP's) whenever the workers apply for grants for government land for personal farming.

As is publicly known, the government has been encouraging the establishment of autonomous farming on plots of land catering for family farming, in keeping with its own program and in accordance with the law.

The seriousness of such occurrences, which are nothing but a form of coercion [words indistinct] and repression, warrants a public denunciation of these occurrences and the reiteration by the government of its unswerving commitment to carry on with its plan of handing land to landless workers.

These workers who in any way find themselves to be the victims of coercion are hereby assured by the government that, through the Ministry of Labor, immediate steps will be taken with a view to enforcing the implementation of the law, both as regards the situation of the dismissed workers and the ascertaining of the employers' responsibility in this matter. The government, with the assistance of the security forces, will preserve the freedom of all citizens and the strict observance of legality.

TEXT OF PCE CONDOLENCE MESSAGE TO LCY ON TITO DEATH

ID081551 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 6 May 80 p 9

[Apparent text of undated PCE message: "We Lose a Faithful Friend"]

[Text] Dear comrades:

On the sad news of the death of Comrade Josip Broz Tito, which has been received with profound sorrow by Spanish Communists, on our own behalf and on behalf of the PCE Central Committee we express our most deeply felt condolences to the League of Communists of Yugoslavia.

Your party and people are losing in President Tito a legendary revolutionary fighter and the indisputable inspirer and leader of all the peoples of Yugoslavia in the struggle against the Hitlerite occupiers and then in the determination to build a self-managing and peaceful socialist society.

We Spanish Communists are losing in Comrade Tito a faithful and close friend and a consistent defender of Spanish democracy who, at momentous times in Spain's history, actively supported our struggle for freedom and who always showed great understanding for the policies of our party, whose activities he followed with interest.

Comrade Tito, a statesman of world standing and the distinguished founder of the movement of nonaligned countries, made an exceptional contribution to the peoples' struggle for liberation from political and economic dependence and for social progress.

Until the last days of his life he worked tirelessly for peace and detente and for the liquidation of hotbeds of tension, convinced, as he himself declared, that division into blocs cannot resolve any of the world's vital problems nor open up the prospect of democratization of international relations.

His exemplary life dedicated to the struggle for the triumph of democracy, peace and socialism merited him the admiration and respect of his people and of millions of people throughout the world.

Dear comrades: At this sad time our party's Central Committee and all Spanish Communists pay a deeply felt tribute to the memory of Comrade Tito, share your sorrow, and express our total solidarity with Socialist Yugoslavia and its leaders, with whom we are united by profound ties of friendship, cooperation and comradeship.

Yours fraternally,

Dolores Ibarruri, chairman of the PCE; Santiago Carrillo, secretary general of the PCE.

Yugoslav peoples' epic of struggle, in the fire of Yugoslavia's socialist revolution", stated Dolores Ibarruri, La Pasionaria, president of the Spanish Communist Party, "With Tito's death we lose a great comrade and communist who with stood the heaviest of trials, a hero, a warrior and a statesman of universal magnitude," pointed out Dolores Ibarruri.

Carrillo Tribute

ID081549 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 6 May 80 p 1

[Tribute by Santiago Carrillo: "A Luminary of the 20th Century"]

[Text] With Tito has died the last leader to command general respect and admiration throughout the world, one of the most illustrious heads of the antifascist struggle, one of the luminaries of the 20th century.

At the head of the communists and peoples of Yugoslavia, Tito inscribed one of the finest pages in the history of Europe's liberation from the Hitlerite yoke. He founded and built the federal socialist state which we know and love today. He defended it against Stalin's attempt at hegemonism and against the pressures and maneuvers of imperialism. He promoted the forms of self-management which characterize the living socialist democracy in his country today.

At the same time, he was until his death a genuine champion of world peace. With the nonaligned movement, which he founded and inspired, he contributed to the maintenance of peace and to furthering the independence of oppressed peoples.

In addition, Tito was a faithful friend of Spanish democracy, which he supported from the thirties to the present day. I remember my last meeting with him last summer when he spoke at length about Spain and its problems. Judging by his appearance last August, no one would have thought that we would not meet again and that his wish to visit our country would not be realized. The picture of him that I took away from that meeting was one of a man of great vitality, with bright optimism regarding his country's future and with a concern for peace which prompted him to take personal charge of every detail in the preparations for the nonaligned conference in Havana.

With Tito dead, I am firmly convinced that Socialist Yugoslavia, united around the League of Communists, will continue developing the system of self-management and maintaining itself in the nonaligned camp to defend peace.

I am honored to have been a friend of this great man, from whose example I tried to learn, and to be a friend of his successors, of those who are going to follow the path which he charted.

PREMIER VIEWS CURRENT POLITICAL SCENE IN BASQUE COUNTRY

ID080921 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 23 Apr 80 pp 14-15

[Javier Angulo undated interview in Bilbao with Basque Premier Carlos Garaicoechea: "Transfer of Peaceful Sectors to Armed Struggle Parties or Vice Versa Will Depend on Statute's Implementation"]

[Text] Bilbao--Question: Some 74,000 citizens of Biscay, Guipuzcoa and Alava have altered their vote over the past year (1 March 1979 to 9 March 1980), abandoning other, generally conservative political options and supporting the Basque Nationalist Party [PNV]. How do you explain this phenomenon?

Answer: I believe that to a large extent it is due to the fact that the PNV boasts an honest history and consistency. Nobody can say that we have betrayed any positions, broken any promises or yielded to opportunism, sacrificing questions of principle. We are a responsible and reliable party. Our stances, which are steadfast but moderate and realistic and shun demagogy and utopias, also prevail in a society which is becoming politically calmer. From another viewpoint, it is a popular party which groups together quite varied sectors with the specific basic objective of securing the Basque people's national freedoms. It is also popular because of its social composition, since it is basically composed of the middle and working classes. The PNV is a party whose stances I would unhesitatingly describe as social democratic (as shown in our documents) and which does not forsake its original attachment to Christian Democracy, whose well-comprehended humanist inspiration it invokes.

Question: Nevertheless, the PNV is regarded by leftwing sectors as closely linked to the Basque capital.

Answer: That is a lie, and those who say so know it. Some of our most prominent critics have told me privately that within their parties it is often acknowledged that when the chips are down we pursue a more progressive policy than they do and that the PNV's 150,000-strong membership is the best indication of the party's real nature. But logically the best way to win support among the leftwing parties is to lump the PNV with the right and link it with capital.

Let this be clear once and for all: Big capital has never been with us--only small and medium entrepreneurs who have accepted our progressive stances! It is a much more praiseworthy achievement to have involved them in social change than just to persuade the underprivileged sectors which form the majority of our party.

Question: Some of your party's leaders and candidates used the words "danger" and "enemy" with reference to Marxism and communism during the election campaign. How do you assess these assertions?

Answer: I do not recall assertions such as the ones you mention concerning Marxism or communism. What some people did was denounce the "cryptocommunism" of Euskadiko Ezkerra. Of course we are neither Marxists nor communists, but in any case I am not in favor of making statements such as those made by a leading Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] candidate in the Basque country, who said that the PNV is the Basque people's principal enemy. As far as I am concerned, our worst enemy today is unemployment and violence.

"There Are Separatists and Autonomists"

Question: There are fears concerning separatist leanings on the PNV's part in broad sectors of the Spanish state, mainly among the Spanish political class (and above all in government circles). Is your party separatist? Have you rejected the separatist option?

Answer: Of course there are separatists and also autonomists in our party. The establishment of a formula for this complex form of nationalism which will make a system of self-government and a guarantee of the defense and development of Basque national identity and interests compatible with a multinational state is a task which central government should be working at more than anyone else. Because, obviously, unless this compatibility is guaranteed nationalism as a whole could become separatist and reject a state which will not accept the fact of Basque nationalism.

Question: What is your opinion of the idea of a "state of autonomies?"

Answer: In practice, though not so much in principle, a state of autonomies could lead us to a form of self-government similar to the federal system. Even this latter system could serve as a pretext for some people to advocate a state formula which would impose a new uniform system for attempting to eliminate the real differences among the nationlalities by means of formulas that imply "the same all round" (to use a well-worn expression), in the hope of levelling from below instead of from above, as I often say.

Be that as it may, in principle and assuming a profound and not artificial federal conception based onthe real nationalities which now make up the state, we must declare ourselves more in favor of the federal state.

Question: Would the PNV even demand the Basque people's right to self-determination?

Answer: In principle I would like to know how many parties in Spain reject and how many accept the right to self-determination. Whether or not they have considered its embodiment in the constitution to be opportune here and now is another matter. As nationalists, we cannot be opposed to this principle though we can pursue a policy which takes all the existing circumstances and options into consideration and which tries to reconcile its viewpoints with those of the other political forces for the sake of democracy.

Question: Some sections of the population not native to the Basque Country fear discrimination from the governing nationalists on account of their origins and their ignorance of the Basque language. In this connection, this apprehension seems particularly widespread among civil servants.

Answer: Some parties, especially the Union of the Democratic Center [UDC] and the PSOE, have tried to frighten the sectors you mention for ulterior motives, with the aim of appropriating them exclusively. We will never repeat the outrages that have been committed with our language and culture and with the Basque national identity. We will never impose the Basque language in an irrational manner.

Question: What reasons prompted the PNV to govern alone with only a small parliamentary majority? Did it consider any other government formulas?

Answer: We have a majority which enables us to govern under less precarious conditions than those created by the Spanish parliament. We believe that our country's present situation, which demands great determination and efficiency requires that this government be composed as a single party.

Question: Did you consider governing with the UCD?

Answer: We would be stupid if we did not desire an understanding with the government. If we governed on the basis of compromising on our principles and positions, we would not be honest. As far as the UCD is concerned, we are divided on several points at present. There are obvious ideological differences, which can be seen from our relative programs and ideological documents. As against the UCD's clearly rightwing stance, the PNV sets its clearly social democratic stance.

With regard to Navarre a great effort of rationality is needed from all the political parties so that, with a thorough respect for the Navarrese and their institutions, formulas of coalition can be sought which will not imply a levelling out, as is now happening, of the growing Basque awareness, as can now easily beobserved in Navarre. This is an issue which is being distorted and manipulated by the Navarrese rightwing and by those in the center who want at least to smash a Basque political blueprint by wrenching from it a fundamental part of the Basque territory.

I repeat, the issue is being manipulated by nurturing a Navarrese identity viewed as antagonistic toward the Basque identity, whereas they are inseparable and Navarre is of the same stock and root as the Basque country. On the basis of this belief, though with full respect for any other beliefs that may be held, I believe and hope that eventually a more rational attitude will be adopted by certain rightwing parties and particularly the UCD, so that a path, albeit specific, will be sought for linking Navarre with the rest of the Basque country, thus putting an end to this dispute, which is perhaps the most delicate unresolved issue in what has been called the "Basque problem."

Question: The economic crisis and unemployment, violence and the prompt and faithful implementation of the statute [Basque statute of autonomy] are the three closely interrelated issues to which you referred in Guernica as the keys to the present situation. How will your government tackle the first of them?

Answer: I would rather point out first, to avoid raising false expectations and hopes, that any form of action, plan or measure which we adopt in this direction will be restricted by the existence of a Basque economy dependent on and interconnected with other economic areas and closely interrelated with the faithful and thorough implementation of the spirit and letter of the statute.

Bearing these circumstances in mind, the Basque Government could define certain guidelines for action designed to reduce unemployment and adjust our economic structure, which could be summed up in the establishment of a public sector in the Basque country; a public investment policy, differentiated by sector and area, designed to bridge the structural differences in those areas of public spending where redistribution and equity will be guaranteed and in the areas where the effect of stimulating job creation will operate effectively; tax and interest relief on investment in sectors with the greatest multiplying effect in job creation.

Furthermore, the economic link between the Basque community and the state will make it possible to determine what contribution the Basque country should make to the general state spending and to the interterritorial compensation, at the same time making available sufficient money to implement a public investment and spending program.

Question: Though many people believe, in view of the Basque sociopolitical situation, that despite the self-government process now beginning, the violent situation which this area is experiencing will continue in one form or another in the coming years. It is equally true that a major sector of the population trusts that the PNV's action will make peace possible. What peace plan has the PNV drawn up from its government position for shouldering this serious responsibility?

Answer: I have repeated, until I am tired of doing so, that an analysis of the Basque country's political situation reveals two opposing political theses: the one held by those of us who believe in and are heavily committed to political and institutional methods and therefore peaceful methods, and the one held by those who believe that political objectives (independence, socialism)--which, for that matter, are legitimate in principle--can only be attained by means of the so-called armed struggle.

Though those who support this latter strategy are a minority sector, this sector is sufficiently large for the armed struggle, the use of persistent and constantly escalating violence, so that the coercive apparatus of the state has been unable to suppress it, even in the harshest eras of the dictatorship.

Furthermore, the transfer of peaceful nationalist sectors to the armed struggle parties or vice versa will depend on the authenticity, promptness and thoroughness of the statute's implementation. Like it or not, this cannot be denied.

I believe that national awareness and will are much greater in the Basque country than in Bavaria or any of the Swiss cantons. Therefore, though this may offend some people, I must state that the responsibility for what might happen here lies with whoever in Madrid wants to appear clever by trying to radically alter the statute by means of organic laws or a clumsy implementation of the statute.

Question: But even if the statute is implemented faithfully and rigorously and the benefits of self-government make themselves felt, will it not prove difficult to bring order to a Basque country where at least 150,000 people (200,000 if we include Navarre) do not accept this statute of the institutional methods stemming from the reform and will support the armed struggle either actively or morally until the minimum demands embodied in the tactical alternative of the KAS [expansion unknown] of Herri Batasuna and also advocated by the Basque Homeland and Liberty (military wing) are met?

Answer: The problem concerning the KAS alternative has more to do with political realism and a sense of balance in cooperating in consolidating a democratic state than with principles. In this connection, not only we but any democrat is unlikely to condemn the demand for the legalization of all parties (including separatist parties), the right to self-determination, the replacement of the forces of law and order by autonomous forces or an improvement in the workers' living conditions, which latter objectives, moreover, are not exclusive to the KAS or Herri Batasuna.

Question: The KAS alternative, which has been adopted by Herri Batasuna, contains the demand of amnesty for an important sector of the Basque population, as a precondition for future peace in the Basque country. It does not seem unrealistic to believe that this subject will soon be discussed in Parliament. What will your government's stance be in this connection?

Answer: Only within the framework of a real peace plan, which implies a prior end to the armed struggle, will it be possible to discuss a plan for clemency measures. Unfortunately it sounds cruelly ironical to talk about this when we are hearing news of further attacks nearby.

Question: Do you believe that unless the violence ends in the medium term the Basque Government itself will have to deal with it?

Answer: I said it in ny Guernica speech and I repeat it: Peace must be achieved one way or another. Either along the path least traumatic for everyone--based on the dialogue and reconciliation which we must seek above all--or along the lengthy and inexorable path of the systematic implementation of the law, which the government must always implement without exception, using every legal means at its disposal.

Question: When will the Basque Government have an autonomous police force ready to take charge of public order in the Basque provinces?

Answer: I want the autonomous police force to be functioning as soon as possible, but we do not want to improvise. We will set its initial embryo in motion immediately. But it must be realized that the timetable will be determined solely by the essential training program for the various bodies and this will inevitably take some time.

IRAN ISSUES INVITATION TO CONFERENCE ON U.S. RESCUE BID

LD071745 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1600 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] Iran wants to convene a big international conference with representatives from neutral and nonaligned countries in Tehran next week. The Iranian side wants the conference to discuss the crisis between Iran and the United States. According to the Iranian Embassy in Stockholm Iran will, among other things, present evidence about the U.S. attempt to rescue the embassy hostages from Tehran. Sweden is one of the countries invited by Iran to the conference. The Foreign Ministry in Stockholm confirms that an invitation has arrived, but it is stated that no decision on Swedish participation has yet been taken.

EFFECTS OF STRIKES DETAILED; 'HARSHEST MEASURE' TO COME

LD081226 Stockholm International Service in English to Europe and Africa 1100 GMT 8 May 80

[Excerpts] The harshest measure to be taken in the industrial dispute currently crippling Sweden is to come into effect at midnight when the country's transport workers will choke up the major share of the nation's supplies of oil and gasoline. With strikes already in progress at three of Sweden's four refineries, the machinery of society will soon grind to a halt if no agreement is reached within the next few days. Despite claims to the contrary by employers in the petrol industry, the transport workers say their strike is not dangerous to society because they are prepared to give special dispensation to hospitals and similar institutions as well as police and rescue services.

Swedish farmers will be among those hardest hit by the strike because they will be unable to get fuel for their machinery at this critical time of the season. Large areas of the postal service will also suffer as (?royal) mail deliveries are dependent on the use of 300,000 privately owned automobiles.

Sweden's dairies have been exempted from the fuel strike, and the country's travel agencies are confident they have sufficient fuel supplies to continue bussing charter travelers to neighboring Norway for departure from Gardermoen Airport, north of Oslo. Swedish air traffic was halted by the dispute on 25 April.

Because of other measures taken in the conflict, many movie theaters and bingo halls will be closing this weekend, followed by most hotels and restaurants next week. Since the breweries stopped production, the state liquor monopoly started rationing strong beer to three cans per customer. And with radio programming curtailed and television broadcasts limited to the news, Sweden's libraries are expecting a surge in business.

Meanwhile, the Swedish Government decided Thursday to prolong its price freeze until 16 May in order to give the negotiating partners breathing room to reach an agreement.

On a lighter note we can report that consumption of electricity in Sweden has dropped by nearly one-third during the past week because of the conflict's effect on industrial production. For the moment, Sweden is able to conserve large quantities of oil, because all the electricity needed can be produced by hydro and nuclear power alone.

IRAN SANCTIONS BILL FACES OPPOSITION IN COMMONS

LD081640 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1543 GMT 8 May 80

[By PA parliamentary staff]

[Text] The government today announced its plans to rush through Parliament the bill to impose economic sanctions against Iran. The Iran (temporary powers) bill will have its second reading in the Commons on Monday night and is scheduled to complete its remaining stages on Tuesday, according to the programme announced to MPs today by the leader of the House, Mr Norman St John-Stevas. But the measure is certain to face determined opposition from Labour backbenchers, 60 of whom have signed a Commons motion opposing sanctions. Some Tory MPs are also unhappy with the proposal. The haste in dealing with the bill is to ensure it is on the statute book by May 17 for concerted action by EEC governments in support of President Carter for the release of the American hostages in Tehran.

Later Tory Mr Tony Marlow (Northampton N) warned the Commons that introduction of the bill could be damaging to British interests. There were many Tory MPs who believed that Britain's and America's interests in Iran were different. "There is at least a possibility that the introduction of the bill will be damaging to the interests of the United Kingdom in that part of the world, and therefore to the Western alliance as a whole," Mr Marlow warned. But Mr St John Stevas said the introduction of legislation and publication of the bill was a fulfillment of an obligation freely entered into by the nine EEC countries.

Carrington Address

LD082014 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1926 GMT 8 May 80

[By Chris Moncreiff, PA political staff]

[Text] Lord Carrington, the foreign secretary, tonight beat off Tory critics of the government plans to introduce next week "holding" legislation to impose economic sanctions against Iran. He told a packed private meeting of the Conservative backbench 1922 Committee at the House of Commons that it was "of paramount importance at this time to support the Americans on this issue." Even so, Lord Carrington was made well aware that some Conservatives may conveniently be absent on Monday and Tuesday to avoid voting for sanctions, a policy which a substantial number of Tory backbenchers are unhappy about. The most vehement critic tonight was Mr Tony Marlow (C Northampton North) who warned that a policy of sanctions could be "disastrous". He told the foreign secretary: "It won't get the American hostages out any earlier, and it won't help our relations with Iran." And Mr Marlow said that he might find it necessary to vote against the government next week. However, overall, Lord Carrington--particularly following his visit to Washington--was given a warm reception by his colleagues. He reminded those who have misgivings about the government's policy that he had made it clear to the Americans that it was more difficult for European countries than for the U.S. to impose sanctions on Iran.

Later, Mr Tam Dalyell, MP for West Lothian, acted to hammer home a desire among Labour backbenchers to place curbs on the sanctions against Iran. Mr Dalyell, who is chairman of the opposition's influential foreign affairs group, has tabled a new clause to the Iran bill spelling out the wish that when the American Embassy hostages in Tehran are released "no proceedings shall be instituted in any court of law in any part of the UK" over a breach in the sanctions orders. And during tonight's Commons' debate on the finance bill, Mr. Dalyell intervened to ask the government what assessment the Treasury had made of the impact of sanctions on Iran. He added: "Some of us feel that the proposed sanctions are like letting kids loose in the signal box at Crewe [major railroad junction]. They will create chaos in the economy."

KLIRIDHIS CITES NEED FOR LONG STRUGGLE, ASSISTANCE

AT081645 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 7 May 80 p 3

[Exclusive interview granted by Glavkos Kliridhis, chairman of the Democratic Rally of Cyprus to AKROPOLIS contributor B. Papadhakis on 6 May in Athens, prior to his return to Cyprus]

[Text] "In every possible way the Turks are trying to strengten a de facto situation in Cyprus, a situation which cannot be overthrown by peaceful or diplomatic processes."

This, among other things, was stated yesterday by Chairman of the [Cyprus] Democratic Rally Glavkos Kliridhis to AKROPOLIS contributor B. Papadhakis shortly before his departure from Athens for Nicosia.

Papadhakis: Mr Kliridhis, earlier, in 1976 and in 1978, you told me that you see no solution to the Cyprus issue through diplomatic channels. You repeated this last Friday in a speech in Athens. In other words: Will a situation which is, in fact, detrimental to the majority of the Cypriot people be perpetuated forever?

Kliridhis: "I will reply to you with three suppositions:

"1. If there is continuation of the effort to find a solution on the basis of the four directives (Makarios-Denktas agreement of 1977) which happens to have the support of Western, Eastern and nonaligned countries;

"2. If after intensive diplomatic activity directed toward the West, the East and the non-aligned, we move in such a way as to get support for the solution of differences which have arisen in reference to the interpretation of the four directives;

"3. If we reach a joint agreement of the differences which arose in the implementation of the four directives; it is only then that we can appeal to the Security Council but not so that it will enforce measures against Turkey--something which is unattainable--but so that it can make recommendations on the disputed points on the basis of article 37 of the constitutional charter.

It is only in this way that I can see a resumption of talks under the auspices of the secretary general with good prospects for reaching an end to the deadlock, thus ending the perpetuation of the dangerous de facto situation.

The Invasion

"There is no doubt that the Cyprus problem is in essence a problem of invasion and violation of human rights. This is because, even if we suppose that the conditions of guarantee gave Turkey the right of military intervention and that Turkey intervened in Cyprus after the coup in order to prevent the union of Cyprus with Greece, then this "right" should have been limited to returning the situation to the Zurich status.

"Having invaded Cyprus--and we must never forget this--Turkey not only failed to act to return the situation to the Zurich status but, on the contrary, Turkey used and continues to use its military presence on the island to enforce a solution which is totally contrary to the Zurich constitutional status.

"Despite all this the Turkish invasion--it will be its sixth anniversary next July--has not yet been condemned either by a Western, an Eastern, or a nonaligned country or by any international organization including the United Nations. It is also undeniable that since 1974, both the General Assembly as well as other international organizations have approved resolutions which, if implemented by Turkey, could have assisted in the discovery of a solution to the Cyprus problem."

If There Is Pressure

Papadhakis: Mr Kliridhis, if there is pressure from the West, from the East and from the nonaligned area, as you say, would Turkey be forced to terminate its invasion and withdraw its occupation forces from Cyprus?

Kliridhis: "The Security Council is the appropriate United Nations organ which could take action against Turkey for its noncompliance with UN resolutions. A multitude of resolutions on various international problems, however, are before the Security Council. They have not been implemented for a long time. The inability of the international organization to enforce compliance with its resolutions is not transitory. It is not due to any lack of jurisdiction or authority but to clashing international interests.

"Therefore, if the Cyprus problem will have to wait until such time as the Security Council will be in a position to enforce compliance with its resolutions, then the current impermissible situation would be perpetuated and the result would be the legalization of the present de facto situation."

Papadhakis: Since you see no solution through diplomatic channels, then what do you have to propose?

Kliridhis: "A long-term struggle and the defensive arming of Cyprus. Yet it is obvious that no matter how much Cyprus is armed it will be unable to evict the Turkish invader on its own.

"In conclusion I must also mention that there must not be a excessive stress on Turkey's economic difficulties nor should they be considered as a decisive lever for pressure for two reasons: one, because Turkey received large-scale economic aid from various countries both in the West and the East and, two, because Turkey knows very well that it will not be allowed to collapse economically."

ATO81218 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] U.S. President Carter sent a message of congratulations to Karamanlis on his election as president of the Republic of Greece in which he also expressed great satisfaction because Greece and the entire family of democratic nations will continue to benefit from his wisdom and integrity. The U.S. leader then referred to the difficulties which the world will have to face in the forthcoming years and stressed that the American and Greek people are united by traditional friendship. Carter also expressed his conviction that cooperation and mutual respect between Greece and the United States will continue.

TO VIMA Text

ATO81219 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 8 May 80 p 1

[Text] Cooperation between Greece and the United States within the framework of NATO is a vital contribution toward the strength of the West, stressed President Carter in his cable of congratulations to Prime Minister K. Karamanlis.

The text of the cable is as follows:

"Dear Mr Prime Minister,

"I beg you to accept my warmest congratulations on your election as president of the Republic of Greece. It is a great satisfaction for me to know that Greece and the entire family of democratic nations will continue to benefit from your wisdom and integrity.

"1980 will offer numerous challenges to the Western world. The traditional friendship between our two republics and our cooperation within the Atlantic Alliance is a vital contribution to the strength of the West. It aims at the continuation of mutual cooperation and respect which we have always demonstrated and will continue as we jointly face future challenges."

It is characteristic that the General Press and Information Directorate, in contrast to other congratulatory messages from heads of state, distributed the message of President Carter in summary form, deleting the paragraph on cooperation between Greece and the United States within the framework of NATO.

Deletion of NATO Passage Noted

ATO81424 Athens I AVYI in Greek 8 May 80 p 6

[Editorial: "A Message-Provocation"]

[Text] President Carter's congratulatory message to Karamanlis on his election as president of the Republic of Greece is an unprecedented intervention in our domestic affairs. It is an attempt to impose the American will on the development of our domestic affairs and the country's foreign policy.

In his message the U.S. President "laid down the line" for Greece's return to NATO in the name of strengthening the Western world. Fundamentally he addressed himself not only to Karamanlis but more generally to the rightwing forces in Greece by indicating the solution which the United States wants at this very moment of our changing domestic situation in order to overcome various forms of resistance to U.S. policy. He spoke of the "provocations" which the Western world will have to face during the 1980's in order to conclude by stressing the need for joint action against them through "participation in the Atlantic Alliance" which is "an active contribution to the strength of the West."

The government announced this message from the U.S. President after first editing it in such a way as to eradicate all points which give this message the character of a U.S.-NATO dictate. We fail to understand the reasons for such deletions.

If the government disagrees with the contents of the message then the tactics of deletion is a harmful ostrich-like policy. In such an eventuality the government ought to both announce the text of Carter's message as well as to take a clear position on his dictates. In actual fact, however, the deletion of the most basic portions from the Carter message assumes the form of an attempt to cover up an unacceptable American intervention. This is why such an act creates heavy responsibilities.

The problem created by the Carter message leaves no room for efforts to avoid the issue. Apart from everything else, the U.S. President also wanted to exert pressure upon developments within "New Democracy" and upon the processes for the formation of the new government, turning them toward a more pro-NATO and pro-American direction. In this light this is a new act which demands an immediate and clear condemnation both on the part of the government as well as from the entire political world of the country.

In reference to "New Democracy's" staff officers and other personalities, they must all reach the understanding that times have changed. American interventions no longer provide political benefits--neither short- nor long-term benefits--to those who accept such interventions. On the contrary, they only tend to amplify the popular reaction against those who praise themselves for their pro-U.S. and pro-NATO feelings, thus thinking that they gain a certain "political capital" through such actions. Those therefore who will meet today to elect the new leader of "New Democracy" ought to take this true state of affairs into consideration. If they do not wish to come to a complete rift with the feelings of the people, even with the feelings of the conservative masses, then they have a duty at this change in direction in our political life to supply a clear answer to the new U.S. provocation. This is an answer which, in any case, the Greek people will find some way to enforce.

NEW DEMOCRACY ELECTS RALLIS PARTY CHAIRMAN

ATO81335 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 8 May 80

[Excerpt] Yeoryios Rallis was elected chairman of "New Democracy" during today's meeting of the party's parliamentary group. Rallis and Evangelos Averof were the only two candidates. Rallis received 88 [1000 GMT broadcast reports 87 votes for Rallis] and Averof received 84 votes. There were three blank ballots. The meeting of the "New Democracy" parliamentary group commenced at 1115 [0815 GMT] in the Senate room under the chairmanship of Deputy Prime Minister Papakonstandinou who entered the room accompanied by Rallis and Averof. At the outset Papakonstandinou read a letter from Konstandinos Karamanlis addressed to the parliamentary group. He then spoke on the purpose and importance of the election and on the necessity to follow the processes stipulated by the party's constitutional charter. After the announcement of the results Rallis and Averof addressed the deputies. Papakonstandinou, in his capacity as parliamentary representative of "New Democracy" informed Papaspirou, the chairman of the chamber of deputies, of the election of Rallis. In a document addressed to the chairman of the chamber, Papakonstandinou stated that the parliamentary group of "New Democracy," in accordance with the provisions of article 37 of the Constitution and its regulations, elected deputy from the Athens first election district Yeoryios Rallis as chairman of the party at today's meeting.

DEMIREL COMMENTS ON U.S.-IRANIAN TENSION, CLOSER RELATIONS

NC090803 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 5 May 80 p 1, 10

[Text] Ankara--Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has stated that the nuclear power possessed by the United States and the Soviet Union is a great deterrent to the danger of a third world war. He has further stated that the superpowers are refraining from starting a war because of their horrifying nuclear strength. However, he said, the thought that "in any case, no war can break out," has been leading to "certain interventions and occupations."

Meanwhile, the prime minister said that the Council of Ministers has drawn attention to the fact that the "military operation" undertaken by the United States to rescue the hostages is likely to cause the current tension in the Middle East and the world to assume more startling proportions.

In a statement to our paper, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has expressed anxiety over developments in the "world and in the Middle East" and added that the murder of the U.S. hostages in the hands of the Iranian students could lead to more extreme developments both in the region and in the world. Prime Minister Demirel "has urged the United States and Iran to refrain from acts that would cause irreparable damage and to remain within the limits of commonsense." He added: "The hostages should not be killed. This would run counter to the principles of Islam and humanity."

Noting that it is difficult to say where the Iranian-U.S. tension will lead and adding that Turkey will do everything possible to bring about a rapprochement, Prime Minister Demirel said: "We have adopted a definite stand on the matter."

Prime Minister Demirel concluded: "Holding diplomats hostage is contrary to international law and to the principle that "the ambassador is sacrosanct." Nevertheless, we believe that this crisis, which has been going on for the past 6 months, will be resolved through peaceful methods. We are going to establish closer relations with both Iran--with which we have very strong friendly and moral ties--and with the United States--to which we are linked with ties of friendship and alliance--so as to secure the settlement of their dispute through peaceful means."

PCP DELEGATION HOLDS TALKS WITH PCB 18-20 APR

LD090955 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 1 May 80 p 3

[Apparent text of "press release on the visit to Belgium"]

[Text] A Portuguese Communist Party (PCP) delegation, comprised of Comrades Alvaro Cunhal, party secretary general; Domingos Abrantes, member of the Political Commission and Secretariat; and Albano Nunes, member of the Central Committee, visited Belgium from 18-20 April 1980 at the invitation of the Communist Party of Belgium (PCB).

Talks were held between the PCP delegation and a PCB delegation, comprised of Comrades Louis van Geyt, party chairman; Jef Turf, party vice chairman; Albert de Conink, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat; Jan Debrouwere and Augustin Duchateau, members of the Political Bureau; Suza Nudelhole and Paul van Praag, members of the Central Committee; and Joan Turk [as received], member of the international section.

The talks, which took place in a frank and warm atmosphere, touched on the political sit situation in Portugal and Belgium and the activities of the two parties and on various aspects of the international situation.

The PCP delegation talked about the struggle of the Portuguese Communists and people against the policy of the present reactionary government, in defense of working people's rights and freedoms, agrarian reform, nationalization measures and the democratic regime enshrined in the Constitution of the Portuguese Republic.

The PCB delegation talked about the struggle of the Communists and other Belgian democratic forces against rightwing attempts to make the working people pay for the consequences of the crisis, the struggle for democratic transformation of the state, and the struggle to have Belgium make a positive contribution to detente policy.

Comrade Alvaro Cunhal addressed a meeting with Portuguese emigrant workers.

The two delegations decided to strengthen ties of cooperation, friendship and mutual solidarity that exist between the two parties.

MARTENS: COALITION CHANCES 'INCREASING ALL THE TIME'

LD121023 Brussels LE SOIR in French 6 May 80 pp 1-2

[J.V.S. report: "Mr Martens More and More Optimistic After a Final (?) All-Night Marathon"]

[Excerpts] In his race for agreement, Wilfried Martens has just begun the final "sprint." The question is: Can he keep up the pace right to the end without stumbling before the finish line?

The cluster of presidents, headed by Martens, has now completed the first stage which could be called the race for funds, since it has been a question of finding billions to fuel the exchequer. In the wee hours on Sunday, the negotiators announced that they had reached an agreement on the economic and social program. Of course it must be borne in mind that no definitive agreement exists until there is agreement on the entire content of a future government statement.

Then, after reassembling on Sunday afternoon, the recluses of Rue Lambermont broke off their work on Monday morning shortly after 0100 to get a few hours' sleep. And it was a tired but happy Wilfried Martens who announced to the half-dozen or so journalists present that the first of the three reserved issues of the community program had been resolved. The representatives of the Christian, socialist and liberal groups have agreed on the principle of direct election of councils and on the broad guidelines for the Senate reform. It was after 1430 on Monday, during a final meeting, that they were to settle the other two problems: the statute on regional and community executives, and the mode of finance for the new institutions.

During his evening press conference Martens also touched on the problem of the guarantees demanded by the Socialist Party. Contrary to Socialist Party proposals, the bill concerning immediate and definitive regionalization for Flanders and Wallonia will not be appended to the future government statement. But it will contain a long special section detailing the institutional reform which is envisaged and specifying the time limits which the future majority intends to set itself.

Meanwhile, the negotiators still have to erase the divergences which divide them on two issues:

The mode of financing for the new institutions and its corollary, and the extent of powers to be withdrawn from the central authority: There are a number of intermediate solutions between the present system of appropriations and recourse to their own taxation system for communities and regions;

The law on regional and community executives: Some think that these executives should be kept within the central government until the next legislative elections; others think that the executives should become autonomous as from 1 January 1981.

The Rue Lambermont negotiators are still not at the end of their labors, but Martens was doubtless not wrong in commenting that "the chances of seeing the projected tripartite government come into being are increasing all the time."

FOREIGN MINISTER OPPOSED TO SEVERANCE OF IRAN TIES

LD120805 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSLAD in Dutch 7 May 80 p 3

[Diplomatic correspondent's report: "Breaking Ties With Iran 'Unwise'"]

[Text] The Hague, 7 May--The solidarity which the second chamber has expressed with the United States on the Iran question cannot be regarded as carte blanche for the United States. Foreign Minister van der Klaauw said this yesterday in the second chamber. He said that he thinks breaking off diplomatic relations with Iran is unwise.

Van der Klaauw agreed with the chamber that intensive consultations with Washington are "of great importance." According to Van der Klaauw, the forthcoming meeting of NATO foreign ministers is the appropriate forum for this. Van der Klaauw said yesterday that he expects no progress in the Iran situation as a result of the EC foreign ministers' meeting in Naples on 17 May at which further measures against Iran will be discussed.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE PRESIDIUM RECOMMENDS MOSCOW BOYCOTT

LD091952 Hamburg DPA in German 1933 GMT 9 May 80

[Text] Frankfurt--The Presidium of the National Olympic Committee (NOC) for Germany, at a members' meeting in Frankfurt on Friday, recommended that the Olympic games in Moscow be boycotted. The decision was taken by 12 votes to 7, with 1 abstention.

The recommendation to the members' meeting, adopted after a 5-hour session, specifies "under present circumstances, not to send an Olympic team to Moscow." The NOC members' meeting has to decide on an Olympic boycott at a public meeting in Duesseldorf on 15 May.

Among the 20 Presidium members was agreement on the assessment of Soviet aggression in Afghanistan, which was unanimously condemned.

Prior to the Presidium meeting, NOC President Willi Daume had said that a recommendation--whichever way it went--would not prejudice the vote at the NOC members' meeting.

The Presidium, with its recommendation to the NOC members' meeting, followed the request by the Federal Government and the lower house, due to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, not to attend the summer games. The Presidium of the German Sports League also had made such a recommendation to the NOC.

Federal Interior Minister Gerhart Baum, before the Frankfurt session, pointed out in a letter to the Presidium members that the Federal Government's attitude in favor of a boycott had remained unchanged. Federal President Karl Carstens intends to hold discussions with NOC members before the decisive general assembly in Duesseldorf on 15 May. The boycott recommendation by the NOC Presidium was noted with satisfaction in Bonn.

At the NOC members' meeting, 100 votes are going to be cast, 69 of them belong to the 23 associations tied to Olympic disciplines.

SCHMIDT NOTES ACCORD IN TALKS WITH GIEREK, HONECKER

LD091949 Hamburg DPA in German 1914 GMT 9 May 80

[Excerpts] Cologne--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and the chairman of the GDR Council of State, Erich Honecker, promised each other in Belgrade "to continue the good cooperation." This was stated by Schmidt during the final rally staged by the SPD tonight in connection with the diet elections in North Rhine-Westphalia before an audience of about 5,000 in the Cologne sports station.

With all his interlocutors in Belgrade, Schmidt said, he had noted concern about a deterioration of the international situation. Concerning his talks in Belgrade, Schmidt also said: "I found it rather moving to hear, for instance, from Gierek and from Honecker, my very own concerns." Regarding the crisis situation, all three politicians had said: "We do not want to get involved if it can be avoided."

The chancellor underlined the significance of his planned Moscow trip: "If people stop talking to each other, then one has to take the initiative to ensure that talks continue." Every word uttered in Moscow would first of all be discussed with friends and allies.

BOELLING COMMENTS ON SCHMIDT-HONECKER MEETING, MOSCOW VISIT

ID091334 Hamburg DPA in German 1248 GMT 9 May 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--Bonn and East Berlin still consider a visit by Chancellor Schmidt to the GDR as being useful. This was stressed by Government Spokesman Boelling at a press conference in Bonn today after the chancellor's return from Belgrade where he had met SED General Secretary Honecker for a talk on the sidelines of President Tito's funeral. Boelling stressed once again that, in the view of both sides, the Belgrade talk could not be a substitute for the chancellor's proposed visit to the GDR.

Notes 'Worthwhile Dialogues'

ID100908 Hamburg DPA in German 0850 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and SED General Secretary Erich Honecker do not intend to "delay their meeting too long," possibly even getting together in the GDR this year, Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling has said. In an interview with BERLINER MORGENPOST (Sunday edition), Boelling said this had become plain during the "most intensive and worthwhile dialogue" in Belgrade.

Concerning the chanellor's planned trip to Moscow, Boelling said that in Belgrade the chancellor "had received confirmation from many interlocutors that a trip to Moscow could be an important contribution toward safeguarding peace." All heads of government thought it vital for the great powers to return to a direct dialogue and for the government heads of the small- and medium-sized states to help to actively limit existing conflicts, to find solutions to conflicts, and to counter new and dangerous developments.

Boelling also expressed the conviction that the meetings between the federal chancellor and other statesmen in Belgrade, in view of the general agreement on a risk to world peace, could provide "positive initiatives also for the release of the hostages" and thus also for the relationship between Iran and the countries of the Western community.

The interview was prereleased by the Federal Press Office.

GENSCHER ON SCHMIDT VISITS, HONECKER MEETING

ID091256 Hamburg DPA in German 1215 GMT 9 May 80

[Text] Bielefeld--According to Federal Foreign Minister Genscher the main purpose of the proposed visit to Moscow by Chancellor Schmidt and himself is to remove the USSR's illusion of being able to detach the Federal Republic from the Western alliance.

During a visit to the offices of NEUE WESTFAELISCHE ZEITUNG in Bielefeld today, Genscher said that the meeting between Chancellor Schmidt and GDR State Council Chairman Honecker in Belgrade ytesterday was intended to show that international disturbances do not spark a reaction between the Germans. To this extent, the meeting, which will be followed by a visit by Schmidt to East Berlin, was very useful.

In his talk with journalists in Bielefeld, the foreign minister, who had returned from Belgrade last night, called in particular for the strengthening of the nonaligned countries of the Third World. Indian Prime Minister Indira Ghandi, with whom he talked in Belgrade, could play an important role in this respect and in helping to solve the Afghan crisis.

According to Boelling the Yugoslav foreign minister will come to Bonn for talks with Federal Foreign Minister Genscher in July.

The talk between Schmidt and Ohira, which for the most part took place in private, was later attended by Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer, who subsequently conferred with Ohira in private. Earlier the Japanese prime minister had met Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff. The two sides expressed their satisfaction with the trust and traditional friendship which characterized the cooperation between Bonn and Tokyo and which was again expressed during the Bonn talks.

LD100944 Hamburg DPA in German 0913 GMT 10 May 80

The Japanese prime minister and the federal foreign minister emphasized the "excellent state" of relations between the two countries and the Southeast Asian group of states, ASEAN.

LIBYAN KILLS OTHER LIBYAN; POLITICAL MOTIVES SUSPECTED

WA101842 London REUTER in English 1840 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] Bonn, May 10, REUTER--A young Libyan shot another Libyan to death in central Bonn today and was later seized by passers-by who handed him over to the police, a police statement said. The midday shooting occurred within hours of the killing of a Libyan businessman in Rome, which prompted speculation there that it and other recent murders of Libyans might be politically motivated.

TWO SHIPS EN ROUTE TO INDIAN OCEAN COLLIDE

LD091207 Hamburg DPA in German 0852 GMT 9 May 80

[Summary] Bonn--Two ships of the German naval formation proceeding to the Indian Ocean collided last night in the Mediterranean about 140 kilometers off Toulon. The Defense Ministry in Bonn said that the destroyer Bayern collided with one of the supply vessels, the tanker Spessart. No members of the Bundeswehr were injured. The cause of the collision is not yet known. The four ships of the formation will call at Toulon later today where the damage which has been caused to the forecastles of the two units will be examined. It is not yet clear whether the formation may have to discontinue its voyage to the Indian Ocean.

The collision resulted in an 18-square meterhholed in the forecastle of the tanker above the waterline. The bow of the destroyer was also damaged above the waterline. Nobody was injured and both vessels remained seaworthy.

According to the naval office in Bonn, the formation will continue its voyage. Should one or both of the damaged ships become unseaworthy, the Federal Navy will replace them with other units.

Strauss Held Responsible

[Commentary signed Fk.: "Vote Against Strauss"]

[Text] One single time, in 1966, the Social Democrats emerged as the strongest party from the North Rhine-Westphalian Landtag elections. The fact that they have managed it again, and that they led by such a considerable margin, characterizes the downhill path the Christian Democrats have been on for quite some time. On the average, over the past 10 landtag elections since 1976 they have lost 2.3 percent. The tendency in the current year is increasing, namely, 3.3 percent in Baden-Wuerttemberg and 5 percent in the Saarland. It cannot be kept secret any longer that with Strauss as the leading man no improvement has been made; it has created a permanent downward slide. The Union has gained no advantage from events in North Rhine-Westphalia--neither the colorless new government team of Rau and Funke, the earlier failure of the Duesseldorf government personnel, nor the reverent feelings caused by the death of Heinrich Koeppler.

It was particularly painful for the Union that the SPD was well advised to leave land issues aside in the election campaign and to bet everything on the Helmut Schmidt card and the "vote against Strauss." Biedenkopf probably even increased the SPD triumph, though unintentionally, by spreading too many optimistic prognoses, thus causing undecided FDP and Green voters to vote for the SPD. Otherwise, the FDP would probably have stood its ground better. Its losses are twice as high as the average of the last 10 landtag elections; This is also a bad sign.

North Rhine-Westphalia with its 12 million voters has always been considered a test for federal elections. The same is true this time: The autumnal chances for Schmidt/Genscher are good, for Strauss bad. There will be talk in the fall about the most active Greens, but certainly no longer about Fredersdorf. The world political crises have helped the established power and hurt the opposition. Land political issues lose their effectiveness in such a tense international situation; naturally Biedenkopf knew that. He acted differently anyway for one reason: in order to be involved as little as possible in the Schmidt-Strauss dispute. But it has caught up with him.

FRENCH-AFRICAN SUMMIT CONTINUES IN NICE

LD091232 Paris Domestic Service in French 1000 GMT 9 May 80

[Excerpt] The French-African conference opened in Nice a short time ago. This summit is attended by 26 countries. Fourteen heads of state are present and President Valery Giscard d'Estaing is scheduled to speak.

Giscard Interview

LD091028 Paris Domestic Service in French 0615 GMT 9 May 80

[Interview granted by French President Giscard d'Estaing to Paris Radio's Edouard Sablier and (Francois de Sainte-Marie) of Paris Radio's international service; date, place not given]

[Excerpts] [Sablier] Mr President, the French-African summit at Nice is opening in a rather dramatic international context. Do you not think that the deterioration of events in the Middle East or in Asia can have repercussions on Africa?

[Giscard] This summit is meeting in Nice--in other words in France. As you know, on alternating years it is held in Africa--the last was in Kigali in Rwanda--and in France. With the agreement of the heads of state concerned we have decided to hold it in Nice this year and not in Paris in order to practise a certain decentralization of this French-African summit. The international situation, as you have said, is in fact full of tensions and threats. These tensions and threats at the present time manifest themselves mainly in other continents, and the events which take place there affect the international situation as a whole; they do not directly affect the situation in Africa. On the occasion of our talks we shall of course deal with every aspect of the international situation, but the subject of our conference is to concentrate our attention on the problems of Africa's development, on the problems of relations between Africa and Europe, and on the content of cooperation between Africa and France. And so what you say is in a way the backdrop to events. The substance of the talks will cover other subjects.

[Sablier] Mr President, the destabilization which is being attempted by some in Africa has led you to intervene several times at different points in order to allow the governments to resist and remain in place. Do you think that we shall have further occasions for intervention of this kind... [Giscard interrupts]

[Giscard] I hope, of course, that we do not. The expression intervention is the wrong term which, by the way, is used often by those who are the opponents of such a situation and who are sometimes at the origin of it. In fact, France has responded to requests for aid, because it has never acted in Africa unless explicitly requested to do so by legitimate governments. You cannot find an example to the contrary. And when legitimate governments have found that the circumstances have changed and this request for aid is no longer necessary, France has taken account of this situation every time and put an end to its action at the place concerned. This is the case, as you know, in this or that African state at the present time. On the contrary, I believe that African governments know that France has been at their disposal to respond to requests of aid, but I shall tell you that France's action in responding is not and must not be an action of intervention. The regular process of development makes these destabilization situations less and less frequent in the African states.

[(De Sainte-Marie)] Mr President, observers know that your proposal for trilateral talks, a trilogue between Europe, the Arab world and Africa, will be the central point of the talks here in Nice.

So can you give us some details on the nature of this trilogue: for example, will it be primarily economic or cultural?

[Giscard] Will it be central? I do not think so. It will be one of the subjects dealt with. We have other topical subjects, concerning development and, as you know, the resumption beginning in the summer of the deliberations on the world economic system within the framework of the United Nations. And naturally we shall certainly discuss this problem. I believe, as you say, that we shall have to talk about the idea of a trilogue, and I would like to remind you what it is: It is an invitation to all states of Europe, the Arab states, and the African states to exchange ideas concerning their relations in all their aspects. Some people say that this is a utopian vision, others voice this or that objection.

I remember that when I was launching the idea of the North-South dialogue--I launched it at a press conference in the Elysee--this idea met with the same criticism, and I could read again the editorials devoted to it. Some time later, 5 years later, the idea of the North-South dialogue has become fully accepted and at present astonishment is even expressed that the dialogue does not resume under a more active form. Every new idea has difficulty in forcing a way for itself, and then it becomes a natural idea, an accepted one, and everybody, by the way, is at that moment trying to appropriate it. The same thing will happen with the trilogue.

You feel certain, as I do, that the African states, that nearly all Arab states, that most European countries--at any rate all of the European Economic Community--do not want their destiny to be determined by the relations between the superpowers, and they want to be able to discuss among themselves subjects which concern them directly. These three units, moreover, are neighboring units which are historically and geographically contiguous and economically complementary, and so it is natural that they should meet and should talk. Talk on what subject? Well, I believe on all subjects: cultural subjects, economic subjects, and political subjects, political ones that concern them, namely their situation in relation to the rest of the world, and the manner in which they wish to influence the evolution of their relations toward the rest of the world.

[(De Sainte-Marie)] During your journey to the Gulf emirates we learned about your intention to call together, no doubt during 1980, an impressive summit, a summit of 80 heads of state or government. In your opinion, what ought to be the objectives of such a meeting?

[Giscard] I believe I did not say anything of the sort. I well remember the statements I made and I never spoke about a meeting of this kind. Where does the figure you quote come from? It comes no doubt from an elementary arithmetical operation, addition. Somebody must have added up the number of the European states concerned, adding the number of the African states, plus the member states of the Arab League to arrive at the figure you quote.

What I believe to be realistic is to proceed in the following manner: At the present time, as you know, one of my close collaborators Monsieur Jean-Baptiste, has made a first tour of contacts in certain African countries, in certain European countries, and in certain Arab countries in order to gauge all their reactions and attitudes. I believe that then it will be necessary to convene a more technical conference which will have the task of preparing the political, economic and cultural conditions of what this trilogue ought to be. And if these efforts show a possibility of drawing up a joint document, a sort of agreement or pact of complementarity between these various units, then this could justify, as a followup, a high-level meeting, eventually at the head of state level.

[De Sainte-Marie] But there has been talk about a charter of solidarity: Could it lead as far as a pact of mutual security?

[Giscard] I do not think so. I believe that one must not introduce into an arrangement of this kind considerations of security or alliance. Most countries, by the way, belong to some unit--be it political or defensive--and I believe that we would meet with the utmost difficulty if we were to try to open a debate on reciprocal commitments of solidarity or defense. I therefore believe I have mentioned political questions; I have said that this is the attitude to adopt as far as relations with the other zones of the world are concerned--I do not think that questions of defense ought to be included.

[Sablier] Mr President, to return to Africa and its economy: France has been the first power to show real interest in the establishment of stable prices for Africa's raw materials. This is a vital question for Africa. What measures do you intend to advocate to arrive at a stabilization of this kind?

[Giscard] Mr Sablier, you ask questions which really concern the results of the conference, which has not opened yet. You will allow me to leave these items to be discussed by my discussion partners, the heads of state and government. What is true is that this question is at the heart of Africa's concerns. On could see recently in connection with the cocoa situation, there has been a difficult debate on the one hand, then deep disappointment expressed by a certain number of heads of state at the breaking-off and the nonrenewal of the cocoa agreement. Inversely, the arrangements which have been anticipated on the occasion of the renewal of the Lome agreement--which are called the stabex dispositives, stabilization of export prices of certain raw materials--appear to have a positive content. So I presume that we shall talk about this subject, which is at the center of many international debates at present; I hope that we can make a positive contribution.

[De Sainte-Marie] The oil price rises, it is well known, have hit the African importing countries hard. Do you think that thought will be given in Nice to the means to alleviate this world energy crisis?

[Giscard] Not directly because France is not an oil-producing country and most of our discussion partners themselves are oil-importing countries. So in this respect we do not have to discuss matters directly among ourselves. I think that it will be by the interjection of the consequences of this situation on the international economic level that the discussion will proceed, because the increase in oil prices is one of the causes--it is, besides, not the only one--of the situation of disequilibrium and inflation which we find in the world right now. We shall thus take this situation and we shall take it as it is and not necessarily with reference to its causes.

[De Sainte-Marie] Mr President, to put a question of a more general nature to you: If one could talk about a Giscard d'Estaing doctrine for Africa, what would this be?

[Giscard] It would be the following: I would like to express it, if you allow me, in two words--noninterference and solidarity. You will tell me that this is difficult to understand; what does this mean? All you have to do is to think of the two words which have the opposite meaning--interference and lack of solidarity. You see very well that at present in many African states there has been interference, namely, a deliberate will to interfere in their affairs; at the same time there is no solidarity because the problems of their development, of their international relations, of the aid one could give them are only dealt with slightly, and sometimes not at all. Now, starting from the opposite, you see the positive aspect of our attitude. This is noninterference and solidarity.

Noninterference: This means that we never decide and we must never decide to interfere in the internal affairs of an African state. On the contrary, solidarity--we must first of all feel this solidarity and then be capable of responding to its appeal. This appeal may have had in the past this or that content. The content I consider essential is the contribution we can make to the development of an African society that ought to be at the same time more prosperous through development and more harmonious through the justice of relations and the distribution of resources in Africa, and therefore keep in mind, if I may ask you, this formula: noninterference and solidarity.

[Sablier] Thank you, Mr President.

Giscard Speech

LD091234 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 9 May 80

[Text] There is not exactly a morose atmosphere in Nice, but the various and serious economic difficulties faced by most African countries do not leave their leaders or heads of state with much optimism. Ralph Pinto is following the Nice meeting. Here is his report on the first round of talks this morning:

After 20 years of African independence, the Nice conference is reviewing the state of development of the black continent. This morning, as expected, the president of the republic opened the summit. In his speech he first listed the priority problems facing the Africans: energy problems, guaranteed resources, and self-sufficiency regarding food and international cooperation.

So far, no surprises. But when speaking about the rebirth of Africa, the president of France warned against the intentions of or the dangers faced by some who seek a model of development elsewhere which would then be transferred to Africa. The president used the phrase: Let us not try to impose this or that model of development, be it European or be it that of the East or the West. This was an additional way of making it understood that Africa ought not to become the client or the protege of any large unit.

Here again recurs the Giscardian concept of "Africa for the Africans" and that extends to Africa's search for identity and its own path.

Finally, the president, in his role of worker for Africa's happiness, recalled the duty toward cooperation. The phrase at the end of the speech will be remembered: France is concerned about, and France has the duty to cooperate with the Africans. France will be the advocate of this cooperation in dealing with the Europeans and other industrialized states.

LD101322 Rabat MAP in English 1233 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] Nice, May 10 (MAP)--The Moroccan state minister of foreign affairs and cooperation, Mr M'hamed Boucetta, who is attending here the seventh Franco-African summit as an observer, had many contacts with African heads of state and heads of African delegations. Thus, he was received by Mr Mobutu Sese Seko, president of Zaire, to whom he handed a message from King Hassan II of Morocco. Following this meeting, Mr Boucetta stated to the Moroccan news agency MAP that his talks with President Sese Seko dealt with bilateral relations and the situation in the north west African region. Mr Boucetta added that President Sese Seko reiterated his country's "total support" to Morocco in its struggle to safeguard its territorial integrity.

Giscard on Chad

LD110820 Paris Domestic Service in French 0600 GMT 11 May 80

[Text] French aid to Africa is to continue. This is what President Giscard d'Estaing said at the close of the Nice summit. There was much talk in Nice on organizing a "trilogue" between Africa, Europe and the Arab countries, and the creation of a kind of French-style commonwealth.

As far as Chad is concerned, in the throes of civil war for the past 2 months, Giscard d'Estaing said that France does not intend to take any new action for peace for the moment, for the simple reason that the OAU has taken matters in hand. This was confirmed by Leopold Senghor, who spoke on behalf of the OAU.

French-African Cooperation Plans

LD101753 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 10 May 80

[Summary] The seventh Franco-African conference has ended in Nice. The eighth will be held in Kinshasa in June, 1981. At a press conference after the closing session this morning, President Giscard d'Estaing spoke about the strengthening of cooperation between France and Africa. [begin Giscard recording] "France will continue its effort of cooperation. Whatever the economic or budgetary difficulties of the moment, France will maintain and continue in 1981 its effort of cooperation. The second line is that of an active participation of the attending countries in global negotiations which are due to start by the summer under UN auspices. They will be one of the forms of the continuation of the North-South dialogue. The third important conclusion whose significance goes beyond the confines of our conference is a clear and active support for the project of trilateral talks between the African countries, the Arab countries and the European countries. The fourth conclusion is the setting up of a structure adapted for the French-speaking countries which will be flexible but which at the same time will have a sufficient degree of organization to enable it to be the framework of ministerial meetings and, after preparatory work by the ministers of foreign affairs, the framework of a possible summit meeting." [end recording]

Summit Ends

LD101334 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] Mr Giscard d'Estaing closed the work of the Franco-African summit today with a press confefence during which he emphasized the fact that the summit enabled a thorough, friendly and trusting dialogue to be held. Mr Giscard d'Estaing added that the forthcoming summit will take place in the Zaire capital, Kinshasa, in 1981 in the spring. As for President Senghor of Senegal, he announced that the foreign affairs ministers of the French-speaking countries will meet in Dakar in November to start setting up a commonwealth in the French style.

LE MONDE ASSAILS GISCARD, CARTER ABSENCES FROM BELGRADE

LD120949 Paris LE MONDE in French 8 May 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Tito Recovered?"]

[Excerpts] Any dignitary, however insigificant, is entitled once dead to praise which he could not win during his lifetime. You feel like asking: Who is not a Titoist now? The example of De Gaulle precludes surprise, it is true; his death won over the hearts a and minds of that half of the population which he could not convince while alive....

The huge representation of the communist world emphasizes certain absences: that of Fidel Castro (which can be explained, however, by the tension in Cuba and the U.S. military maneuvers which are to begin in the Caribbean on 8 May) and those of President Carter and Mr Giscard d'Estaing. [paragraph continues]

By sending only Vice President Mondale and Mr Barre to Belgrade the two presidents are showing a certain lack of understanding of the situation: Going to Tito's funeral does not mean in any way standing surety for a socialist experience which was original, after all, but quite simply approving--if only by switching a few appointments--the desire for national independence which Tito demonstrated during and after World War II. It is highly regrettable that this has not been understood in Washington and Paris less than 5 months after the occupation of Afghanistan. Actions, however, are more important than words. This is undoubtedly why the Yugoslav leaders are becoming are becoming somewhat angry at Mr Carter's declarations as to his intent "to support energetically Yugoslavia's independence, territorial integrity and unity." Is this not, above all, the task of the Yugoslavs?

Tito's legacy will undoubtedly be very difficult to assume. The new leaders in Belgrade do not need the West's blustering to achieve this. They must first rely on their will, their conviction and their strength. But they are also entitled to rely on the firm resolve of the West European countries to tolerate no disruption in this country of the Continent whose fate concerns us all. In France's case this resolve should have taken the form of a trip by the president of the republic. Equally, it goes without saying that it would be worthless unless accompanied by an ever greater desire for economic cooperation.

DEFENSE MINISTER ON GULF TOUR TO DISCUSS DEFENSE CONTRACTS

LD101931 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] Yvon Bourges, our minister of defense, has just started a tour of three Persian Gulf countries: Saudi Arabia, Qatar and Bahrain. There he will undoubtedly conclude a number of contracts which were outlined during the recent visit by the president of the republic. Our permanent correspondent in Beirut, (Alain de Chalvren) gives some details. [Begin (Chalvren) recording] The main contract which Yvon Bourges is coming to negotiate is in fact astounding even to specialists. It is nothing less than a complete system of coastal defense, an integrated system. In other words it includes naval facilities, coastguard vessels, launches, freight facilities, reconnaissance aircraft and helicopters, and electronics devices, radar and missiles. Saudi Arabia has a 2,500km coastline on the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf. This explains the amount the contract is worth: several billion dollars, it is said. France, of course, is not the only bidder. But Saudi Defense Minister Prince Sultan Ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz let it be known recently that France is not badly placed.

PCI OFFICIALS MEET WITH GUATEMALAN FRONT DELEGATION

[Unattributed report: "PCI Solidarity With Guatemalan Freedom Struggle"]

[Text] Rome--A visit has been paid to the PCI Central Committee headquarters by a Guatemalan democratic antirepression front delegation composed of Elizabeth Alvarez Herrera, the front's international work chief; Guillermo Colom Argueta, leader of the "United Revolutionary Front" Party; Carlo Gallardo Flores, secretary of the Democratic Socialist Party and deputy of the Guatemalan Congress; Miguel Angel Albizurez, leader of the National Committee for Trade Union Unity; and Jose (Us), leader of the Peasant Unity Committee.

The delegation, which was accompanied by Nora Santos, the front's representative in Europe, and Anna Borghini (who recently returned to Italy following the death of her husband Manuel Colom Argueta, mayor of Guatemala City, who was assassinated by members of a government death squad) was received by the following comrades: PCI foreign policy department chief and Directorate member Gian Carlo Pajetta, Rodolfo Mechini, foreign section deputy chief, foreign section aide Renato Sandri and department secretary Claudio Ligas.

The delegation provided an exposition of the country's situation, which is characterized by the repression which the troops of General Lucas Garcia's corrupt government and those of paramilitary squads at the service of U.S. oligarchy and companies--after over 20 years' uninterrupted terror--have been intensifying in recent months, massacring workers, students and teachers, members and leaders of political groups represented in the Congress, as well as of the leftwing parties, which have been driven underground since 1954. Kidnappings and assassinations now do not spare members of the lower clergy, priests or even nuns, especially in the countryside, where they are aligning with the exploited.

The repressive campaign is part of the counteroffensive which the reactionary forces on the Central American isthmus (especially in El Salvador and Guatemala) have been waging since last fall, making use of U.S. aid--including military aid--which has recently been resumed on a large scale with the aim of smashing the broad popular movement for democracy and independence which has been shaking the entire region since the victory of the national uprising in Nicaragua. The front delegation asked that, in every domestic and European forum, the PCI should take every initiative likely to accentuate international condemnation of the repression, and support for the Guatemalan people's forces, and primarily for the peasant masses, who are continuing their resistance with strikes, the occupation of big estates and even armed self-defense.

The PCI representatives, expressing the communists' fraternal solidarity with the Guatemalan people, assured the front delegation that the PCI will do its utmost, together with all the Italian antifascist forces, to ensure that a satisfactory answer is given to the demands for which the delegation has acted as spokesman during its visit to our country and other Latin American and European states.

DONAT-CATTIN'S SON NAMED IN TERRORIST CONNECTION

AU080835 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 8 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 8 (ANSA)--The deputy secretary of Italy's Christian Democrat Party, Carlo Donat-Cattin, sought to resign his post in the nation's ruling party yesterday after a press account linked his 28-year-old son with the Prima Linea (Front Line) terrorist organization. Donat-Cattin's resignation was declined by Party Secretary Flaminio Piccoli.

In the evening, magistrates in Turin and Rome denied that an arrest warrant had been signed for Marco Donat-Cattin but sources in the Rome judiciary confirmed (?the story) which appeared in the Wednesday edition of the Rome daily, PAESE SERA. According to this account, Patrizio Peci, the ex-head of the Red Brigades terrorist group in Turin, who has been cooperating with police since his capture in February, identified Marco Donat-Cattin as a person spoken of by others of his acquaintance. The PAESE story, played up on the front page, added that Peci reportedly "brought the young Donat-Cattin into the matter in an indirect fashion, as a person explicitly referred to him by others who added that they did not know him nor had they met him. The whereabouts of the son of the Christian Democrat official have been unknown for some time, the Rome paper said. Immediately after the edition hit the newsstands, but apparently before magistrates denied that Marco Donat-Cattin was sought by police, a Christian Democrat communique reported that Piccoli "has consulted with Carlo Donat-Cattin who told him of the possibility of charges being filed against his son, Marco, with whom he has had no contact for over two years, for acts of political subversion".

FREITAS DO AMARAL REMARKS ON OLYMPICS, DOMESTIC ISSUES

LD101552 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1300 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Freitas do Amaral has given an interview to the weekly, EXPRESSO, in which he has disclosed the Portuguese Government's decision to turn down the proposal by the organizing committee for an alternative summer Olympic games to hold soccer matches in Portuguese football stadiums.

Freitas do Amaral then then touched upon the nationality issue, stating in this connection that he is in favor of granting Portuguese nationality to those Africans born in our former colonies and who, for one reason or another, now wish to become Portuguese citizens.

In his interview the foreign minister also said that Portugal will not recognize Indonesia's sovereignty over Portugal [as heard; meaning, specifically, East Timor].

Speaking about an external event which had international repercussions, namely the death of Marshal Tito, Freitas do Amaral referred to Portugal's presence at his funeral, saying in this connection that our presence in Belgrade was agreed upon bearing in mind certain values embodied by the late Yugoslav president: values of the defense of national independence could have been--as indeed it was--so often antagonized.

Another issue touched upon by Freitas do Amaral in his interview to EXPRESS was the "Lourdes Pintasilgo affair" which, he said, has not yet been settled. The situation remains unchanged, with the government proposing her dismissal [as Portugal's ambassador to UNESCO] and President Eanes so far refusing to accept it. Within its own sphere of jurisdiction, the government holds the view that it is not appropriate to allow Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo to resume her post in UNESCO; that is why it has decided to retain her in Lisbon.

Freitas do Amaral added that the whole affair has been the subject of much speculation on the part of the opposition [words indistinct] adding that any government is entitled to replace noncareer ambassadors appointed by previous cabinets. He said noncareer ambassadors, are--using the phraseology of administrative law--simply "representatives enjoying the political confidence of the government of the day."

Falling under this category are also civil governors, directors general, ministerial staff and chairmen of public corporations among others. The political importance of their functions presupposes a relationship based on the government's confidence in them, a relationship which does not exist in the case of Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo, the foreign minister said.

The prime minister of the fifth constitutional government, Freitas do Amaral added, is--as everybody knows--a figure politically opposed to the present Cabinet in the same way as the political parties which now support the government were opposed to her Cabinet. He said it would be a serious matter if, in a democratic country like ours, the government decided to have her arrested or confined to a fixed residence in some specific part of the country just because it considered her an opposition figure. But nothing of this kind has happened and it is only natural that, since she does not enjoy the government's political confidence, she should not be allowed by the same government to resume her previous post.

Freitas do Amaral said that he had no idea when this matter is likely to be settled, adding that this will depend entirely on General Ramalho Eanes. If the president continues to refuse the government's proposal to dismiss her, then the matter will unfortunately drag on for another few months until the next elections allow the issue to be settled one way or another.

In this interview Freitas do Amaral also touched upon the Portuguese Government's refusal to grant entry visas to citizens from East European countries which, he said, was a retaliation against the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

He also voiced his hopes to secure, during the year, the establishment of diplomatic relations with Saudi Arabia which, he said, none of the previous governments have managed to achieve.

Freitas do Amaral finally denied that Portugal's move vis-a-vis Iran--isolated within the framework of Western nations--had been the result of any pressure or insistence on the part of the United States. He said the Portuguese Government's decision to break off trade relations with Iran was merely a reaction to the seizure of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and had nothing to do with the course of Iran's domestic policies. BERLINGUER, COSTA RICAN VICE PRESIDENT ARRIVE

LD101448 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 10 May 80

[Summary] Enrico Berlinguer arrived in Madrid this morning to participate in a meeting to commemorate the 60th anniversary of the Spanish Communist Party. On his party's problems, Berlinguer said:

"He then said that Eurocommunism is still an important alternative for the European left. At the same time, he criticized the Paris meeting of the pro-Soviet communist parties, saying that if it were a question of fighting for peace and disarmament then not only the communists but also the European socialists and social democrats should have been at this or another meeting." [end recording]

Costa Rican Vice President Rodrigo Althmann Ortiz has also arrived in Madrid to attend the official handing over of two planes for the domestic Costa Rican passenger service.

CARRILLO CITED ON DIFFERENCES WITH PCF, CPSU

LD091421 Rome L'ESPRESSO in Italian 4 May 80 pp 73-79

[Gianni Corbi interview in April with PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo: "I Like Brandt. Breshnev? He can Lump It."]

[Excerpt] Madrid--Question: Marchais has said that the PCF will fight with all its strength against Spain's and Portugal's entry into the Common Market because it would damage the French workers' sacrosanct interests. What is your answer to that?

Answer: First I would like to make one point to avoid any misunderstanding regarding our controversies with our French comrades. A polemic against Georges Marchais is at present being conducted in France for ulterior motives, and we absolutely reject this. Having said this, let us investigate the merits of the matter. It is well known that our viewpoint on the Common Market and European integration clearly differs from that of the French Communists. It is now absolutely indispensable to build a West European economic entity extending to Spain and Portugal. In view of an increasingly acute world crisis the European countries' economies can only survive and develop democratically through a high degree of integration.

Question: This also presupposes a process of political integration.

Answer: Of course. The French comrades maintain that West Europe's political integration is inopportune and unnecessary. I believe exactly the opposite since only thus can Europe perform its autonomous and authoritative world role. The current conflict between the USSR and the United States must not force us West Europeans to align with the Russians or the Americans. This is a Manichaean outlook which is fortunately obsolete. In view of the Afghan invasion and the consequent tensions we are realizing how important the role of an independent Europe can be.

Question: This means that you are also in favor of Europe's military integration?

Answer: Yes, I am. On condition, however, that Europe's military integration is not an end in itself but is aimed at facilitating detente, denuclearization and arms limitation.

Question: Do you not consider this somewhat contradictory? How do you intend to reconcile European armament with detente?

Answer: You would be right if, by becoming militarily integrated, Europe intended to compete with the Russians and Americans. But if military integration serves to increase the old continent's autonomy and political weight, then the contradiction which you mention would be remedied. If this were not the case we would inevitably become an inactive support for Washington or Moscow. And this is what we must avoid at all costs.

Question: A few days ago you said: A third international front must be created between the blocs, composed of all the forces wanting peace (communists, socialists, social democrats, liberals, Catholics and so forth). In Italy Berlinguer is talking about a third path; you are talking about a third front. What does this mean? What is your aim?

Answer: Simply this: The world is split into two blocs; we must create a Third World front which will act independently of these two alignments.

Question: That is too simple. In fact, you realize that this stance is considered sacrilegious by the Soviets. A couple of years ago NOVOYE VREMYA stated that "Carrillo's principal idea is West European unity based on an anti-Soviet platform...." It continued as follows: "There is no doubt that the interpretation of Eurocommunism proposed by Santiago Carrillo is consistent solely with the interests of imperialism, of the forces of aggression and reaction." You cannot be clearer than that. Do you not feel that by raising the idea of the third force you are in a sense returning to the scene of the crime?

Answer: I realize that our theses are different from, indeed, in antithesis to those of the Soviets. This means that I will be running the risk of some further denunciation, to which I have already been hardened for some time, in any case.

Whether or not the Soviets criticize us is not the issue. We must realize that at least in West Europe the workers and bourgeoisie are definitely in favor of creating a third force since they realize that they would have everything to lose in a head-on confrontation.

Question: Your party will not be attending the European communist parties' meeting in Paris at the end of this month. The reasons given for your refusal have been rather vague. Would you care to be more specific about your thoughts in this regard?

Answer: We do not regard it favorably, and we have said and written so. Verbally, we communists of both East and West Europe all want the same thing: detente, mutual cooperation, arms reduction and so forth. What divides us is the methods for putting these good intentions into practice. In Paris there will be some people who in practice will become indistinguishable from one of the two blocs, whereas there are some like the Italian Communists and ourselves who are striving to surmount this lamentable logic.

Question: You also said that a good relationship with the European socialists is now more desirable than ever. Meanwhile, Berlinguer met with Brandt and Mitterrand and will meet with Palme. And we are seeing great comings and goings of Italian Communists in the capitals of Western socialism. Is there agreement between you and Berlinguer on this question?

Answer: Berlinguer's meeting with Mitterrand (of which we were previously informed) was certainly an extremely useful initiative. Moreover, we are not inactive either. Azcarate recently met with Labor Party leaders in Lisbon for instance. However, my friend Berlinguer is more fortunate than I. He can use Strasbourg and the European Parliament for his meetings with Brandt and Mitterrand. We Spanish Communists do not have this opportunity. However, it is obvious that we will not waste any opportunity to improve our relations with our socialist comrades in Spain and elsewhere. I regarded the break in the Union of the Left in France a real tragedy.

Question: This brings us to another unfortunate aspect of your relations (and Berlinguer's relations) with Marchais and the CPSU: the special relationship which you obstinately maintain with the European social democrats.

Answer: I know: Marchais and the Soviets are reacting badly, very badly, on this point. What can I say? All I can say is that we will try to show that we have absolutely no intention of encouraging the birth of an anti-Soviet Europe. Quite the reverse. I also hope against hope that Moscow will eventually realize that it is not in its own interests to widen the gap between East and West.

Question: Do you think that these questions cause polemics and discussion in the Politburo?

Answer: I am not a member of the [CPSU] Politburo and hence I do not know that kind of polemics or considerations are arising in that body. I know for sure, and this grieves me, that our Soviet comrades regard as sacrilege the very idea of a third path, in other words, a path which moves away from the international communist movement's traditional course.

Question: Berlinguer has visited China and has had talks with Deng Xiaoping and Hua Guofeng which were extremely cordial--with a great deal of embracing and kissing. What about your relations with the Chinese? Was the PCE not perhaps the first Western communist party to resume contact with the Chinese?

Answer: That is true. It was in 1971 at the delicate time of Lin Biao's death. Having stayed in China for 10 days I felt that a process of reconciliation had begun despite the differences.

Question: On that occasion it was said that you were also representing the PCI.

Answer: That is also true. Before leaving I spoke with Berlinguer who asked me to inform the Chinese leaders of the PCI's views with a view to a much-desired resumption of relations between the two parties.

Question: Will you too visit China soon?

Answer: I visited China in 1971 (and it was a very important step at that time) and I do not see why I should not do so now. Moreover, we have excellent relations with our Chinese comrades. Azcarate visited China last fall and the Chinese leaders visited Spain in turn. Therefore, things are fine. Berlinguer's trip was a positive conclusion to a process of rapprochement initiated a long time ago.

Question: Let us return to the socialist problem. It is an essential aspect of the Eurocommunist strategy.

Answer: That is true. The division of the workers movement was a disaster. We may now be on the eve of World War III and I think the time has come, at least for Spain, to heal this old wound.

Question: Are you thinking of reunification with the Socialists?

Answer: Not of reunification, but of a federation of parties which believes in the same ideals of socialism.

Question: This is more or less that of a kind of popular front somewhat updated.

Answer: No. Although I think it is too early for the birth of a single party, I am convinced that we need to carry on a new dialogue with the Socialist Party if we want the workers to govern our country one day.

Question: A short time ago NOVOYE VREMYA (the Soviet magazine which seems to specialise in attacks on your party) criticized you for the stance you took on Afghanistan and recalled the fraternal aid which the CPSU gave your party during and after the Spanish revolution.

Answer: That is true. During the civil war the only state which supported us was the USSR. However, that should certainly not force us to remain unconditional supporters of the USSR forever. NOVOYE VREMYA's argument is very strange. According to the same criterion I could recall the thousands of Spanish Communists who died in Russia defending the Soviet Union during the war. I could also remind Marchais that thousands of Spanish militants died in the resistance defending the French people's freedom. Such arguments are futile.

THATCHER LAUNCHES 'STINGING ATTACK' ON USSR

LD091950 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1930 GMT 9 May 80

[Text] Mrs. Thatcher tonight launched another stinging attack on the Soviet Union over its invasion of Afghanistan.

She said that in Afghanistan--and in Iran--there were "limits which cannot be overstepped with impunity."

The prime minister told a rally at the Scottish Conservative conference at Perth: "The effort to establish those limits more clearly and to ensure that they are observed will be a prime element in Western policy in the years immediately ahead."

She said Britain must continue to demonstrate to Russia that it had earned the contempt and anger of the world by its invasion of Afghanistan.

She said the Soviet Union was seeking to subjugate an independent people by brute force.

"The massacre of schoolchildren demonstrating against the occupation of their country is but the latest in a catalogue of barbarities," she said.

The West must show that there was "an unwavering international determination to right the wrong they have committed."

She said: "We cannot expel the Soviet troops but we can boycott the Olympics and we can refuse to provide the Soviet Government with cheap credit, cheap food and cheap technology."

Mrs. Thatcher reminded her audience that she had been criticized as an "iron lady" with weird obsessions about the dangers of aggression by dear benevolent Mr Brezhnev. "A dangerous lady who was going to wreck the wonders of detente."

She said: "We don't seem to hear quite so much of that sort of talk today. Perhaps we've seen rather a lot of the benevolence of Mr Brezhnev--towards his neighbors.

"The Afghanistan experience has shown us all what the 'hug of the bear' is liable to mean."

After arriving in Perth to a standing ovation lasting several minutes, Mrs. Thatcher followed up her attack on the Soviet Union by saying that the independence of Iran also has to be preserved.

She said the West had no desire to interfere in Iran's internal affairs. "But we do have the right to insist on respect for fundamental international and moral obligations."

In a clear reference to the Iranian Embassy siege in London she said: "We in Britain have recently shown our own respect for those obligations. It's intolerable that the American diplomats should ever have been taken hostage.

"It is even more intolerable that after six months they should still be held prisoners."

She said the holding of the hostages could make no contribution to a solution of Iran's problems.

It soured relationships throughout the region, made the search for solutions to the other crisis there immensely more complex--and the West had no option but to make its condemnation clear through the exercise of diplomatic, political and economic pressure.

She added: "I exclude military action, because I do not think it would achieve its objective and because its side-effects could be disastrous."

PCP-CPGB COMMUNIQUE NOTES AREAS OF AGREEMENT, DIFFERENCES

LD090921 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 1 May 80 p 3

[Apparent text of "Portuguese Communist Party-Communist Party of Great Britain Joint Communique"]

[Text] A Portuguese Communist Party [PCP] delegation, comprising Alvaro Cunhal, secretary general, Domingos Abrantes, member of the Political Commission and Secretariat, and Albano Nunes, member of the Central Committee, visited Great Britain 20 through 23 April at the invitation of the Communist Party of Great Britain [CPGB] Executive Committee.

During its stay the PCP delegation had conversations with a CPGB Executive Committee delegation comprising Gordon McLennan, secretary general, and Tony Chater, Gerry Cohen, Irene Swan and Jack Woddis, Executive Committee members.

During the visit Alvaro Cunhal addressed a large meeting at the "Friend's Meeting House" in London and also had a meeting with emigrant Portuguese working people in Great Britain.

The talks between the two communist party delegations, which took place in an atmosphere of cordiality, frankness and friendship, made possible a broad exchange of information and opinions on the situations in the two countries, on the two parties' activity and on the international situation.

The PCP delegation talked about the great struggles the working class and the people's masses are waging in defense of the gains of the 25 April 1974 Revolution--in particular, democratic freedoms, working people's rights, nationalization measures and the agrarian reform--and against the current reactionary government's offensive aimed at destroying the democratic regime enshrined in the Constitution and establishing a new dictatorship. The PCP delegation expressed confidence that the reactionary forces' plans will be thwarted and that Portugal will continue along the path of the April Revolution.

The CPGB delegation described the British working people's resistance to the assault on its living conditions, the protest demonstrations against social services cuts, the wage strikes and actions in defense of jobs, the big movement against the new anti-trade union law proposed by the government and the Northern Irish People's struggle for civil and democratic freedoms which would contribute to the achievement of a united and independent Ireland.

The two delegations discussed concrete measures to develop solidarity and strengthen co-operation between the two parties. During the talks the differing characteristics of the situations in Portugal and Britain were confirmed, as were the different tasks and immediate aims currently facing Portuguese and British communists. At the same time, common features were noted, in particular the consequences of the reactionary policy of the respective governments and the importance of solidarity between the two parties to confront this policy.

The two delegations condemned the reactionary nature of cooperation between the rightwing parties in the Portuguese Government and the British Conservative Party.

The two delegations expressed the parties' opposition to the so-called process of European integration, a process which is led by and which serves the big international monopoly groups that created the Common Market. The crisis affecting the EEC is an expression of the general, ever-deepening crisis afflicting capitalism. There is stagnation and recession in the basic economic sectors, massive unemployment, inflation and greater and greater discrepancies among the various countries' levels of development. To this add authoritarian trends and outrages against the working peoples' freedoms and rights, hyperexploitation and disregard for the rights of immigrants, overt utilization of political bodies--such as the European Parliament--as an instrument of reversion to cold war. All these facts show that the "little Europe" of the monopolies not only does not meet but is directly opposed to the interests and aspirations to progress, independence and democracy of the working class and middle classes and strata.

In this context the CPGB urges the British people to oppose the Common Market and urges Britain to pull out of the EEC.

The PCP is firmly against Portugal's joining the EEC. Membership would have disastrous consequences for the Portuguese economy and for national independence; it would also serve for the reactionary forces to justify the restoration of the monopoly capitalism liquidated by the April Revolution on the pretext of adapting Portugal's socioeconomic structures to those of the Common Market.

The two delegations stressed the need to step up efforts in defense of peace, against the new escalation of the arms race unleashed by the reactionary and aggressive circles of imperialism and against attempts to sabotage detente and revert to a cold war climate in international relations.

The two delegations believe that the vital common task of progressive and peace-loving forces throughout the world is to work consistently for peaceful coexistence, for the prohibition of all nuclear arms, for the disbandment of military blocs and alliances, for the elimination of foreign military bases and for general disarmament. Special emphasis was placed on the need to ratify the SALT II agreements and on the urgent need to prevent the implementation of the NATO decision to deploy new cruise and Pershing-2 nuclear missiles in West Europe, including the deployment of a considerable number of missiles in Britain.

The two delegations believe that the struggle for peace and disarmament is inseparable from the peoples' struggle for their national and social freedom. They hailed the historic victory of the patriotic forces and peoples of Zimbabwe and confirmed their solidarity with the African National Congress in South Africa and the Southwest African People's Organization in Namibia which are courageously leading their peoples in the struggle for national liberation and against apartheid. The Portuguese and British delegations expressed their active internationalist solidarity with all the peoples of the world in the struggle for their total national and social liberation, for democracy, independence, social progress and socialism.

Although analyzing differently the events in Afghanistan, the two delegations confirmed the two parties' solidarity with the Afghan people's revolution and their opposition to all imperialism's attempts to exploit this situation for the purpose of intensifying the arms race and sabotaging the detente process.

The two delegations exchanged views on the forthcoming meeting of European communist and workers parties.

The two delegations stressed that the world situation continues to be characterised by important advances for the world progressive and revolutionary movement and by the aggravation of the crisis of capitalism. The three main forces of revolutionary transformation--the working class of the capitalist countries, the national liberation movement and the socialist countries--continue to determine the course of events at world level,. The two delegations confirmed the need to guarantee the strongest unity among the three main revolutionary forces. They believe that the strengthening of cooperation and common actions among the communist parties, united by common ideas of socialism and communism, is a decisive factor in the struggle of the broad people's masses for democracy, peace, social progress and socialism.

The Portuguese and British communists recognise that the differing conditions in which the two parties operate explain the different policies pursued in confronting each country's specific problems. The path to socialism and the ways of building a socialist society must take into account the experience of the world revolutionary movement and are governed by the particular conditions and national features of each country.

The two parties believe that the working class and working people have the decisive role to play in effecting profound transformations and in the advance toward socialism. In both countries the struggle for democratic transformations demands solid working class unity, accompanied by constant strengthening of the alliance of other social strata around the working class, and the unity of democratic forces, specifically the socialists and communists.

The two delegations expressed their desire to contribute to the strengthening of ties of friendship and cooperation between the Portuguese and British peoples and between Portugal and Britain in the interests of the two countries and of peace and friendship among all European and world countries. The PCP delegation's visit to Britain and the talks with the CPGB delegation are a new step in the development of relations of friendship, cooperation and solidarity between the two parties.

ELEVTHERI KIPROS CHALLENGES NIMETZ STATEMENTS ON CYPRUS

NC100728 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 10 May 80 p 3

[From the "Comments" column: "Does He Consider Himself Bound?"]

[Text] U.S. Under Secretary Matthew Nimetz [as published], who is very well known to the Cypriots, has again spoken about the Cyprus problem, this time before a U.S. House subcommittee. After expressing his great personal disappointment that no solution has been found, he stresses that the United States has always been working hard for the Cyprus problem and that it considers Mr Waldheim's activities to be the best method. He then stresses that he does not believe the rumors that Denktas intends to declare a state, saying that the Turkish Cypriot leader has no such intention.

We have two questions in connection with Nimetz' testimony before the subcommittee: 1) Why did he expect progress in the Cyprus problem since his government, instead of pressuring Turkey, has chosen to reward the Attila crimes by providing Turkey with millions of dollars? 2) How can Mr Nimetz be sure about the intentions of a perfidious person who has thus far violated two official agreements that he had concluded in the UN secretary general's presence?

Does Mr Nimetz consider himself bound by his testimony before the Congressmen, or is he simply trying to deceive them? Mr Carter also undertook some commitments about Cyprus during his first election campaign, and although his term in office will soon expire, his commitments and promises have remained unfulfilled.

DENKTAS RECEIVES NEW UN ENVOY, MAKES STATEMENT

TA091322 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 9 May 80

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the establishment of a bicommunal bizonal [last word in English] federation in Cyprus would depend on the full awareness of the causes which led to the abolition of the partnership between the two communities as a result of the armed aggression against the Turkish Cypriot community. Denktas received this morning the new UN representative in Cyprus, Hugo Gobbi, who arrived in Cyprus yesterday, and conferred with him for some time. Denktas said that although the visit was a courtesy call he had taken the opportunity to outline to Gobbi the Turkish Cypriot views on the Cyprus problem and the Turkish Cypriot cause. Expressing the belief that Gobbi would be useful to Cyprus and to peace in the island, Denktas hoped that Gobbi would soon achieve results for resuming the talks. In reply to a question Denktas said that the new representative had not brought a message from UN Secretary General Waldheim. Denktas said that, as expressed by Gobbi in his statement at the Lefkosa [Nicosia] International Airport, the representative had arrived to assess the situation and to submit his appraisal to the UN secretary general.

Denktas added that the willingness of a person of goodwill and patience, aware of the Cyprus situation, to make an appraisal on the spot, was a positive approach. Gobbi, who was accompanied by UN special adviser Remy Gorge, later called on Minister of Defense, Foreign Affairs and Tourism Kenan Atakol and Turkish Cypriot interlocutor Unit Onan.

ROLANDHIS RETURNS FROM YUGOSLAVIA

ATTEMPT TO RELEASE AS-SIBA'I ASSASSINS REVEALED

NC110733 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 11 May 80 pp 1, 12

[Report by Loukis Loukaidhis]

[Text] Last Tuesday night, a team of specially trained commandos was to attempt to free the two assassins of As-Siba'i from the central prison. However, the attempt was foiled before it took place because the republic's security authorities and police took emergency security measures at the prison compound and at key points in Nicosia and other cities to foil any action that would force the government to release or negotiate the release of the two Iraqis.

The pertinent report reached the police around midnight from a source outside Cyprus who warned that special commandos had left an Arab country for Cyprus with instructions to free the As-Siba'i assassins. The police moved very swiftly and foiled the attempt, which was scheduled to take place after midnight on Tuesday. The police, in an exemplary manner, checked every activity by persons who had arrived on Cyprus from an Arab country the previous day and who were suspected of arriving with fake passports. The policemen had been told that they were going to try to apprehend some Lebanese who had come to Cyprus with a large quantity of narcotics. Later, when the policemen were instructed to return to their homes, they were told that the hashish traffickers had not arrived in Cyprus.

The pertinent report was given to the Cyprus Government by a very senior cadre of a foreign government who had hastily come to Cyprus that evening to convey it.

Police mobile units were mainly patrolling Nicosia while armed policemen were guarding foreign embassies to prevent the commandos from seizing them as blackmail for the release of the two assassins.

Last Tuesday, our paper disclosed that the Iraqi Government had sent a note to the Cyprus Government demanding the release of the As-Siba'i assassins. Despite the government denial, which is due to easily understood reasons, our reports cannot be challenged because they come from a very senior member of the Cyprus Government.

AKEL 'ACTIVELY WORKING' FOR EARLY PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

NC110624 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 11 May 80 p 1

[Text] According to authoritative reports received by I SIMERINI reporters, the AKEL leaders are actively working behind the scenes in order to pressure President Kiprianou into resigning and holding presidential elections prior to the parliamentary elections.

According to these reports, Cooperative Movement Commissioner Azinas is participating in these behind-the-scenes activities. AKEL has asked Mr Azinas to use his influence on PEK [Pan-Agrarian Union of Cyprus] to put forward interlocutor Yeoryios Ioannidhis' candidacy for the presidency. In such a cast, AKEL and EDEK would move to support Mr Ioannidhis' candidacy. According to our reports, Mr Y. Ioannidhis has already been approached and did not reject the proposal. However, he suggested a wait-and-see attitude regarding the developments in connection with Mr Kiprianou's health.

According to the same reports, AKEL is not inclined to support House President A. Mikhailidhis for three basic reasons:

1. The AKEL leadership believes that he is very much influenced by the archbishop;
2. He is considered very pro-Western;
3. He is considered to represent the capitalists.

According to our reports, the fact that Mr Y. Ioannidhis was one of the three ministers who opposed a public inquiry into the question of the Cooperative Movement and Mr Azinas' suspension is not unrelated with the aforesaid activities. Although Mr Ioannidhis is not a minister, he nevertheless attended the special Cabinet meeting on the Cooperative Movement scandal and was a nonvoting participant in the discussion.

MILLIYET CRITICIZES SOBELAIR DECISION TO RECALL PLANE

NC121045 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 9 May 80 p 2

["Viewpoint" column by Mumtaz Soysal: "The Unexpected Decision of Sobelair"]

[Excerpts] Sobelair, which is attached to the Belgian National Airlines, suddenly cancelled an agreement with the Turkish Cypriot Airlines and ordered the return of a plane it had rented to the Turkish Cypriot Airlines. It did so because of the pressure exerted by the Greek Cypriot administration both on the International Aviation Transport Association (ITATA) and on the Belgian Government. The Belgian Government simply gave into the pressure. This is the same Belgian Government which like many Western European governments says it considers Turkey "a friend and ally" and maintains that it is making efforts toward a humane settlement of the Cyprus dispute.

In reality, the aim of these blockades and boycotts is nothing other than "economic genocide." Genocide does not always materialize in the form of killing. Sometimes it takes the form of pushing a community into economic isolation and sterility, severing its relations with the outside world and abandoning it to degeneration and extinction. This is what is being done to the Turkish Cypriot community. In fact, there is an international ring plotting against the Turks with the connivance of the states which pretend to be "our friends and allies." It is, therefore, high time Turkey spoke in strong terms to these states which continue to be "friends and allies."

What sort of friendship and alliance is this that the cause of "friend and ally" Turkey as well as that of the Turkish community, which considers Turkey its only supporter, is being sacrificed in favor of Greece, which has abandoned NATO, and of a Greek Cypriot administration which claims to be "a nonaligned" country?

The truly ludicrous aspect of this affair is this: While we are enduring this humiliation and while the West is extending its underhanded support for the boycotts and economic genocide inflicted on 140,000 Turkish Cypriots, the West has the audacity to ask Turkey to participate in economic sanctions against Iran in order to rescue 50 hostages in Tehran. This is being shamelessly done, since the West knows how important it is for Turkey, which is going through economic distress, to trade with Iran.

Rallis Statement

AT101207 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] After the swearing in of his new government Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis made the following statement:

[Begin Rallis recording] The policy of the government which was sworn in today will be liberal democratic radicalism in accordance with the ideological principles laid down by the founder of New Democracy, Konstandinos Karamanlis, which were adopted at the first panhenllenic congress of the party at Khalkidhiki.

For those who might want to interpret the composition of the government as allegedly demonstrating a deviation more toward to the left or to the right, I state that the government always remains on the same ideological line.

My respected deputy prime minister and friend, Konstandinos Papakonstandinou, is entrusted with general supervision of the implementation of the laws by the public and state services. The deputy prime minister is also entrusted with representing the prime minister of the government in the chamber of deputies in the event of his absence. He is also entrusted with representing the parliamentary group of New Democracy in the chamber of deputies.

All must understand that tested personalities had to be included in the government so as to offer their experience and that new personalities had to be invited to offer their abilities, enthusiasm and desire to contribute. All justified aspirations could not be satisfied. Those who were overlooked because of necessity are not necessarily less able to contribute.

The party's future course, which is that of the government, will provide them with the opportunity to serve the country. The critical international situation creates additional problems for our country. The government is aware of the difficulties of the moment and calls upon all Greeks, no matter to what political front they may belong, to assist in handling these difficult problems. Thank you. [end recording]

Averof Comments

AT101624 Athens Domestic Television Service in Greek 1600 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] After the swearing in of the new government, National Defense Minister Evangelos Averof replied to a question on how he views the government's future with the following statement: The times are difficult. Yet I believe that the new government has the absolute ability to attain its goals. The main positions are held by tested personalities. Averof continued that it is imperative for the good of the country that the unity of New Democracy remains unbroken, in other words, so that the government is based upon a strong political force which will guarantee a productive parliamentary life. All those who have stood firm during all national struggles, he continued, whether neodemocrats or under any other political movements, must place the interests of the country above all else.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON U.S. 'SURPRISE' AT RALLIS APPOINTMENT

TO VIMA Report

AT091347 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 9 May 80 p 1

[Report by correspondent S. Evstathiadhis]

[Text] New York, 8 May--A State Department spokesman "had no comment" on the election of Yeoryios Rallis as the leader of "New Democracy" and, as he observed in answer to a question from TO VIMA, the election "is considered to purely a Greek domestic affair."

In Washington, among both authoritative government circles as well as in Congress, the election of Rallis, which was announced by agency reports from Athens, caused surprise. All reports from Athens which recently reached Washington, including news agency dispatches as well as evaluations from the U.S. Embassy in Athens, indicated the certain election of Averof who was described in advance as "the future prime minister of Greece."

Athough it would be excessive and unfounded to allege that the State Department showed disappointment over Rallis' election as the leader of the government party, Averof's failure does appear to irritate Washington which believed that "with Averof as prime minister it would be possible to have an easier understanding," as was observed only the other day by a government official during a chat with a member of Congress who had demonstrated interest in the future of the Greek-U.S. defense agreement.

RIZOSPASTIS Commentary

AT101718 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 10 May 80 p 2

[From the "Radical" column: "Washington's Surprise"]

[Text] It is very well known that the U.S. imperialists and the Washington governments which represent them insist on intervening--sometimes openly and at other times clandestinely--in our internal affairs, and on multilaterally influencing--if not also directing--the progress of political developments in our country. They consider this to be a sort of "inviolable right" they have which they enforced through a series of enslavement agreements ever since the "Truman Doctrine" and which has since been established through incessant implementation in the form of "Allied protection." Naturally things are somewhat different today from what they were during the time when [John] Foster Dulles proclaimed that "Greece is a hooked fish and needs no bait" and when U.S. ambassadors here acted as the locum tenens of Washington with the role of supergovernor of our country.

The mentality of the Americans, however, has not changed because their goals have not changed. They want to control Greece in every possible way. The dogma of the "New Democracy" governments that "we belong to the West" encourages the representatives of Washington to act with audacity in their provocative interventions which are always attributes of "protectors" that they do not conceal. A short time ago U.S. Ambassador McCloskey reminded us publicly of what our foreign policy ought to be. Later--without the government knowing anything about it--he had talks with military leaders at Larissa without the meeting or the subject discussed ever being announced.

The warning of Karamanlis, the fermentation surrounding the election of a new leader for "New Democracy," as well as a new prime minister did not leave the Americans without an interest. As was hinted, Averof was the man of their choice for the prime minister's position. He has to his credit not only his "bridges" with the junta and his lectures in U.S. universities during his lengthy "introductory" visit. He also has the declaration in the chamber of deputies that "for us, NATO is a national issue." [paragraph continues]

Therefore they threw all their weight behind his election as prime minister. Their press expressed the certainty and joy that "a pro-American who represents the rightwing of New Democracy is expected to become leader of the party and the new prime minister." This does not mean they have any doubts about the pro-NATO leanings of the other leading personalities of the government party but then--what can we do?--the Americans are in a hurry to immediately solve the problem of our immediate reenclavement with NATO and the expansion of their bases in Greece and, as a Washington official shamelessly stated: "With Averof as prime minister we could reach an understanding much sooner." The intensive activity developed by the diplomatic and other representatives of the "West" and their forecasts made Averof a certain prime minister which meant "faster understanding" for them. This is why Washington was irritated and expressed its surprise over the failure of Averof and the success of Rallis. One could well ask: Could the Americans not conceal their irritation and their surprise? No, they could not because they can never get used to the idea that something could be done in Greece--even if not very important--without and against their consent.

I AVYI Remarks

AT101614 Athens I AVYI in Greek 10 May 80 p 6

[From the "I AVYI" column: "Without Delusion"]

[Text] In commenting upon developments within "New Democracy" and the corresponding changes within the government, we could have ended our comments rapidly and in a "revolutionary" manner by stating that "there has been a change in Manolis--he turned his clothes inside out," or we could repeat the well-worn phrase, "cabbage is cabbage." However, since politics have nothing to do with a demonstration of a revolutionary vocabulary we are forced to look at the changes with more specific attention. Naturally it is not only Karamanlis, Rallis, Averof, Papakonstandinou and so on who represent the right. Mavros, Zigdhis, Pezmazoglou and others also do. This, at the same time, does not mean that for the communists and the democrats there is generally no significance in the change in personalities, a very important significance at that, particularly when they represent very strongly the confrontation between various classes. Naturally, yesterday's RIZOSPASTIS ignored--in a very "Leninist way"--this truth and simply limited itself to stressing this is another "government of the right." In our opinion, however, the victory of Rallis instead of Averof is nothing but a defeat of the most pro-American, pro-NATO trends within "New Democracy." With today's balance of political forces, this is not simply an internal family problem of the government party since it more generally affects political developments. Without having any delusions, therefore, we believe that all democratic forces must correctly evaluate this development. They must intensify their efforts to stop imperialist pressures against our country and toward a more democratic policy with, first of all, a unifying activity among the peoples masses. As for the Rallis government itself, the next few days will show what possibilities and limits it will have for any, even if limited, separation of its position from the course of previous "New Democracy" governments today.

PAPER CITES UNIVERSAL DISAPPROVAL OF RALLIS' ELECTION

AT091516 Athens ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS in Greek 9 May 80 p 1

[Editorial by S. Konstandopoulos: "Universal Disapproval"]

[Text] If it is the basic mission of a newspaper to report feelings through its columns then we must report that we do not remember a political news item which has created such a reaction during the past 50 years as yesterday's announcement did in reference to Rallis' election as leader of "New Democracy" and as a sequel to the country's prime minister.

The report was received with surprise and anger. It created surprise because nobody expected it. It created anger because it was considered an unbearable provocation against public feeling. Disapproval was universal. "New Democracy" also suffered a general collapse of prestige but primarily among its own leading personalities and followers. Its own people froze. They could not believe it. They were indignant when the report was confirmed. No heavier blow could have been delivered against the governing party, the wear and tear of which is being speeded up.

In essence "New Democracy's" parliamentary group was not supposed to vote for a new party leader and for a prime minister. It was simply going to elect a private secretary for Karamanlis, an executive official who would carry out his orders. The true leader of the party pointed out the man of his own choice. This was the person that suited him most and this is the person that his deputies, responding to his wishes, provided for him. Yeoryios Rallis, who was salvaged during the last election in 1977 through the process well known to all, has been cut off from public feeling and nobody would have thought of voting for him if there had been no such "inspiration" from above. In any case, the disharmony between the artificial majority in the chamber of deputies and the people became wider and more severe and its dissolution is now the unyielding demand of the public majority.

For what reasons was Rallis chosen? 1) because he is not self supporting and self motivated. Politically he is a parasite (we repeat: politically) on the trunk of the personality-cult regime. Consequently he does not cast a shadow over the existing narcissism and he has no prospect of acquiring an independent personality. 2) because he is willing to follow well-known "instructions" and he will never create difficulties. 3) because he is qualified for use, at some future moment, as the sacrificial lamb to satisfy the peoples' indignation. The above reasons are only the most probable ones.

The personality-cult regime is progressing toward its sunset. It cannot be salvaged either with Yeoryios Rallis or with anyone else. The election of its new leader simply proved its catalytic crisis in the most spectacular way. The end is approaching with the unavoidable character of a natural phenomenon which cannot be placed under control. The people and the representatives of national conscience will sweep the present political situation away from its very foundations. This is the situation which has submerged the country under lies and corruption.

AVRIANI FORECASTS COLLAPSE OF NEW DEMOCRACY PARTY

AT091427 Athens AVRIANI in Greek 9 May 80 p 1

[Editorial: "They Voted for Collapse"]

[Text] Yesterday "New Democracy" voted for collapse. The fact that the two opponents came so close in the voting demonstrates that within the party there is a tendency to tear apart and a division which testifies that in a very short time we will have explosive developments and will proceed toward the formation of two parties--one with Rallis, the other with Averof. This was described months ago as a probability. Yesterday's voting makes it a certainty.

Naturally today we will have prolonged hymns about the party's unity from the paid pen-pushers of the neodemocratic front. However, the truth is different. Leading personalities of "New Democracy" were morose and downcast yesterday. They now realize that the party has lost its cohesion and that sooner or later there will be an auctioning off of the legacy left to it by Karamanlis.

The fact that "New Democracy" remained monolithically united from 1974 to date was due to the authoritarian personality of its leader. They feared him more than they respected him. The members of "New Democracy" now neither fear nor respect their new leader. They simply tolerate him.

From the very first moment that the results became known, revealing such a deep rift within the foundations of the party, the deputies started worrying about "what will happen to them." With them, more generally, the followers of the party are also searching for some new political shelter.

The conductor's baton of Karamanlis, who is a master at political ploys which nobody can deny, managed to orchestrate many different types of instruments. Within "New Democracy" there were rightists, royalists, neocentrists, progressives, members of the National Radical Union, ERE, a whole multitude of political and party spores which will now start to break apart "into their component parts." Averof will take his nationalists and depart, Stratos will separate his royalists, Mitsotakis will attempt to gather together the centrists, Evert and Varvitsiotis will claim the progressive wing and yesterday's victor will remain all alone bringing to mind certain bishops whose monasteries have been abandoned by their monks.

From a more general viewpoint, the destruction of the myth around "New Democracy" will be good for the country. It was something artificial. It was nothing but a mask for the rightwing. Only two numbers, 84 and 88, have remained out of all this conglomerate and they testify to the rift which allegedly Averof cleverly tried to bridge with what he said about the party's unity after his defeat. There is no good in lies. These two numbers speak clearly and testify that the collapse of "New Democracy" is now only a matter of time.

I KATHIMERINI CRITICIZES AVEROF'S FAILURE TO SUPPORT RALLIS

AT101310 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 10 May 80 p 7

[Editorial: "It Is a Political Act"]

[Text] A failure to stress the well-known statement by E. Averof the other night, only a few hours after Rallis was elected leader of "New Democracy," would be an obvious ostrich-like act of blindness as well as a dereliction of duty by a responsible newspaper toward its readers and toward public opinion more generally. This is because this statement was an act which has both political significance and weight which also created a question of principles.

Let us first sum up the events: As it is well known, Rallis and Averof were candidates for the leadership of the government party and, as a result, for the prime ministership. When the "New Democracy" parliamentary group elected Rallis as its new leader (and tomorrow's prime minister) with the impeccable democratic process which is provided for under its constitution, Averof, with absolute decorum and dignity accepted the will of the majority without complaint. He publicly congratulated the party's choice and promised, also publicly, all possible cooperation and support. It is also a fact that both Rallis and Averof provided a sequel to their mutual promises about close cooperation and the unity of "New Democracy" by agreeing to meet on that same evening at Averof's home for the first selection of the new members of the new government. Rallis let it be understood that he intended to offer Averof the position of deputy prime minister together with the Ministry of National Defense or another sector of governmental activity.

This was the picture in the afternoon of the day before yesterday.

Only a few hours later, before the echo of the stentorious and public declarations for cooperation, support, and so forth had time to fade out, Evangelos Averof made his well-known statement in which he said:

"The television report which said that as a future deputy prime minister of the government I have already begun cooperation [talks] related to the composition of the new government was incorrect. I believe in the need for unity in 'New Democracy' by remaining within its ranks. If it is offered to me, I will keep the Ministry of National Defense."

This statement immediately altered the picture of that afternoon. This is because its content and its "cut and dry" tone indicated a change in the position and placement of Averof. In contrast to his apparent--at least outwardly--position in the early afternoon, he took care to clearly separate his position and place some distance between himself and the new leadership of the party.

In a tone of barely concealed irritation he stated that he virtually refuses to participate in the work and responsibilities of the Rallis government as a whole. He also stated that he agrees to maintain only one specific sector within such a government--an isolated, "watertight" compartment.

First of all we have a question: What intervened within only a few hours in order to bring about such a radical change in Averof's position and tone toward the will of the majority of the parliamentary group of his own party and the situation created by this will? What made him renege and attempt a public, emphatic and demonstrative change of position?

Only this question itself, no matter what the answer might be, gives Averof's action the character and dimensions of a political act and a political fact.

In all sincerity we do not know what happened, and if it did happen. If, however, Averof's action is the result of advice from certain circles, political and otherwise, then the unheard of libellous ferocity and unbridled reaction against the election of Rallis by certain newspapers, among which are certain remnants of the junta, give rise to understandable (and we hope unfounded) suspicions about the position of these circles and the origin of such possible advice.

Here we will open a parenthesis in order to state that the unbridled reaction of the extreme rightwing newspapers and the junta remnants, in conjunction with explosions in the middle of the night and the night's ugly incidents--with which, however, Averof has absolutely no connection--indicate many significant things....

We now come to the question of the Ministry of National Defense. The combination of a negative spirit and separation of position with the (fundamental) claim of the ministry as an exclusive privilege, first of all, creates a question of principle and order. This ministry would, in any event, have been entrusted to Averof. Averof could have asked for it with the argument of his suitability and long experience in this sector during the past 6 years. It is unacceptable, however, that anyone should view a certain sector--and particularly that of national defense--as a permanent personal reward and a "watertight" one at that. Such situations and particularly such positions are unacceptable in any law-abiding democratic country.

Such situations applied to Greece in the past and we have seen the state of affairs and the calamities to which they have led. "Watertight" areas and rewards must be excluded and they are unacceptable, for reasons of principle and expediency.

Over and above the question of principle there is also the question of essence. Since Averof demonstratively separates his position, then why does he only want and claim the Ministry of National Defense? This question can then be followed by another: Is it possible that an attempt to "isolate" and control important sectors of authority is being made by a certain faction for the purpose of turning themselves into "praetorians" in accordance with examples from the past? Is it possible that an effort is being made to return to that fatal division between the superstructure and the substructure of authority?

We would like to believe these questions can be answered negatively. The question, however, does understandably arise as a result of developments.

Naturally Rallis circumnavigated the reef with dignity and good will. He did express his desire to entrust the Ministry of National Defense to Averof and, understandably, he downplayed the entire issue. In any case, this was dictated by the moment.

I VRADHINI CHALLENGES HONESTY OF NIMETZ STATEMENT TO CONGRESS

AT091232 Athens I VRADHINI in Greek 9 May 80 p 2

[From the "Evening" column: "A New Provocation"]

[Text] It is supposed that a senior member of the U.S. administration when called upon to report to Congress would inform its members on problems affecting U.S. policy.

The latest statement, however, by the U.S. Assistant Secretary of State [as published] M. Nimetz to the appropriations committee of the American parliament is both infuriating and surprising. This is because, apart from a lack of clarity and evasions as well as a resort to "a lack of U.S. jurisdiction over NATO affairs," Nimetz maintained that Turkey does not oppose Greece's return to NATO and that the solution to the question of responsibilities over the Aegean ought to satisfy all members.

To whom was Nimetz addressing himself? It would have been far more honest and direct if he stated that the administration of his own country favors Turkey's expansionist claims in the Aegean instead of pretending to be impartial and blaming Greece.

INTERNATIONAL BANKS GRANT $550 MILLION LOAN

AT091530 Athens Armed Forces Television Service in Greek 1500 GMT 9 May 80

[Text] A group of 12 international banks will grant the Bank of Greece, acting as an agent for the state, a loan of $550 million. The loan will be for a period of 8 years, with a 4-year grace period. Generally the conditions are very favorable. The annual interest rate is 5/8 percent more than the London Interbank interest rate. It is also characteristic that the state is given the option to gradually take over all or part of the loan within 18 months.

The loan will be used to finance the state investments program and to meet foreign exchange obligations which have increased due to oil price hikes. The agreement was signed in Paris today with representatives of international banks from the Netherlands, Canada, the United States, France, Germany, Great Britain and Japan.

HOMEMADE EXPLOSIVES DAMAGE FOREIGN AUTOMOBILES

AT091104 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1000 GMT 9 May 80

[Text] A total of 20 homemade explosive incendiary devices were placed in the Athens area last night under automobiles belonging to foreign missions as well as to automobiles with foreign and Greek number plates.

Explosions damaged some automobiles while a fire was caused in a Khalandri supermarket. Senior army officers and incendiary experts visited the sites, collecting fragments for investigation. At the same time the police carried out extensive searches throughout the night in an effort to discover the culprits.

QOTBZADEH STOPS IN ISTANBUL, RECEIVES ASSURANCES ON BASES

TA100530 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] Iranian Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh has declared that Iran has received the word of the Turkish Government that the United States will not be able to use bases in Turkey for a possible new military operation against Iran.

Stopping over in Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport on his way back from Marshal Tito's funeral in Belgrade, Qotbzadeh explained his views on Turkish-Iranian relations and replied to questions by reporters. Qotbzadeh arrived in Istanbul on a private plane around 0230 and rested in the Yesilkoy VIP lounge for some time.

In a statement to journalists, Qotbzadeh stressed the importance of developing relations between the two countries. He said: This would create new developments benefiting both countries. Pointing out that Iran wants to secure its needs from Turkey and reach an agreement with Turkey on this subject, Qotbzadeh noted that such an agreement would draw the countries closer together. He also said Iran wishes to supply the oil that Turkey needs.

Replying to journalists' questions on the U.S. hostages, Qotbzadeh said: The Islamic Majlis will make the final decision regarding the hostages. The people will make the final decision. The Iranian people cannot be expected to be affected by the military, economic and political threats of the United States. Pointing out that the Turkish Government promised Iran that the United States will not be able to use bases in Turkey for a possible military operation, Qotbzadeh said: We trust the word of the Turkish Government. We also know that the Turkish people are not in favor of these bases being used against the brotherly Iranian people. We are not afraid of the United States. We trust the Turkish people and the Turkish Government. Referring to possible Turkish mediation, Qotbzadeh said in answer to another question: What we want from the United States is evident. We informed the United States of our wishes. There is no need for mediation in this situation. The Americans will either accept our wishes or they will not. These are the only alternatives.

Istanbul Governor Nevzat Ayar, who received and saw off the Iranian foreign minister at Yesilkoy Airport, carried a message from Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen. In his message, Erkmen invited Qotbzadeh to visit Turkey. Qotbzadeh told the governor that he also wishes to hold a meeting with Erkmen in Ankara. The Iranian foreign minister and his delegation left Turkey after their short stay in Yesilkoy Airport.

MINISTRY SAYS LIFTING OF AEGEAN NOTAM IS 'ACT OF GOOD WILL'

TA101118 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] It has been announced that the lifting of Notam 714 is not a sacrifice for Turkey but an act of good will. A statement issued by the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate today says that an atmosphere conducive to developing Turkish-Greek relations vis-a-vis the Aegean has been created with the opening of the Aegean airspace. The statement notes that no Turkish government can consent to casting a shadow over Turkey's rights and interests in the Aegean and that linking the lifting of the Notam and Turkish rights and interests in the region is not a realistic assessment.

The statement says: Notam 714 was a measure taken for purely military purposes and in accordance with the decision of the military authorities toward the end of the 1974 Cyprus peace operation. The aim of the Notam was to create an early air defense information line in the Aegean and the Mediterranean to ensure Turkey's security against a possible attack due to the operation.

Although the issue in question was a military one, it later gradually transformed into a political one. The Notam was not aimed at moving the Greek Flight Information Region [FIR] westward. The lifting of Notam 714 is not a sacrifice for Turkey but an act of good will. Turkey has taken the first step and has demonstrated its good will. Right after the lifting of the Notam, the Aegean airspace, which was closed for 6 years, was opened to civilian and military air traffic. The Aegean airspace is currently being used by various airlines of many countries and direct communications over the Aegean between Turkish and Greek airports have been established. These relations might eventually be expected to lead to mutual cooperation in the fields of commerce and tourism, to mutual aid and to developing friendly relations. In conclusion, the opening of the Aegean airspace has created an atmosphere conducive to developing Turkish-Greek relations regarding the Aegean.

The lifting of the Notam has not created any problems for the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. The Greek Cypriots have moved Air Route R-19 from Rhodes to Lefkosa [Nicosia] southward. The route is now completely within Greek Cypriot airspace. All flights over northern Cyprus are reporting to the Ercan airport control tower. Air Route A-28 between Turkey and Cyprus remains as it was prior to the lifting of Notam 714. This route is fully under Turkish control.

Noting that the Notam was lifted as a result of an assessment based on extensive work, contacts and developments, the statement continues: The Notam was issued by the Office of the Chief of the General Staff in 1974. The Notam was lifted following talks between the Office of the Chief of the General Staff and the government and appraisals by the National Security Council that the decision was compatible with national interests. The fact that this decision was taken at a time when Turkey was expecting foreign aid and when efforts were continuing in connection with Greece's return to the NATO military wing has caused various speculations. However, these two issues have been in progress for the last few years and concern NATO as well as Turkey. When making a decision, it is impossible for any government or state to choose a time devoid of any incidents or problems. This is especially true given the current international conditions. It is inevitable that any decision to be made will either coincide with a current incident or will follow one.

This decision is not connected with the two issues in question. This is the case both from the viewpoint of time and goal. The Aegean airspace and the continental shelf should be addressed independently of the Notam. International airspaces and international waters are being used in accordance with the principle of international equity. The continental shelf issue will be concluded in accordance with international law. The solution of the problem will probably take time. No Turkish government can consent to casting a shadow over Turkish rights and interests in the Aegean. Linking the lifting of the Notam--which was issued as a requisite for an operation--and the issue of Turkish rights and interests in the Aegean is not a realistic assessment.

DEFENSE MINISTER LEAVES FOR NATO MEETING IN BRUSSLES

TA091505 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 9 May 80

[Text] National Defense Minister Ahmet Ihsan Birincioglu left for Brussels today to attend the NATO defense ministers meeting to be held on 13 and 14 May. Before his departure Birincioglu made the following statement:

[Begin Birincioglu recording] As has been the case in the past, I will hold a preliminary meeting with my European colleagues on 12 May. During this meeting we will review the contributions of the European members of NATO's joint defense and the developments concerning the military cooperation among these European nations within the past 6 months.

The NATO Defense Planning Committee will meet on 13 May and all NATO defense ministers will attend this meeting. The reports on various aspects of NATO's defense will be discussed during the meeting. Talks will also be held on the possible aid to be extended by our allies in a bid to increase the defense power of our country, which is very important within NATO. I will also hold a bilateral meeting with the West German defense minister, the honorable Dr Apel. During this meeting, we will review certain aspects of the military aid which the FRG is extending to Turkey.

The foreign ministers of the member countries will participate in the meeting on 14 May. The invasion of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union has justifiably caused great concern in the free world and has created a very delicate and unstable situation in Southwestern Asia. The new situation in the wake of the invasion of Afghanistan and its subsequent problems for the security of the alliance will be discussed during this first high-level NATO meeting since the invasion. INVESTIGATION COMMITTEE HEAD ON JOINT DEFENSE INSTALLATIONS [Text] It has been announced that the joint defense installations in Turkey are conducting their activities under the supervision of the Turkish Government and in accordance with the goals of NATO.

The chairman of the Senate investigation committee on the goals and activities of the defense installations, presidentially-elected Senator Hilmi Firat, issued a statement on this subject. In his statement Firat declared that the main defense installations in Turkey are located in Sinop, Belbasi, Pirinoli, Kargaburun and Incirlik. Commenting on the studies conducted by the investigation committee in these installations, Firat said that the existence of the defense installations in Turkey is based on the NATO treaty. Firat noted that these installations are primarily connected with the Turkish General Staff's office and, with regard to subjects related to their activities which are permitted by the agreements, they are accountable to their own authorities.

Pointing out that all the installations are Turkish Armed Forces' installations and are under the control of the Turkish command, Firat said: During our investigation we saw the most secret sections of the installations. There is no place the members of the investigation committee cannot enter in these installations.

Firat added that the report of the investigation committee will be submitted to the Senate within the next few days.

GRAND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY AGAIN FAILS TO ELECT PRESIDENT

NAP LEADER TURKES CALLS FOR EARLY ELECTIONS

TA101853 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 10 May 80

Noting that the state in its struggle against its enemies, has not yet reached a level of effectiveness which provides security, Turkes added that so long as this sense of security is lacking there will be no end to disturbances. He noted that a government capable of speedy decisions and enjoying the decisive support of the parliament is necessary to achieve economic stability. Turkes said that with the delay in the fulfillment of the nation's expectations from the government and the parliament, tension is spreading.

Turkes added that recent developments in Turkey's neighboring countries necessitated a more serious handling of domestic problems and that no time should be lost under the circumstances. Pointing out that the presidential elections have yet to yield results and that parliamentary tasks have been deadlocked, Turkes said that tension might increase if the current situation continues.

In the letters sent to the leaders of the four parties, Turkes noted that the most democratic and healthy approach at such moments is to hold elections. Turkes said: The most appropriate way, from the viewpoint of acquiring new strength from the nation and evaluating developing tendencies, is to hold early elections together with partial Senate elections. The agreement of our parliament to such a decision will enhance the esteem of our political parties.

TERRORIST KILLS RPP PROVINCIAL LEADER; ECEVIT CLAIMS 'PLOT'

TA080927 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 7 May 80

[Text] The RPP Kayseri Province leader, lawyer Mustafa Kulkuloglu, was killed by an armed terrorist today. According to information received from Kayseri Security Director Mehmet Ali Ozen, Kulkuloglu was shot while he was walking home on Talas Avenue at 1900. He died on the way to the hospital. The terrorist fled after the incident.

RPP Secretary General and acting leader Mustafa Ustundag said after the incident that the shots fired by gangs of murderers were really aimed at the RPP. Stressing that the murders would never scare the Turkish people or the RPP, Ustundag said: Their aim is to suppress the RPP members, the free thinkers and those who cannot tolerate injustices and thus bring to life the dark system they yearn for--a system where he who has the right will not seek his right, where the witness of an injustice will not be able to say anything--so that they can go on with their exploitations and profiteerings. Ustundag called on all RPP members to be patient and strong. He said that a delegation of legislators from Kayseri was sent to Kayseri to look into the incident.

State Minister and Acting Prime Minister Orhan Eren expressed his grief over Kulkuloglu's death in a letter he sent to RPP Secretary General and acting leader Mustafa Ustundag. In his letter, Eren said: The necessary directives and orders have been given to the administrative authorities for the speedy apprehension of the criminals and their transfer to judicial authorities. They will certainly receive the punishment they deserve.

Ecevit Statement

TA091744 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 9 May 80

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit said that the murder of his party's Adana and Kayseri provincial leaders within a short interval cannot be a coincidence. Ecevit noted: These two incidents indicate that the plot against democracy in our country has reached a new stage.

In a statement he issued in Yugoslavia's capital, Belgrade, Ecevit said that, on the one hand, the schemes to prepare an atmosphere for an antidemocratic change in the system are continuing and, on the other hand, there are attempts to render his party--the primary obstacle before these schemes--ineffective. Ecevit declared that those who have realized that they cannot disable the RPP through political struggle are now engaged in attempts to frighten and subdue the party members by aiming at their lives.

Ecevit said that rightist terrorists are leading Kayseri into an atmosphere of terror through the support of a certain section of the state authority and that the government is not taking any measures against this. In his message Ecevit continued: The RPP had organized a rally in Kayseri for next Sunday. It is evident that the murder of our provincial leader was planned accordingly and that the plan was not or could not be stopped despite the postponement of the Kayseri rally because of my participation in Tito's funeral.

In a country where the provincial leaders of the main opposition party are being murdered one after the other, planned terrorism could reach more advanced stages. In a country where the main opposition party becomes the target of terrorists--whose supporters are well known--and in a country where the life security of those conducting politics in accordance with the laws and of the opposition members are at stake, one cannot say that the multiparty democratic system is functioning. One cannot talk about the existence of political rights and freedoms or about free elections and security during elections.

Ecevit added that, despite all this, the RPP will continue its efforts to secure peace and insure the survival of democracy without swerving from its peaceful attitude.

COMMUNIST PARTY HOLDS PLENUM, ISSUES STATEMENT

TA110856 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0700 GMT 11 May 80

[Statement by the Turkish Communist Party Central Committee on its plenum]

[Text] A Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee plenum has been held. The successful plenum was held in secrecy. The plenum further enhanced the Leninist political, ideological and organizational unity of the TCP. It stressed the importance of strengthening the struggle for peace and disarmament in the face of imperialist attempts to strain international relations. It assessed the great contribution to this struggle by the Paris meeting of the European communist and workers parties.

The TCP plenum determined the political duties facing the party following the increasing hegemonic pressures by U.S. imperialists in our region and in our country, the transformation of the political system in our country into a semimilitary system of oppression and the worsening economic crisis. It especially stressed the urgency of the struggle against the U.S. and NATO bases on our soil and the bilateral slavery agreements imposed by the United States.

The plenum discussed the issue of solidarity and the national democratic front. It determined the political line on the democratic unity of action against the antipeople policy of the Demirel government, on the unity of action among the various parties of the working class, on the unity of the women's, youth and peace movements and on the national problem.

The TCP plenum also adopted a resolution concerning the solidarity with the harsh struggles of strikes conducted by the working class against the monopolies' attacks and syndical unity of action. It greeted the glorious 30 April general strike and the successful May Day celebrations held under the difficult conditions of terror throughout the country.

Furthermore, the plenum charged the TCP members with spreading the Leninist principles among the masses more extensively on the 110th birthday of Lenin. It greeted the 35th anniversary of the great victory won by the Soviet army and all antifascist forces against Hitler's fascism.

On the 60th anniversary of the TCP the party plenum decided to strengthen the party in many ways, especially to raise the level of the party's ideological work, to develop in every field the implementation of the democratic centralism principles in accordance with new conditions and to further enhance the party structure.

The TCP plenum also unanimously approved the Politbureau report, its policies and all its decisions.

TCP CONGRATULATES CPSU ON VICTORY OVER FASCISM

TA101039 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 10 May 80

[Message from the Turkish Communist Party Central Committee to the CPSU Central Committee on the occasion of 9 May, the 35th anniversary of the victory over Hitlerite fascism]

[Text] Dear comrades, on behalf of all Turkish Communists, the Turkish working class and our people, we congratulate you on the 35th anniversary of the great victory over fascism by the Soviet Union. This great victory of the Soviet people under the leadership of the CPSU--the party of esteemed Lenin--for the liberation of all humanity is the most important historical event since the Great October Revolution. Imperialism and the system of colonialism received another heavy blow and this victory opened the way for the establishment of the world socialist system. This victory created a wide horizon for new steps forward by the world communist and workers movement, national liberation movements and peaceful, democratic and socialist forces.

The numerous lives sacrificed by the Soviet people during the great war for their motherland and the unique valor which they displayed will always be remembered by our nation as well as by all the people of the world.

Imperialists are straining international relations by escalating the arms race and by attempting to return to the cold war period. On the other hand, the Soviet Union is greatly contributing to the efforts to ensure world peace and detente and to the struggle for disarmament through its consistent Leninist policy of peace. It is also restraining the adventurist and expansionist provocations of U.S. imperialists and NATO's ruling circles.

The Turkish working class and our people are opposed to imperialist attempts to include Turkey in their aggressive and hegemonistic plans, the U.S. and NATO nuclear warehouses and the bilateral slavery agreements. They want to live independently and freely and to establish and develop friendly relations based on mutual benefit with all countries, primarily with our great neighbor the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union--the pillar of the world socialist system--is scoring new achievements every day. These achievements are a great source of strength for our people's struggle for national liberation, democracy and social progress as well as for the revolutionary process in the world.

Long live the great Soviet Union--the stronghold of world peace and socialism]

TRUDEAU COMMENTS ON QUEBEC REFERENDUM, CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

LD100423 Montreal International Service in English 2100 GMT 9 May 80

[Excerpts] The House of Commons has given unanimous approval to a motion asking the British Parliament to give Canada the power to amend its own Constitution. However, the prime minister says he does not feel bound to act on the motion. Mr Trudeau says he would not send such a request to Britain unless the provinces agreed. Gary Aldrich has the story from Ottawa:

The prime minister said in some ways the motion almost made him want to cry because he made the same points during the federal election campaign in 1979 and felt like he was preaching in the desert, as English-speaking commentators kept telling him that the economy was more important than constitutional reform. He also told his news conference that if the federalist forces win the Quebec referendum he hopes to hold a conference to discuss constitutional reform by July.

In what some consider a break from the past, he said that even if the PQ [Parti Quebecois] wins the referendum the federal government will probably have to attempt constitutional reform after 20 May. Until now the prime minister has always emphasized that a "yes" vote would create a constitutional deadend for Quebec.

PAHR: NEUTRALITY POLICY HAS NOT CHANGED

AU121345 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1018 GMT 12 May 80

[Ferdinand Hennerbichler interview with Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr in Vienna--presumably live]

[Text] [Question] Mr Foreign Minister, after 25 years of foreign policy of the Republic of Austria, the opposition keeps saying that it is moving a little away from the West and more toward the East, primarily toward the Third World. In the eyes of the opposition, this means that there has been quite a fundamental change in the policy of neutrality.

[Answer] I think the assertion that Austria's policy of neutrality has changed is wrong. Indeed the opposition has failed to provide any proof of it. From the very beginning Austria has pursued a very active foreign policy and is continuing to do so. If you take a look, for example, at the way we have voted at the United Nations, then you will see that in the past year, as in the two preceding decades, we have again taken the same position as the other European neutrals, as Sweden, as the north European countries, Canada, Australia, and that we have by no means drifted into someone else's company.

It is not correct either, that we are dissociating ourselves, that we are moving away from the West. As before--and we keep stressing this--we regard ourselves clearly as belonging to the West regarding ideological questions. It has never been called into question that we belong to the pluralistic-democratic countries of Europe, and we have adopted an unequivocal position on all related issues. The same goes for all legal and political questions related to neutrality.

As far as our relations with the nonaligned countries are concerned, nothing has changed in that respect, either. For over 10 years we have dispatched guest delegates to the nonaligned countries' conferences, and we have no intention of making any changes in that practice in the future. Naturally, especially when the situation becomes difficult, when relations between the two blocs are marked by increasing conflicts, there are problems and matters where Austria's interests coincide with those of the nonaligned countries.

It is a matter of course for us also to cooperate with the nonaligned countries regarding such problems and in such situations.

While observing our principles-neutrality, and likewise our belonging to the West ideologically--we cooperate with all countries with the goal of insuring Austria's security, and actually Austria's security will be ensured only if there are as few problems as possible in the world. That is why it is necessary, in cooperation with all those who are capable of it, to make a contribution toward solving such problems.

[Question] In your lecture this morning, Mr Foreign Minister, you employed the term "equidistance," among others, a term you have not mentioned up to now. If I sum up all of the opposition's arguments, if I am not mistaken, then what it keeps advocating is that we should basically seek a position of neutrality that is rather closer to that of the Allies--of the Americans and of the West--and not so close to that of the East bloc or the Third World.

[Answer] I do not know whether that is really the view of the opposition because that would be something that is not in line with the traditional concept of neutrality. As far as all international issues of a nonideological nature are concerned we have to maintain equidistance. And I also said in my lecture that, while observing the principles of our foreign policy, especially our belonging to the pluralist-democratic countries, we are seeking equidistance from the two blocs--and that is precisely what is demanded by neutrality and what has been the principle of our policy of neutrality from the very beginning.

[Question] May I single out a few essential arguments: For example, that we have become more dependent on the East in the energy sector, which is dangerous; secondly, that in the past we never spoke up so often on international issues, on international crises--for example, recognition of the PLO, the Middle East conflict--as we have done recently; and, if in the past we recommended international crisis management, we placed less emphasis on the role of the nonaligned nations than we are doing now. Are these mere nuances, or--as the opposition says--are these, after all, indications of changes in the policy of neutrality?

[Answer] It is not the policy of neutrality that has changed, but the situation, the world situation has changed. And any situation, any world situation requires specific reactions, all of which are based on the same idea, however. Our neutrality has not changed, nor will it change--only its realization may sometimes look different nowadays. But the reason why it looks different is that it is confronted with situations that are different from those in the past.

[Hennerbichler] Thank you very much, Mr Minister.

[Summary] Jerusalem (AP)--The Israeli Army so far has no proof that the PLO is equipped with Austrian-made sniper rifles, but it does have information about arms deals between Austrian firms and the PLO being in their initial stages. This was stated by an Israeli military spokesman on 9 May. "At the Vienna Foreign Ministry DIE PRESSE was told that these reports were 'absurd'. 'We have not been approached by any firm for an export authorization.'" Earlier, the military correspondent of MA'ARIV had claimed that the Austrian Government, circumventing a U.S. ban, had sold the PLO large quantities of AM-180 weapons that were produced in Austria under U.S. license.

NUSSBAUMER REPORTS ON POLAND TALKS ON COAL, JOINT PROJECTS

[Unattributed report: "Power and Coal From Poland"]

[Summary] Austrian Secretary of State Adolf Nussbaumer, who had held economic talks in Warsaw for several days, declared after his return from Poland that the difficulties regarding Polish coal deliveries to Austria in the amount of 1.2 million tons annually for thermal power plants have been overcome. If the experts of both states can complete their preparations in time, the agreement could be signed during Polish Premier Babiuch's visit to Vienna in the second half of June.

The delivery agreement was worked out last fall, but it could not be concluded because of differences over the financing. According to Nussbaumer, a settlement of these differences has now been accomplished, providing for a guarantee by the Polish Handlowy Bank for the 4 billion schillings loan as well as for a Polish guarantee that repayment of the loan will be made through coal deliveries.

Nussbaumer also discussed in Warsaw new Austrian-Polish projects which, however, involve new substantial financing requests from the Polish side. Such projects include Austrian participation in the developing of large brown coal deposits and the construction of a 3,000 megawatt power plant for processing this coal in southern Poland. Under the envisaged terms of this project, Austria would get electric power in the amount of 730 megawatts and deliveries would begin in 1986, either via the CSSR or via the planned East-West power link. An Austrian delegation of experts will go to Warsaw on 20 May for further talks on this project.

In addition, Nussbaumer said, projects for a chain of hydropower plants on the Weichsel River as well as a brown coal drying plant at Blechatow, north of Czestochowa, were discussed. Regarding an intensification of economic relations in general, Nussbaumer reached agreement with Polish Planning Commission Chairman J. Hrynkiewicz on an information system that is to provide Austrian firms at a very early stage with information of interest to them about the coming Polish 5-year plan.

SCHMIDT REAFFIRMS INTENTION OF GOING TO MOSCOW

LD121741 Hamburg DPA in German 1712 GMT 12 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt reaffirmed his intention today of going to Moscow for talks with the Soviet state and party leader, Leonid Brezhnev. He still named no date for the trip, however.

Speaking to the SPD parliamentary group, the chancellor also said that he agreed in principle with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on the need for a visit to the Soviet Union. Schmidt made it clear that he will not let himself be diverted from his trip by doubts and criticism on the part of the CDU/CSU opposition.

The government leader warned, however, against placing very high hopes on the results of a visit to Moscow. It is said in Bonn that the chancellor does not expect any decisive move by the Soviet Union, particularly on the Afghanistan issue, at present.

It is regarded as an open question as to whether the chancellor will be able to persuade the Soviet leadership to make concessions on the policy of disarmament--in which Moscow has so far refused talks on the problems of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

Schmidt reported to the group on the talks held last week in Belgrade with state and government leaders on the occasion of Tito's funeral. He also had a short meeting with Brezhnev but it did not provide an opportunity for a political exchange of views.

MOSCOW ATTEMPTS TO SPLIT WEST MAKE SCHMIDT TRIP 'DIFFICULT'

DW121150 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 12 May 80 p 3

[Article by Bonn correspondent signed Moe: "No Signs"]

[Text] If it is true what the Soviet party paper PRAVDA again terms as the main reason for its wild attacks against U.S. President Carter, then Moscow is more afraid than anything of a West European attempt to offset the Soviet lead in the field of Eurostrategic arms. If that is so, the Soviets "actually would have to want" negotiations, as Defense Minister Apel put it.

So far there are no signs that Moscow will make the West Europeans a really fair offer to basically reconsider their entire defense policy. Instead, the leading Kremlin team is trying to create insecurity among the West Europeans by pointing to the unpredictability of their most important ally, and to drive a wedge between the United States and Western Europe. Constant assurances to the contrary do not change anything.

The attempt to weaken NATO makes it very difficult for Schmidt and Genscher to engage in direct talks with the Soviet leadership and to go to Moscow, while advising the German Olympic sportsmen to stay away from the Olympics for higher national interests.

Bonn can overcome that contradiction only if it credibly proves that the renunciation will pay off and that it will contribute to reminding the big powers of their responsibility for peace. But that does not work without both Moscow and Washington.

PALME'S MOSCOW VISIT NOT COORDINATED WITH SCHMIDT

[Bonn report signed C.G.]

[Text] Bonn, 12 May--According to a report from the Federal Government, the Moscow visit by Swedish Social Democratic Party Chairman Palme, which took place last week after a meeting of European social democrats in Hamburg, was not coordinated with Federal Chancellor Schmidt. It can be gathered from a statement by Government Spokesman Boelling made on Monday that there was at least no "operative coordination" on Palme's Moscow talks with the intention of preparing for Schmidt's planned Moscow visit.

The European social democrats discussed a number of issues at the Hamburg meeting with Schmidt's participation, but it is not usual for Schmidt to coordinate a visit with a foreign opposition leader.

In Moscow, Palme suggested the creation of a disarmament commission with Soviet participation, which is supposed to be convoked, in the pattern of the UN's North-South Commission, under SPD Chairman Brandt.

SCHMIDT WEAKENING ON NATO DECISION, PALME MOSCOW VISIT SCORED

DW121138 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 12 May 80 p 4

[Article signed Fk.: "Silently in Moscow"]

[Text] The greatest danger to peace and security, repeatedly writes PRAVDA, was the NATO decision of last December to station medium-range missiles in Europe. In reality this does not concern the introduction of a new arms system; NATO much rather wants to replace the existing potential of Pershing missiles with a longer-range type missile. Some 3 to 4 years will elapse before the first missiles will be supplied, and the Soviet Union was expressly asked at the time to enter into general negotiations on this issue. It has so far doggedly refused to do so and, since 1977, it has been updating its old armament through the production of one new SS-20 type launching system each month--missiles with a range of 5,000 kilometers and three nuclear warheads each.

This is the fact that has made Federal Chancellor Schmidt an insistent advocate of closing the so-called "arms gap." Since that time Soviet fire has been aimed at the NATO decision. Brezhnev's rude answer to Schmidt's Afghanistan letter of January was characteristic, with three quarters of the answer dealing with the reprehensibleness of that decision. The APN threat 10 days ago that the Federal Republic would thus become the main target of a Soviet nuclear retaliatory strike in case of conflict was also characteristic.

Since then Helmut Schmidt has become meeker every week, offering a mutual and temporarily limited delay on deployment. He has long been prepared to be confronted mainly with this issue in Moscow. It fits into this scenario of weaker and weaker knees that the result of the Hamburg conference of socialists last Tuesday and Wednesday obviously consisted of the fact that Swedish Prime Minister Palme should go secretly to Moscow to make the ominous suggestion of a new "disarmament commission" there. The Russians found that interesting; they find everything interesting that causes disarmament hopes in the West, simultaneously giving the Soviet Union the opportunity to continue its armament undisturbed through year-long unsuccessful conferences. A few more months of Soviet fire and nothing much will be left of NATO's decision to close the arms gap.

KYODO REPORTAGE ON OHIRA TALKS WITH SCHMIDT, GENSCHER

Ohira-Schmidt Discussions

OW100032 Tokyo KYODO in English 0006 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] Bonn May 9 KYODO--Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt agreed Friday that Japan and West Germany should support the United States in an effort to seek a peaceful settlement of the Iranian problem. At the same time, both leaders agreed that non-communist nations should strengthen solidarity.

Ohira, en route home from attending the state funeral of Yugoslav President Josip Broz Tito, conferred with Schmidt for three hours on the current international situation, including Iran, the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan and next month's summit of industrially advanced nations at Venice. Of the three-hour talks, the two leaders met for one hour without their aides.

Officials said Ohira supported Schmidt's view that the Soviet Union should pull out its troops from Afghanistan as soon as possible to allow the Afghans to exercise self-determination and press ahead with neutralization of their country.

Ohira and Schmidt agreed that both Japan and West Germany should stay away from the Olympic games in Moscow this summer. They also confirmed the maintenance of cooperative relations between the two countries. On the Olympics issue, the prime minister was reported to have told Schmidt that West Germany and Japan both have difficult problems at home and should pay particular attention to athletes who have been devoting their time to training in preparation for the Olympics but it was not desirable for them to participate in the games as long as there is no definite progress on the question of the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. The chancellor reportedly told Ohira that he shared the same opinion as Ohira.

Schmidt and Ohira were reported to have agreed that the Iranian question, including the release of the American hostages held by militant students, must be settled peacefully. They believed Japan and West Germany should play their roles for the settlement of the Iranian issue.

Ohira briefed Schmidt on Japan's defense issue that came up during his talks with President Jimmy Carter in Washington on May 1. The prime minister was quoted as saying that the U.S. side had expressed a desire that Japan move ahead of schedule in completion [of] the defense buildup program now under way. However, Ohira reportedly said that Japan would deal with the matter independently.

Before meeting Schmidt at 1 p.m. (8 p.m. Japan time) at the chancellor's office, Ohira conferred with economics minister Otto Lambsdorff over lunch. The prime minister also met with Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer at 3:40 p.m. (10:40 p.m. Japan time). His talks with Lambsdorff centered on energy, the Venice summit and Japan-European economic relations, according to officials. Lambsdorff reportedly said that West Germany obtained America's understanding on its oil import target and that West Germany and the United States would continue cooperation in the development of atomic energy. The economics minister also cited the importance of international monetary problems and said West Germany could not support Third World nations trying to act outside the framework of the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

Lambsdorff pointed out that there is a strong anxiety in Europe over the possibility of Japan and the United States settling their bilateral trade problems at the expense of the European Community (EC). He cited that Japan exports 4.5 million cars but imports only 60,000 units.

Ohira told Lambsdorff that the Japanese market is not closed and that Japan would continue making efforts to resolve trade issues.

Finance Minister Matthoefer thanked Ohira for Japan's cooperation in extending assistance to Turkey.

Further on Schmidt Talks

OW100130 Tokyo KYODO in English 0108 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] Bonn May 9 KYODO--Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt were reported Saturday to have held important consultations on their countries' economic sanctions against the Soviet Union and policies toward the United States. The two leaders met for three hours Friday, including one hour [in which] they conferred without their aides.

An official accompanying the prime minister refused to reveal the contents of the Ohira-Schmidt one-hour private session. He said merely that it would become an international issue if the substance of the talks is made public. The Japanese and West German governments agreed not to issue the contents of the subjects discussed by the prime minister and the chancellor while they met alone. But it was believed that Ohira and Schmidt took up steps to be taken by Japan and West Germany against the Soviet Union over the Russian intervention in Afghanistan.

Both governments earlier decided to take economic sanctions against the Moscow regime, such as a halt to new credits, as a means to express their displeasure with the Soviet military incursion into Afghanistan. However, Japan and West Germany are in difficult positions on how far they could carry out their economic sanctions against the Soviet Union because of reasons in their respective domestic economic circles. It was believed that Ohira and Schmidt tried to adjust their views on the extent their governments could impose sanctions on the Soviet Union.

The two leaders also were believed to have consulted on ways to urge President Jimmy Carter not to resort to military action against Iran in order to seek an early release of the American hostages held by militant Iranian students.

Other subjects Ohira and Schmidt are believed to have taken up included the European situation after the death of Yugoslav President Josip Broz Tito, inflation and recycling of the so-called oil dollar.

Ohira-Genscher Meeting

OW101211 Tokyo KYODO in English 1201 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] Bonn May 10 KYODO--Japanese Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira and West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher Saturday agreed to have "a place for continual talks" for cooperation between Japan and the European Community (EC). Genscher proposed a place for Japan-EC continual talks when he met Ohira for about one hour over breakfast at a Bonn hotel where Ohira stayed. Ohira favored the proposal.

Genscher also proposed to give cooperation to regional cooperative organizations such as the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) to have them develop their union to protect themselves from possible aggression. The proposal is believed to represent part of West Germany's policy to form a definite anti-Soviet strategy amid rocking world situations.

Genscher told Ohira of an idea to invite Japan to a meeting of ambassadors from EC member countries in Tokyo, but Japan and EC have yet to discuss possible forms of cooperation between them.

Genscher also stressed the necessity of cooperation of Japan and EC with regional bloc organizations. Ohira also supported the proposal.

While talking about international situations, Genscher also described China as a trustworthy country whose policies are rational, responsible and unadventuristic.

ARAB LEAGUE ENVOYS DENOUNCE STRAUSS' STATEMENTS IN ISRAEL

LD091034 Hamburg DPA in German 0909 GMT 9 May 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--The ambassadors of the Arab League states accredited in Bonn have criticized CSU Chairman Franz Josef Strauss for his statements made in Israel. A statement by the League says that the ambassadors disapproved of and condemned these statements which reflected the views of the "ultraradicals in Israel" and disregarded the decisions of the Security Council and the European Community. Strauss had adopted a one-sided attitude in favor of "Israel's radical policy" which, instead of serving the process of peace in the Middle East, aggravated tensions in this region.

STRAUSS INTERVIEWED ON NORTH RHINE-WESTPHALIA DEFEAT

DW121232 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1835 GMT 11 May 80

[Moderators Friedrich Nowottny and Hans Joachim Reiche interview with Franz Josef Strauss, minister president of Bavaria and CDU/CSU chancellor candidate, in Bonn--live]

[Text] [Nowottny] In assessing the election results in North Rhine-Westphalia, one must ask about the share Franz Josef Strauss had in it for the CDU. What share do you think you had in it?

[Answer] First of all I would like to state calmly that it was with good reason that the CDU conducted its election campaigns in the Saarland and in North Rhine-Westphalia exclusively with a view to land policy problems. In other words, regarding the people involved, the campaigns were represented by Koeppler and Biedenkopf. We, the entire Union, suffered a severe blow from fate. There was not one single poster of me in all of North Rhine-Westphalia. The CDU did not conduct this election campaign by using me in the sense of introducing into the election campaign the forthcoming federal policy dispute between Schmidt and Strauss.

The CDU was strictly factual. Therefore, I would like to warn against looking for wrong motives. Maybe I can say it in a more humorous way. You all know the story about the man who stuttered and said that he was not able to become a radio announcer because he was in the wrong party.

[Reiche] But your political opponents in North Rhine-Westphalia, the SPD and also the FDP, naturally involved you in this election campaign. The SPD used the slogan "vote against Strauss." You were involved considerably in this election campaign-- may be not on your own, but through your opponents.

[Answer] If the federal policy of the Federal Government were so attractive, the party of Mr Genscher--whose poster was seen throughout North Rhine-Westphalia; I saw hundreds of them, there were probably some 10,000 posters of him--the party of Mr Genscher should have gained a few percentage points instead of having to worry about "will I get in, will I not get in" or "He loves me, he loves me not?" Matters are much more complicated.

Helmut Kohl is absolutely right in saying that one must examine the question of participation in the elections. As far as I have seen in the first rough chart, we have participation figures of more than 90 percent in some regions and 75 percent in others. Therefore, one should not prematurely and hastily produce theories, theories which are usually just a confirmation of already existing opinions. One should much rather engage in cool, sober analyses.

I must clearly point out that it was for good reason that the CDU conducted the election campaigns--in accordance with the value and significance of the laender--under purely land policy aspects. As is known I have also used 3/4 of my time as a speaker in dealing with land policy issues handled by the CDU.

[Nowottny] It would probably be very unrealistic to assume that, when Monday is over and you and Mr Kohl present the election program on Tuesday, that the outcome of the North Rhine-Westphalian election results will not play a part in the discussions. I think it ought to be of special importance for you as chancellor candidate that your party has lost considerably, not only in the Saarland but also in North Rhine-Westphalia. Does that irritate you or does it make you even firmer with regard to entering the Bundestag election campaign?

[Answer] The Union is a union of the CDU and the CSU. But the problem here is whether or not it was correct to restrict the election campaign in the laender to land policy aspects. It is the proper right of every land party to decide on that. It does not make any sense to voice a different opinion in retrospect.

In addition, the Union has to learn about the recklessness and shamelessness of our political adversary. I will only mention in this connection the embarrassing poster indicating that the CDU pursues a war policy while the SPD is a guarantee for peace. There was some fast and loose playing here with the human suffering of widows and mothers of war veterans. The truth has been revealed quite recently about the means they worked with here and how the women were brought into the picture.

[Nowottny] Several truths exist on this issue.

[Answer] There are always several truths, but it is still my turn. The CDU must cope with this method. I believe that the Union as a whole must learn to fight much harder and step up the election campaign. But had it worked the other way--I say this equally frankly--had the CDU won the elections, some people may have gained the impression that there was no need for us to make any further efforts with regard to the fall because we scored a great success here. Matters are still completely open and we will put those things in order which must be put in order. We will achieve that degree of cohesion we need for this purpose. But I am decisively against falsely distributing motives and against holding others responsible.

[Reichel] Did I understand you correctly in saying that you have determined from this election that until 5 October we will see a tougher election campaign than was perhaps planned and envisaged?

[Answer] I do not have in mind an election campaign with personal attacks or defamation and slander as I have particularly experienced for months now wich ever increasing fierceness--but I have been used to it for 3 decades. We have to expect all kinds of surprises and mean things. We also experienced it in 1976. But the Union will have to adapt itself to the demands of the election campaign. That will mean a tougher fight with the opponent, and federal policy issues will be the main topic here.

PRESS DISCUSSES NORTH RHINE-WESTPHALIAN ELECTIONS

DW121119 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German 0505 GMT 12 May 80

[Excerpts] WESTFAELISCHE RUNDSCHAU of Dortmund states: This election result is tantamount to a landslide. It basically changes the political scene in the country even though the old minister president will also be the new one. Johannes Rau has been accepted by the voters with a "shamefully good" result, as he called it himself, after having taken over parliament from Heinz Kuehn about 2 years ago. Looking for the reasons of this absolutely unexpected high SPD victory means simultaneously talking of the worst disaster for the CDU/CSU union in the Rhine and Ruhr area. It is most unusual that the opposition, which naturally has to be the party of attack, had to suffer such a defeat.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG maintains: The SPD can now dream of an absolute majority in the Federal Government. However, its victory in North Rhine-Westphalia, regardless of its extent, is not unmarred. This is because of the disaster of the FDP. Not much fantasy is needed to imagine how the Free Democrats will now try to gain a much stronger profile as an independent force in Bonn. Nothing is likely to change about the "yes" to a continuation of the social-liberal coalition. But the SPD will have a hard time when a final decision will have to be made on tax problems, for example. The FDP has had an all too painful experience in North Rhine-Westphalia--regarding how easily it can be pulverized between the fronts if the dispute concentrates on a duel between Schmidt and Strauss. Its only choice now is a retreat forward--implementation of its policy at almost any price. The SPD will come to feel this. It will also have to pay a high price for Sunday's shining victory--if it does not want to lose the sympathy of its liberal partner.

BADISCHE ZEITUNG of Freiburg notes: The social-liberal coalition has paid dearly for the high SPD victory in Duesseldorf. The Free Democrats have reason enough to maintain that the cause of their defeat was the fact that they have cut a bad figure in recent years in North Rhine-Westphalia. But this statement is hardly enough. The coalition problem is coming into the foreground again as well as the question about what bad consequences it will have for the Free Democrats if they get caught between the grindstones of a federal policy confrontation, as in North Rhine-Westphalia. The idea could develop a tempting fascination about how attractive a Union without Strauss could be as a coalition partner for the FDP. The fact that this idea could be equally tempting for the CDU, because it would suddenly be able to get out of its difficulties, will contribute to having this theme put on the agenda.

MANNHEIMER MORGAN maintains: It has turned out that the Bavarian is not eligible to be elected by the social and liberal clientele of the CDU.

The fact that with Biedenkopf in North Rhine-Westphalia a top candidate was presented to the voters who was spiritually related to them, makes the value of the voting results even more obvious. New discussions regarding Strauss are probably unavoidable--discussions on the difficulty of an exchange or a neutralization of his negative effect through an attractive team. Whatever is decided, it will not be easy for the CDU to overcome the depressing setback in North Rhine-Westphalia.

WESTFAELISCHE NACHRICHTEN of Muenster says: The interal party discussion in the CDU about the correctness of nominating Franz Josef Strauss as chancellor candidate, so far discussed only secretly, will now become loud or even shrill. Dammed-up irritation could be discharged in a new personnel quarrel. All reminders to maintain cohesion and all warnings against a super Kreuth [CSU congress] will show little result. Naturally there would be some enormous temporary confusion and possibly also disagreement in the bourgeois camp if Strauss should quit, which cannot be fully ruled out. The Union, with its present formation and alternative to Helmut Schmidt, is far from election victory in October--probably even very far.

DARMSTAEDTER ECHO writes: Actually the world political background of this election is such that it may have stemmed from the scenario of Sonthofen. It is such that Strauss, according to his own convictions, could not imagine any better. A big crisis, a widespread feeling of insecurity ought to result in a call for the strong man, the call for Strauss. Reality, however, looks completely different. An overwhelmung majority of federal citizens back Chancellor Schmidt although not the SPD. His reaction to the world situation is in line with the general mood: sensible action, not heating up the crisis, not getting involved into the quarrel of the powers, and maintaining contacts with the other side. So far Strauss has not been able to match this in any way.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER BOTE stresses: The possibility of a two-party Bundestag with the SPD as the strongest and only ruling party has become feasible. It seems that the Union no longer subscribes to the almost traditional leadership role. The Social Democrats have led the election campaign very much under federal policy aspects for Schmidt and against Strauss, and they have won this way. The chancellor is the talent which they obviously seem to be using in an unlimited way and whose effect is not curtailed by such events as happened in Bremen. The leftist SPD trend which can be recognized only in nuances, but which still exists--meaning away from Schmidt--has not been taken amiss by the electorate; on the contrary, it may have even been occasionally welcomed.

DIE WELT CONSIDERS IMPLICATIONS OF SPD ELECTION VICTORY

DW121003 Hamburg DIE WELT in German 12 May 80 p 1

[Commentary signed w.H.-E.: "Schmidt's Divided Pleasure"]

[Text] This was a Schmidt election and, therefore, the absolute SPD majority in the Duesseldorf landtag suddenly changes the federal political landscape.

Schmidt must now consider whether it seems possible following these Sunday elections that the FDP could slide below 5 percent inthe Bundestag elections this fall; the chancellor's party in Bonn must play it safely. In other words, Schmidt has to aim for an absolute majority in the new Bundestag. This cannot be the desire of his heart; should the SPD rule with an absolute majority, an open conflict would be unavoidable between the leftwing of the party and the chancellor.

Genscher has to consider whether after this election result in North Rhine-Westphalia it is clear that this federal chancellor, with the bonus of his office and his high personal authority, threatens to cut off the FDP's lifeline in the social-liberal coalition. [paragraph continues]

In the pain of mortal fear the Free Democrats will ponder whether another coalition strategy would offer them better chances of survival.

And Strauss has to consider whether there has been good reason why he, as the Union's chancellor candidate, has conducted the election campaign so far in such a disciplined and reserved way, a way that seemed advisable in the world political crisis. But it is clear after this election campaign that the chancellor's challenger must immediately switch to an open election fight. This is the only way which holds out hope for restraining criticism and defeatism in the Union. All-out action in order to be the driving force in the elections has become logical because there can be no longer be any silent hopes placed in the "fourth party" of the Greens.

POLLS ON ELECTION CHANCES OF SCHMIDT, STRAUSS ASSESSED

DW060935 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 5 May 80 pp 35-48

[First installment of DER SPIEGEL poll on the political situation in the election year 1980: "The Chancellor and the Candidate"]

[Text] A 2/3 majority of the Germans is convinced that the SPD and FDP will win the two most important elections of 1980: the land diet election in North Rhine-Westphalia next Sunday and the Bundestag election on 5 October. If the federal chancellor were elected directly, 58 of every 100 federal citizens would vote for Helmut Schmidt and 38 for Franz Josef Strauss.

These figures were established by the Bielefeld Emnid Institute by order of DER SPIEGEL (see chart on page 37). From 14-23 April, 2,000 men and women representative of the 42 million adult federal citizens were polled. Polls also were conducted about their views on the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and on an Olympics boycott, on the building of nuclear powerplants and on the Greens (see charts on pages 41 and 44). Other questions dealt with their stance on the major powers United States of America, Soviet Union and China, domestic policy problems like the radicals' decree, paragraph 218 on abortion and the naturalization of guest workers' children.

But above all the voter's attitude to the parties and the future tasks in Bonn was ascertained, with every method the German pollsters have developed in recent years. As many as 23 questions were devoted to SPD Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and the CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor, Franz Josef Strauss. Based on the data of this investigation a series of articles will draw a picture of the German citizen in the election year 1980.

Sixty-two percent of the Germans are convinced of the importance of the next Bundestag elections. Their opinion: "It makes a big difference whether Helmut Schmidt will govern with an SPD-FDP majority or Franz Josef Strauss with a CDU/CSU majority."

--Eighty-five of 100 voters already know for which party they will vote on 5 October;
--Fifty-three percent always vote for the same party. "That will also be true in 1980; The election campaign can change nothing."
--Thirty-two percent usually cross over, but "in this year their decision is made."
--Four percent refuse to answer and only 10 percent said: "I am forming a definite opinion only during the election campaign."

To be able to create political groups the pollsters also asked the 2,000 men and women the so-called Sunday question: "Which party would you vote for if the Bundestag election were next Sunday?" The answers gave an explanation, for instance, of why a 2/3 majority is convinced of a victory of the SPD-FDP coalition on 5 October: Twenty-nine of 100 CDU/CSU followers expect a victory of the other side. And that Chancellor Schmidt, if elected directly, would be by far superior to candidate Strauss also is attributable to the Schmidt supporters among the CDU-CSU voters. Every seventh one (14 percent) prefers Schmidt to Strauss. DER SPIEGEL in its investigations up to now has always used the results of the Sunday question for reporting on the respective strength of the parties.

But at present this is impossible owing to a debacle of German pollsters in the election year 1980: Even leading institutes seem to be unable to ascertain reliable party figures. For March--the last months for which comparable results are available--Emnid has recorded for the coalition parties SPD and FDP an advantage of 1 percentage point over the CDU/CSU (49:48 percent), whereas the advantage recorded by the Allensbach Institute is 5.8 percent (50.7:44.9 percent). Two other renowned institutes, Infratest (Munich) and Infas (Bonn), have recorded percentages of 2.5 and 4 and thus are in between the data recorded by the two institutes mentioned previously (see chart on page 39).

If the Bielefeld and the Allensbach figures were ascertained immediately prior to the election and if they had to be taken seriously, they would have to be assessed in a fundamentally different way politically. According to Emnid the SPD and FDP as well as the CDU CSU are almost neck-to-neck and, on the basis of these figures only, no forecast would be possible on their victory or defeat. However, according to the Allensbach figures the election result already would be as good as certain.

From the beginning of this election year the figures of the institutes have differed more than usual. Only individual results were published, so that the misery of the German pollsters up to now has remained secret. But the more accurate the comparisons of the figures are, the less acceptable is the political confusion. In February, for example, the discrepancy was even greater than in March. Allensbach, for instance, saw the coalition as far ahead as it did in March. Emnid conversely reported the CDU/CSU ahead of the SPD/FDP (48 as against 47 percent). And in the period between the February and March polls some of the institutes found a low tide where others observed a flood. According to Allensbach the SPD lost voters in this period--albeit just a few, so that merely the digit after the decimal point changed. According to Emnid the SPD during that period gained 1 percent; according to Infratest, 2 percent.

For the FDP Allensbach and Emnid counted more voters in March than in February, Infas and Infratest an identical number. And for the Greens, too, sometimes one, sometimes another weather situation is being simultaneously reported. If March is compared with February they are identical in Bielefeld, better in Allensbach, rose in Muenich. Emnid and Allensbach, the very two institutes which are the only ones to try to prove their accuracy with forecasts for each Bundestag election, show the greatest differences.

The Bodensee Institute of Prof Elisabeth Noellen-Neumann--as far as the percentage figures go--has been rather close to the election results since 1957, even if in 1969 Allensbach announced the SPD as the strongest party while then, in the polling places, the CDU/CSU was counted [as the strongest party]. Emnid pulled a boner in 1965 with a wrong forecast, but since 1969 has been depositing with a notary public forecasts on each Bundestag election which then turn out to be accurate on election day. Most recently the Westphalian pollers had already submitted on the eve of election day the results of the European election of 10 June 1979 to their biggest client, the Bonn CDU headquarters.

The differences between the party figures in the 1980 election year are attributable to a problem which is no longer new but still unsolved: When Germany's public opinion pollers pose the Sunday question they are deceived by quite a few interviewed people in each poll.

More FRG citizens claim to be SPD voters than is true constantly. The untruth comes to light when the additional question is posed: "For which party did you vote during the last Bundestag election in 1976?" A comparison of the replies with the official election results of that time then shows to what extent answers to the question concerning the voting decision are wrong. Often SPD figures emerge which Schmidt and comrades at the time would not even have dared dream.

The institutes correct their party figures for 1980 on the basis of the 1976 election results. How much they take away from the SPD and how much they add to the CDU/CSU depends on how great the difference is between the election result at the time and the result of the inquiry. The pollsters have found an elegant expression for this procedure. They say that the party figures are being subjected to a "float and sink analysis" [gewichtet]. Without exception the SPD comes out the strongest beforehand, the CDU/CSU thereafter.

The principle of weighing is identical in all institutes. In addition, nearly every company seeks to develop methods of its own and to beat the competition. The situation is paradoxical. Anyone--as the Mannheim professor of political science, Rudolf Wildenmann, for example, frequently does in the monthly CAPITAL--publishing the genuine figures arouses the wrong impression. Only those who "analyze" the figures and thus manipulate them in the generally prevalent view can hope to come close to the political reality. The "float and sink analysis" is done without anybody so far having been able to explain the SPD's predominance and to justify the tricks. Even a theory of the "silence spiral" developed by Allensbach boss Noelle-Neumann offers nothing to that end.

In its series of articles on the 1980 election year DER SPIEGEL will look into the problem of the false information given by the interviewed people and the contradictory figures of the institutes and discuss them with leading public opinion pollsters. If the current main problem of German political opinion polling remains unsolved, henceforth the very question in which many politicians and the public are interested would be worthless. Barring a few exceptions only such party percentages reach the front pages of the newspapers. Often they are launched there by clients--for instance, parties--not for the purpose of providing information about opinions but for the sake of opinion making.

To experts the Sunday question is but one of many. If they want to draw an opinion diagram on some political subject they fire whole "batteries of questions" (as they call them) at the representative citizens. Such polls practically never become public. The clients are the governments in Bonn and in the federal laender, but above all the party headquarters. To them polls are secret weapons in the election campaign, weapons which they hide from their adversaries. Through DER SPIEGEL's 1980 voter's survey the public for the first time is being informed at least as well as are the staffs of government and party chiefs, presumably even better: for the multitude of questions broke the bounds of a regular survey with interviews of about an hour.

Emnid posed the main question to 2,000, others to 1,000--to both men and women in each--and another 2 dozen questions concerning the problems of war danger and energy supply were posed in another poll. The results were counted for more than 100 subgroups which include Strauss opponents in the CDU CSU, as well as alternating voters close to the SPD, passenger-car owners as well as Catholic churchgoers.

The overall impression from several hundred tables: There is a great deal to be said for, and next to nothing against, the fact that most FRG citizens remain right with their prognosis that no change in power will take place in Bonn on 5 October. No matter whether the opposition and the coalition at this time have about the same number of followers or whether the SPD/FDP is ahead of the CDU/CSU, considering the political attitude of the Germans as predicted in the tables of the Emnid survey, a Chancellor Schmidt and not a Chancellor Strauss must be expected for the first half of the eighties--up to the 1984 elections.

This is true even though there are a lot of weak spots in the government camps. Two of these points: Herbert Wehner is even less popular than Strauss, and every other voter explains Wehner's utterances about the Soviet Union by his KPD past. [paragraph continues]

The CDU/CSU slogan about the "Moscow faction in the SPD", therefore is touching a sensitive spot in the government party, even if its top people refuse to accept it. They underrate the aversion 50 percent of the constituency have for Wehner. And if the question concerning the relations with the United States is posed, the CDU/CSU is being declared competent far more often than are the SPD and the FDP together. This attitude would even be amplified if Schmidt or other top SPD politicians were to make themselves the spokesmen of an allegedly increasing anti-American sentiment.

This change in opinion has been claimed lately rather often but has not as yet been proven. The Emnid figures speak against such a trend. This is revealed, for example, by the answers to the question about the German Government's attitude toward the crisis between the United States and Iran. The question was this: "Did the government act correctly or should it have supported the United States more strongly, or should it have kept more aloof from this conflict?" Twenty-eight percent of those interviewed came out for stronger support of the United States, 18 percent for greater distance. Forty-seven percent believe that Bonn behaved appropriately.

Yet the government would have to commit major mistakes if the tide is to turn against it in the election year. Even a candidate who is more attractive than Strauss would have an extremely hard time enforcing a change in government. This would also be at odds with the current basic feelings in the Federal Republic. These feelings become plain if the FRG citizens' views about the present and about the future are compared.

The Germans seem to have become more modest in their claims and expectations, perhaps along the lines of the motto: It would be good already if things remained as they are. Fifty-seven out of 100 interviewed term their own economic situation "very good" or "good", and 48 out of 100 pass this judgment on the general economic situation in the Federal Republic. A mere 8 or 9 percent deem their own or the general economic situation poor. But as soon as the talk turns to the future the view change--even when the immediate future is involved. Out of 100 citizens, 37 believe that the economic situation will be "slightly worse" or even "essentially worse" a year from now.

A question concerning the future, which had made headlines in the United States a few months back, has now been posed in Germany as well: "If you think of the future, will children be better off than the adults are now, or will they be living just about as their parents are, or will they be worse off?" Just like the Americans the Germans, too, see more shadow than light. Thirty-three percent believe that children will be worse off than their parents, and just 22 percent think that they will be better off (43 percent: "likewise").

Even the blind belief in a better world as a result of better machines is dwindling away. The question asked was this: "Much is changing nowadays in technology, science, and in the economy. Do you think life will thereby become more worth living to man 30 years from now or will it not, or no longer, be so worth living?" Of 100 men and women, 21 decided to give the positive answer (?worth living"), whereas 41 out of 100 chose the negative reply (?no longer so worth living").

The more fearfully someone is looking toward the future the stronger is nearly every change felt as a risk, including a change in government. But it is yet for two other, even more weighty reasons that the chancellor and the candidate are entering the arena with unequal chances: On the one hand the incumbent's bonus each government chief has so far had is counting more heavily for Schmidt than it did for his predecessors. On the other hand the comparison between the Hamburg defender of the chancellor's office and the Munich challenger on the whole definitely comes out to Schmidt's advantage, albeit surely not on every single point.

Top ratings are recorded for Schmidt if and when the question is posed: "Do you, generally speaking, approve of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's policy or do you disapprove of it?" According to Emnid, 55 percent of FRG citizens currently approve while only every fourth "disapproves." Such ratings were recorded for Adenauer, Erhard, and Brandt only in the best of their times. The fact that Kiesinger met with even greater approval is explicable by the 87-percent majority which his grand coalition government held.

In order to find out what image the Germans have of the federal chancellor and the candidate for chancellor, Emnid asked about the characteristics of Schmidt and Strauss. First for the Bonn government chief and then for the top man of the opposition, the interviewers presented a list with 20 pairs of characteristics (see chart on page 48). The Emnid interviewers also asked about every one of the 20 characteristics whether they are "very important for a federal chancellor, rather important or less important."

It turned out that completely different standards have been set for politicians than for people in their own environment. Characteristics which are considered highly important with regard to relatives, colleagues and friends, are considered as dispensable by many people if the most important state office is to be filled. A chancellor must not necessarily be polite, sociable, warm, cordial, humorous or even moderate.

According to the people's opinion, it is not a shortcoming that modesty is less attributed to both Strauss and Schmidt than almost all the other characteristics. Sixty-one percent of those questioned consider the Bavarian as more or less vain, 48 percent the man from Hamburg. "Cold and sober" are the most frequently named negative characteristics of Schmidt after vanity, and so many people term Strauss as "unrestrained" that this is the greatest difference between him and the man on the other side: 69 of 100 federal citizens consider the Bavarian as "unrestrained" and 77 of 100 consider Schmidt as "restrained."

Desirable with regard to the ideal chancellor are primarily reliability, farsightedness, the strength to make decisions, competence and education. Four of these five characteristics, according to the poll, are more developed on the part of Schmidt than Strauss, who is merely considered as having more strength to make decisions. Moreover the government chief is considered as being more open toward the world, more progressive, diligent and fair as well as more polite and sociable. According to the opinion of the people, Strauss is more self-concerned, stronger, has more ideas, is more independent and humorous. Also, as a speaker he scores more points than his counterpart.

In another comparison the four Bundestag parties were included and the three party chiefs Kohl, Brandt and Genscher. A scale with five points above and below zero was supposed to indicate a measurement of sympathy. The explanation of the interviewer: "Plus five means that you have no sympathy at all for that politician. You can indicate your sympathy in grades by using the other values."

With 2.1 of 5 possible points Schmidt by far leads over all parties and the other politicians. If the sympathy of the people is involved, the candidate for chancellor is 10 times further from the chancellor than he is from zero: The distance between Schmidt and Strauss is 1.9, the difference between Strauss and zero is 0.2 points. Strauss is not even as popular as Kohl, his predecessor as candidate for chancellor, and both lag behind their parties. This also pertains to SPD chief Brandt, who enjoys even less sympathy than Strauss. Hans-Dietrich Genscher is the only chairman who is not feeding on the sympathy for his party, but who is increasing it.

Two more questions dealt with the adversaries in their own parties of the two leading figures of 1980. The first: [paragraph continues]

"Criticism exists in their own ranks with regard to Helmut Schmidt as well as Franz Josef Strauss. In the SPD the leftisits do not agree with all points of Schmidt's policy. In the CDU there are politicians who do not agree with all points of Strauss' policy. Where are the differences of opinion greater, in the SPD or in the CDU/CSU?" Both parties were named almost equally: The CDU/CSU was named by 44 percent of those questioned; the SPD by 49 percent. When the Emnid interviewers wanted to know additionally "who has his internal party critics better under control," again almost the same number said either "Schmidt in the SPD" (45 percent) or "Strauss in the CDU/CSU" (47 percent).

In order to find out about the approach of the CDU/CSU union voters to their party's candidate, they were asked to join one of three groups. Most of them (65 percent) stated that they would vote for the CDU or the CSU "regardless of the name of the candidate for the most important government office." And 56 percent of the SPD voters stated the same when they were asked the respective question. The handicap represented by Strauss for the CDU/CSU comes up when the two other groups are compared: Schmidt attracts more voters than Strauss: "because of the candidate," Only 19 of 100 CDU/CSU followers vote as opposed to 100 SPD followers. Strauss repels more voters than Schmidt: "Despite the candidate," 16 percent of the CDU/CSU voters decide in favor of their party, but only 3 percent of the SPD voters.

A popular thesis of many editorialists says that Strauss enjoys little sympathy, but that his political potential is generally highly esteemed. Emnid tried with two parallel questions for Schmidt and Strauss to find out whether this was a correct description of the mood of the people: The political abilities were supposed to be graded with school marks ranging between 1 and 6, and the institute asked the questioned people: "Act like a teacher who must not rate the students according the sympathy he has for them or lack of same." Strauss was lagging behind, but the difference is small: The average quota for the chancellor is 2.6, for the candidate 2.9.

But the request to judge free of sympathy obviously could not be fulfilled. Marks such as "very good" or "good" were given to Strauss by 79 percent of the CDU/CSU voters, but only by 22 percent of the SPD voters. Vice versa, only 35 percent of the CDU/CSU voters and 81 percent of the SPD voters gave Schmidt these two marks.

When questions were asked about Strauss' past, the general figures do not indicate how much opinion differs according to party preference. Three opinions were offered. The results: "The accusations against Strauss were inflated at that time by his adversaries, and therefore nobody has the right to warm them up now." Twenty-three percent of all those questioned decided in favor of this answer: 41 percent of the CDU/CSU voters, 10 percent of the SPD/FDP voters.

"Strauss made mistakes at the time when he was a minister, but so many years later it cannot be a campaign issue any more." This answer was given by 35 percent of all questioned: 38 percent of the CDU/CSU voters and 33 percent of the SPD/FDP voters.

"The one who applies for the most important state position in the Federal Republic is subjected to special requirements, including the right to talk about his earlier political affairs and scandals." This answer was given by 39 percent of all those questioned: 19 percent of the CDU/CSU voters and 56 percent of the SPD/FDP voters.

It is being said and written quite often that Strauss' hour will come when a strong man is needed. The editorialist of FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG, Johannes Gross, for example, sees it as follows: "The great and strong man Strauss is considered to be by most of his friends and adversaries needs the great crisis as a legitimation." The candidate himself hinted at this expectation as early as in 1971: "I hope the German people will never be so badly off that it would believe it has to elect me as chancellor."

On the eve of 1979/80 the first evidence appeared that this political calculation would not work. Although after the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan the German's fear with regard to a crisis increased as much as hardly ever before in the past decades, the approach of the federal citizen to Strauss has not changed according to all polls.

Last month Emnid tried to find out how many Germans had the idea at all that Strauss could be the savior in an emergency. The question was formulated in such a way that possible secret followers of Strauss would feel encouraged to confess in favor of their idol: Please imagine that the situation has deteriorated in a crisis-like way, be it because war is threatening to break out in Europe or because several severe acts of terror have taken place. Decisive measures have to be taken, and many would say, we need a strong man on top. Who would be better suited to act determinedly in such a situation to avoid a catastrophe, Helmut Schmidt or Franz Josef Strauss?

Result: 50 of 100 questioned named Schmidt, 43 of 100 named Strauss. But more than other questions, these answers depend on party preference. Strauss in an emergency as the strong man and savior--this idea is limited to CDU/CSU voters.

In view of the hotbeds of conflict in the Arab world, events can be imagined which would frighten federal citizens even more than the invasion of the Russians in Afghanistan, the anarchy of the ayatollah in Iran and the smoldering energy crisis. But whatever may happen, it can be ruled out that a majority will ever hope for Strauss as "the strong man."

If the outcome of the elections this year will be as expected, the candidate for chancellor in 1984 will be neither Strauss nor Kohl: The Union parties never have sent a loser a second time into the race. If no new star appears, Lower Saxony's Minister President Ernst Albrecht will be appointed.

Emnid's figures indicate that with the Lower Saxonian as candidate the chances of the Union would have been considerably greater this year than they are now with the Bavarian. Albrecht is more popular than the Union's earlier and present candidates for chancellor, if sympathies are measured by the plus and minus scale. The figures indicate 1.0 for Albrecht, 0.7 for Kohl, and 0.2 for Strauss.

The question with regard to Albrecht's chances as a candidate for 1984 is fictitious, but the answers are nevertheless informative. The Emnid text: If in 4 years, in 1984, Helmut Schmidt and Franz Josef Strauss did not enter the Bundestag election campaign as top candidates, the present defense minister, Hans Apel, and the present minister president of Lower Saxony, Ernst Albrecht, would be the SPD or CDU/CSU candidates for chancellor. Assuming this were the case already and you would have to vote directly, for which one of the two would you decide, for Apel as SPD candidate for chancellor, or Albrecht as CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor?

Result: 48 of 100 questioned for Albrecht, 43 of 100 for Apel. The Lower Saxonian also found followers on the side of the opposition: 14 of 100 SPD voters would rather see him than Apel in the chancellor's office.

The man who prevented Albrecht from running as candidate for chancellor in 1980 and who is running himself, is so far the first politician who has made a prognosis for 1984. Strauss: "If we will not win in 1980, we will not win in 1984 either."

'GLOOM' SEEN PERVADING FRANCO-AFRICAN SUMMIT

[Philippe Decraene report: "A Gloomy Atmosphere"]

[Text] Nice--Rarely in previous Franco-African conferences has there been such a pronounced gulf between the optimism of the spokesmen and the almost unanimous gloom of those taking part in the Nice conference. The speakers who in full session evoked the disastrous economic situation in most African states or the catastrophic consequences of natural disasters affecting the poorest states have constantly been echoed behind the scenes by fundamentally pessimistic conversations on the development of the fighting in Chad.

Colonel Kamougue, vice president of the National Unity Transition Government (GUNT), rejecting the statements made the previous day by Chad Higher Education Minister Abba Siddick (original FROLINAT) told us Friday: "There is only one Chadian delegation in Nice. I am its leader officially appointed by the Chadian president. All the others are merely tourists and their statements commit nobody but themselves. Moreover, I am the only representative allowed into the conference hall. Abba Siddick is indulging in irresponsible intellectual speculation. Given that he is still a GUNT minister I am surprised that he can be present here without permission from President Goukouni, who appointed me to represent him."

Questioned on the existence of a "Libyan threat" in Ndjamena, Colonel Kamougue told us: "In the past I have denounced the Libyan threat but now I wonder. Of course, I do not rule out the possibility that there are Libyan troops in Chad. However, I wonder whether there is not some confusion, whether deliberate or not, between Chadian elements favorable to Libya and truly Libyan elements."

On the question of the withdrawal of the French troops our interlocutor told us: "I am surprised by France's decision, but the French Government is sovereign. In any case, as far as I am concerned, I think that it would have been wiser to negotiate this withdrawal and plan it jointly."

Message From Hissein Habre

Thursday [8 May] Michel Froud, secretary for political affairs at the Chad Foreign Ministry, gave Mr Georgy, secretary for African and Madagascan affairs at the Quai d'Orsay, a message from Hissein Habre to Mr Giscard d'Estaing. Mr Froud said: "Mr Goukouni no longer represents anything inasmuch as he no longer has 11 politico-military factions at his disposal. He has sacked three ministers and has not replaced them."

Chad's neighbors--the Central African Republic, the Congo, Zaire and Gabon--are worried at the risk of the disorders spreading to them. As most senior participant at the conference in terms of age and as interim OAU chairman, [Senegal President] Senghor, who takes the Soviet penetration of Africa as his main concern, would like French policy in central Africa to be less ambiguous, as would many of his African peers.

On the fringe of the conference some 10 organizations, which have combined to form a liaison committee for black African workers in France, have held two press conferences to draw attention to the living conditions of emigres in France and to try to persuade the heads of state to include this question on their agenda. Moreover, Togolese oppositionists made door-to-door calls and dsitributed posters hostile to [Togo President] General Eyadema until the police made them return to Paris.

The only optimistic element was the speech made Friday by Cooperation Minister Robert Galley who indicated that the funds placed at his disposal since the Kigali [Rwanda] summit had increased 23 percent, rising from 3.5 billion to 4.3 billion, while the aid and cooperation fund program credits which represent one-fourth of his ministry's budget had increased 48 percent during the same period, rising from 633 million to 942 million.

Stevens' Talks with Giscard

AB122221 Freetown Domestic Service in English 2000 GMT 12 May 80

[Text] [Sierra Leone] President Siaka Stevens has held close talks with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing at the Prefecture Alpine-Maritime in Nice. The talks covered current Franco-Sierra Leone relations, with a particular review of development projects in Sierra Leone. Both presidents also reviewed political and diplomatic issues affecting world and African affairs. At the end of the talks, President Stevens formally invited President Giscard d'Estaing to pay a visit to Sierra Leone. President d'Estaing accepted the invitation with pleasure.

Addressing the seventh Franco-African summit at its final session over the weekend, President Stevens drew attention to a range of global economic questions which have as their centerpiece the North-South dialogue that has particular relevance to Third World African countries. These questions, President Stevens said, are of specific concern to Euro-African relations and to the trilogue--a concept that is as noble as it has direct bearing and is beneficial for the peace and survival of our world. President Stevens praised the format of the meeting, which, he said, embosses the summit with the confidence with which enlightened leadership and cooperation can prepare the international community to evolve a satisfactory system of living.

President Stevens expressed his delegation's delight at the wholesome band of the Franco-African dialogue which generates solidarity and cooperation in essential international areas. He said further that a logical and necessary step would be its extension to the trilogue--a concept which has the advantage of deriving meaningful collaboration and cooperation between the Arab-African and European worlds, given the diversity of resources and the complementarity of the interests of those three worlds. President Stevens said he looked forward to the effective contribution which the summit is making in the elaboration of the trilogue concept and invited the OAU members present to endeavor to be present at the 17th OAU summit in Freetown next July to give meaning and substance to the praiseworthy concept.

In winding up his address to the summit, Dr Stevens commended the French Government and President Valery Giscard d'Estaing to review the trilogue concept in an atmosphere of seriousness that augurs well for the Freetown summit. A thunderous applause went through the conference hall when President Stevens ended by saying in French: Thank you very much, Mr President. President Stevens is now on a short holiday in Europe.

VISITING IRAQI MINISTER ON OIL, EUROPEAN MIDEAST ROLE

LD121253 Paris LE FIGARO in French 2 May 80 p 4

[Emmanuel Peze report: "Resolving the Palestinian Crisis: Iraq Expects a French Initiative in Exchange for Its Oil"]

[Text] "We decided to ensure France's oil supply whatever the circumstances because of the comprehensive stance which France has adopted toward the Israeli-Arab conflict and the Palestinian problem on the one hand and the exchange of technology on the other," Iraqi Oil Minister Tayih 'Abd al-Karim told us yesterday in Paris.

"Oil is in fact a strategic commodity for us, and we use it as such both in our foreign policy and in our trade relations, to obtain the technology we are lacking. We have a contract to supply France with 13 million tons of oil; well, we are supplying Paris with 24 million tons of oil today, following a request by the French premier. But we could just as well have sold these millions of tons of oil to other countries, because the demand is very high. Intensification of this demand will doubtless lead to a catastrophe by the end of the eighties: a very significant shortage. Already the producing countries are sacrificing and wasting part of their production to avoid upsetting the balance between supply and demand. For us, therefore, it is a matter of sacrifice."

Iraq, which produces 3.4 million barrels of oil a day, is ready to exploit new wells to meet the demand, but it wants to be as careful as possible with this strategic commodity. In the near future Baghdad, just like the shah of Iran in his time, would like to see oil being used only for the production of other goods. Using the fuel in power stations seems like an aberration to a number of the oil-producing countries.

"We are waiting now for President Giscard d'Estaing's latest declarations to crystallize. We hope that France will influence the European countries and lead them to adopt a more just attitude to the Palestinian problem.

"France's influence should be exerted with the aim of leading Europe to find an alternative solution to the Camp David agreements, taking the PLO into account. This new solution could be found by means of consultations between the European and Arab countries, in order to lead us to unify our position."

A New Yalta

In fact Baghdad firmly believes that it is still possible for the Europeans to make a comeback in force to the Gulf region, so as to escape from the grasp of the two superpowers.

"Europe's interests in the Arab world," 'Abd al-Karim says, "are far more significant than those of the United States. Eighty percent of the oil consumed by Europe comes from the Gulf, where two-thirds of the world's black gold reserves are located, so a new Yalta is being prepared in this region," the Iraqi minister asserts. "Americans and Soviets are preparing to share out the region."

Baghdad asserts that the United States is merely taking advantage of the Afghanistan affair to assert its military position in the region. For Iraq, which has signed a 15-year friendship treaty with the USSR and whose armaments are for the most part Soviet, the Afghan affair is painful but delicate. Certainly Iraq condemned the Soviet intervention, but it remains moderate in its proposals.

"We do not intend to give the mojahedin military assistance. We do not believe that the military solution is the only one; we must succeed in convincing Moscow by negotiation," the Iraqi oil minister asserts.

This attitude of principle, the optimism shown by Baghdad and its hope of convincing the USSR can be explained in one way only: Iraq wants to avoid upsetting its broad options. So far these have allowed it to implement a spectacular economic development. Baghdad believes in and preaches economic development as the only way to make the Arab world powerful on a long-term basis. The Iraqis' chief idea is to prepare for the post-oil period. It is with this avowed aim that Baghdad insists on developing nuclear energy: This is part of the "technology exchange" in which France is participating. "We have asked for France's assistance in constructing a new nuclear station to produce electricity," the Iraqi minister also said yesterday.

LD MONDE COMMENTS ON CARTER'S PHILADELPHIA SPEECH

[Editorial: "A Blocked Policy"]

[Text] The major foreign policy speech delivered in Philadelphia by President Carter merely sums up and repeats the existing elements of U.S. diplomacy. Giving it a special although not new tone, he defined it implicitly as the search for a detente which would be totally divorced from appeasement. Detente itself, Mr Carter said, must be based on deterrence and U.S. military superiority. In any case, judging from Mr Carter's speech, we are not about to see a revival of East-West negotiations, and one wonders what the new secretary of state, Edmund Muskie, and Mr Gromyko will be able to usefully discuss when they meet in Vienna next week. Mr Carter thinks that the intervention in Afghanistan is an attack which ultimately threatens the neighboring countries and "poses the most serious strategic challenge to the free world since the beginning of the cold war." The USSR must not think that this flagrant violation of the unwritten laws of detente will gradually be forgotten and that it can accumulate the advantage of expansion by force and the advantages of peaceful cooperation with the nations of the free world.

Afghanistan therefore closes the prospects opened by SALT II. Similarly, in Iran the hostages affair makes it impossible to define a policy which is not entirely dominated by the priority given to securing their release. U.S. policy i completely blocked in these two major areas. However, as Mr Carter recalled, perhaps without enough emphasis, there are other extremely important areas in foreign policy which present problems calling for urgent solutions. First, the U.S. President mentioned the strengthening of economic and political solidarity among the allies as being the "cornerstone of our foreign policy," since it is this which can ensure that world order does not sink into "chaos." Second, there is the establishment of constructive relations with the Third World. The Israeli-Egyptian negotiations on self-determination on the West Bank and the need to pursue these efforts come only in third place.

In short, U.S. diplomacy's agenda remains full. The question is whether the burden posed by Afghanistan and the hostages leaves it enough freedom for action and innovation in order to carry out original work elsewhere. There is some doubt as to whether they do, if only because these two hotbeds of crisis directly affect the Persian Gulf--a vital "lifeline" for the West's oil supplies. In this connection Mr Carter left no shadow of doubt: Any "external attempt" to jeopardize the "status quo" in this region would be regarded as an attack on the United States and would be countered by all available means including the use of force, However, the danger may not only come from outside. Did President Carter not describe Iran as a country more or less adrift politically?

As for Europe, it is once again urged to close ranks and not believe that its geographical position permits it to bury its head in the sand in the face of Soviet pressures in some part of the world. However, although the United States, through its President, has just handed out criticism and lessons in good conduct, some quite deliberate, it puts forward no initiative capable of clearing the horizon or making it more attractive to support the leadership it exercises more by the nature of things than by the nature of its imagination.

TERRORIST SUSPECTS CHARGED IN MILAN JUDGES' SLAYINGS

AU100940 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 10 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 10 (ANSA)--Six terrorist suspects arrested in Turin Thursday night have been charged with the slayings of Judges Emilio Alessandrini and Guido Galli. Both magistrated were assassinated in Milan, Alessandrini on January 29, 1979 and Galli on March 19, and their slayings were claimed by the "Prima Linea (Front Line)" urban guerrilla organization.

Two of the six suspects, 20-year-old Claudia Zan and 24-year old Giuseppina Sciarilli, declared themselves "political prisoners" upon their arrest.

Meanwhile, the "Prima Linea" hideout where the two women were arrested reportedly provided investigators with valuable clues for their probes as well as a considerable amount of weapons. According to widespread reports, one of leaders of the Turin-based subversive organization was among the fifteen suspects picked up by police in an earlier roundup on Thursday. The identity of the alleged "Prima Linea" chief has not been disclosed. On Friday, nine more suspects were arrested in northern Bergamo on charges of belonging to subversive organizations.

DC OFFICIAL CATTIN'S SON RUMORED TO BE TERRORIST

AU121632 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 12 May 80

[Text] Turin, May 12(ANSA)--Italian Christian Democrat Party (DC) Deputy Secretary Carlo Donat Cattin's 28-year-old son has been indicated in press leaks as one of Judge Emilio Allesandrini's killers. The magistrate was slain in Milan on January 29, 1979 by the "Prima Linea (Front Line)" urban guerrilla organization.

The Italian magistracy has neither confirmed nor denied insistent press reports that Marco Donat Cattin has an arrest warrant over his head for membership in an armed subversive organization. His father and mother, from whom he has been estranged for the past two years, have requested a hearing from local investigating magistrates.

Leaks about the younger Donat Cattin's alleged subversive activities have been mounting in the press since last Wednesday. As soon as word got out about his suspected terrorist connections, his father tendered a resignation from his party office to "DC" Secretary Flaminio Piccoli, who turned it down and confirmed his full trust in the deputy secretary.

The accusation that Donat Cattin was one of Alessandrini's killers came from 23-year-old Roberto Sandalo, a university student jailed last week for the Alessandrini slaying. Police were put on Sandalo's track by former "Red Brigades" leader Patrizio Peci, whose confessions since his arrest February 20 have provided investigators with valuable tips about Italy's urban guerrilla network.

Alleged Role in Bergamo

[Text] Bergamo May 12 (ANSA)--The Christian Democrat Party official [Carlo Donat Cattin's] son is allegedly being sought for a number of terrorist attacks carried out in 1977 in this Lombard city not far from Milan. Unconfirmed reports circulating here indicated that arrest warrants have been issued against Marco Donat Cattin and another alleged terrorist, Michele Viscardi.

Bergamo judicial officials declined to comment on the reports, but the names of the two youths are included in the wanted list.

In 1977 Bergamo was the site of a round of terrorist attacks against Carabinieri police barracks and real estate agencies. One attack in particular made front-page headlines in the national papers after terrorists devastated the Dalmine Barracks with machine gun fire and hand grenades.

PCE, FLN RECORD 'VERY PROFOUND AGREEMENT' IN TALKS

LD121405 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 7 May 80 p 9

[Unattributed interview with PCE Executive Committee member Jaime Ballesteros: "Full Agreement Between Spanish Communists and Algerian National Liberation Front (FLN)"]

[Text] Communist Deputies Ballesteros and Palomares returned from Algeria last week, having had important talks with the FLN. There is no need to talk at length about the importance of our country's relations with Algeria: Suffice it to say that Algeria is a key country in the entire North African region and particularly in the Mediterranean, that it is one of the most prominent members of the nonaligned movement, that it carries on a large amount of trade with Spain--gas and oil are two of Algeria's main sources of wealth--and that these economic relations could be much greater still. With regard to relations between the Spanish Communists and the FLN, the party of the Algerian revolution, they have always been excellent and this visit by the PCE delegation has confirmed this once more. Our first question to Jaime Ballesteros was on this very topic.

[Question] What did you talk about in Algeria, and what is the state of relations between the parties?

[Answer] The conversations were very broad: We discussed the main issues of the international situation, and our viewpoints coincided on the essential points--primarily on detente, in connection with which both sides are concerned at the delicate nature of the world situation and agree on the need for initiatives to ward off the threat of cold war. As very prominent members of the nonaligned movement, they are very worried by the whole series of recent events aggravating the international situation and clearly harming the nonaligned countries, placing in a delicate situation the unity of assessment of the nonaligned countries, which constitute a decisive element on the world scene and a decisive element for peace.

Concern Among Nonaligned

[Question] You mentioned a similarity of viewpoints on recent events. Were there no major differences, however?

[Answer] No--and I would even say that the agreement was very profound. All the analyses which both sides gave of the situation were very similar. Of course, they stress their position within the nonaligned movement and the serious problems which these events are causing.

[Question] Are you referring partly to Afghanistan?

[Answer] Yes, partly to Afghanistan.

[Question] You discussed the need for initiatives to facilitate detente. What specific initiatives are these?

[Answer] We analyzed the topic of the coming CSCE meeting. Connected with the conference is the problem of the Mediterranean and of the European countries' participation in the conference. The Algerians emphasize--rightly, we believe--that European security problems must be tied in with Mediterranean problems. Both European wars this century have also been wars in the Mediterranean, and any hypothetical conflict would affect all the littoral countries. Similarly, a serious conflict between non-European Mediterranean countries has immediate implications for Europe. European and Mediterranean security cannot be separated. They believe that the non-European countries' participation in the CSCE must be a prominent one and that Mediterranean problems must occupy a very important place.

[Question] What is the PCE's position in this regard?

[Answer] We definitely support this stance on the littoral countries' presence not being relegated to a subordinate position and on its constituting an active involvement in all the conference's work. This can only contribute to theinterests of security in Europe. Spain can understand this more easily, being itself a European and a Mediterranean country. We also agreed with the Algerians that Spain has a very weighty role to play with respect to Africa and the Arab world. We agreed to work intensively in this direction.

[Question] You cannot have failed to mention the Sahara among the present issues affecting the zone's security.

[Answer] We agreed in our analysis of the Saharan situation that the Spanish Government must adopt a clearer and more active stance with regard to achieving full Saharan independence and recognizing the POLISARIO Front. They can very readily distinguish between the Spanish people--who express solidarity with the Sahara--and the democratic forces on the one hand, and the government's attitude on the other. The Saharan people are progressing from victory to victory in both the military and the political and diplomatic fields, and at present a great danger is posed by the attempts to internationalize the conflict through U.S. aid to Morocco. This would constitute a danger to the entire region and even to Spain, especially in a situation in which we must be very careful not to exacerbate the world's conflicts.

[Question] This visit must have produced specific forecasts regarding the development of relations between the parties.

[Answer] Santiago Carrillo has been invited to Algeria, during which he will have talks with President of the Republic Chadli Bendjedid. This visit will strengthen friendship between the parties. At the same time we have invited an FLN delegation to come to Spain--an invitation which they accepted. This visit will take place soon.

SUAREZ DEFENDS GOVERNMENT POSITION, DENIES UCD 'DISINTEGRATION'

LD121355 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 7 May 80 pp 1, 16

[Pablo Sebastian dispatch: "Suraez: 'Nobody Within the Union of the Democratic Center (UCD) Is Capable of Splitting the Party'"]

[Excerpts] Riyadh--Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez said in Riyadh yesterday that he is aware that the Spanish public has the impression that the government has not responded positively to the problems facing Spain. Looking tired and with a note of bitterness in his voice, during a lengthy conversation with Spanish journalists the prime minister said that from now on he will not govern alone and that he is "unwilling to remain silent in view of the many serious charges presently being levelled against him and his government. Adolfo Suarez, who mentioned several times the fatigue and the problems which his position brings him, said that he did not believe that "there is anyone within the UCD capable of splitting the party" so as to bring the government down.

Prime Minister Suarez said: "I am absolutely determined to speak out more. My reticence has almost always been misconstrued. I have tried my utmost to prevent tensions and perhaps I have been wrong; but it does seem to me that it was not absolutely essential to cause excessive confrontations in our present political situation." "I am not prepared to remain silent any longer in view of the many serious charges that have been regularly levelled; and I will give satisfactory replies in each case and on every occasion," the prime minister added, commenting at another juncture, and with an almost threatening tone, that from now on he will have a more active public life. [paragraph continues]

"I will attend functions and give regular talks and statements to both the media and parliament."

Suarez said: "Do they really believe that I am clinging to power? Do they not realize that sometimes I feel tired and depressed? By now I have experienced all the possible vanities of public power." In answer to the question of "who is forcing you to stay?" Suarez said: "Nobody, it is true. But I also have a large responsibility to honor, and, furthermore, I can point to my lawful election."

This was the final point in a dialogue which ended with Suarez' explicit confirmation that he will change his form of government. The prime minister said of this possibility: "Yes, yes, of course." He mentioned his desire to address the public and the UCD Standing Committee's involvement in political tasks, though he specified that this committee would not interfere in government affairs. "Government responsibilities are the government's alone," Suarez said, repeating on several occasions that "if I were to speak out, would I say this? Better that I do not; I will write it in my memoirs," as if announcing possible revelations about his government activity and the situation within his center party.

The political dialogue proceeded from the following three-part question: What is happening within the UCD? How did the crisis arise? What will happen at the 20 May debate? Suarez gave a clear, orderly reply. With regard to the UCD he said that he had repeated until he was tired of doing so that the UCD's internal tensions are logical in a democratic party, but that the party is united and that its policy is in line with the mandate issued by the 1978 congress. He acknowledged the existence of differing interpretations of the party's general policies, but said that they were not causing a disintegration of the center team and stressed that consultations had been held with UCD representatives and the Standing Committee when the government was formed. The prime minister added that he did not believe "anyone in the UCD is capable of splitting the party to form a government with other parties," partly because that would imply moving against their own voters.

Does Not Foresee Coalition

At another juncture Suarez said that the UCD does not intend to govern in a coalition with any other party and that it has not formed a parliamentary pact with the Catalan minority or with the democratic coalition. He added that the UCD will continue to be a center party and that it will not veer to the left or right. "It cannot be asserted that any one group of people represents the progressive trend within the UCD," Suarez said, referring to the Social Democrats, adding that there are three former Social Democrats within the government, namely Arias-Salgado, Gamir and Gonzalez Seara.

He also said that, if several prominent UCD figures are not in the government, it is because they do not want to be, do not consider it opportune or because he himself opposed it. He implied that Fernandez Ordonez accepted the portfolio of relations with the EEC but that he changed his mind a few hours later, apparently explaining that his wife disapproved of the decision.

Opposes Debate Broadcast

In connection with the 20 May parliamentary debate, Suarez said that the quality of this session will depend on the attitude and sense of responsibility of those taking part. He referred to remarks made by Felipe Gonzalez concerning the government's possible fall, and said that this is only possible if a motion of censure is presented to and passed by parliament.

DENMARK

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE TO ACCEPT MOSCOW INVITATION IF FRG DOES

LD091449 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 7 May 80 p 7

[Jens Carl report: "Danish Yes to Olympic Games But: We Are Still Waiting for the German Decision"]

[Excerpts] The outcome of the Danish Olympic Committee's general meeting yesterday evening in Idraettens Hus in Copenhagen was that Denmark will take part in the Olympic games this summer, if West Germany takes part. If the West Germans do not accept the invitation, the Danish Olympic Committee will hold an extraordinary general meeting since a new situation will have arisen.

The board of the Danish Olympic Committee adopted the following resolution at the general meeting with 48 votes in favor, none against and 13 abstentions:

"The Danish Olympic Committee at its general annual meeting decided to participate in the 1980 Olympic games in Moscow and Tallin. The Executive Board is empowered to take any further steps necessary."

Culture Minister--and therefore sports minister--Lise Ostergaard also took part in the meeting and addressed the meeting on the subject of the Olympic games. After several delegates had said that politicians the world over are applying pressure on the athletes and using them for cheap political ends, she said:

"The Danish Government has neither wanted nor needed to put pressure on sportsmen and women. Sport is a part of our culture and our society and must face up to problems like all other citizens of our country.

"We have clearly dissociated ourselves from the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan without exploiting anyone and it is still up to Danish athletics to make up its own mind. However, it has been made clear at this meeting that much depends on the West German decision on 15 May, and on how many countries--in the event of a West German boycott--follow suit. If Denmark is the only member of the EEC or NATO to attend the games, it is possible that our partners might begin to doubt our reliability. And it has also pleased me to hear Danish Athletics Association Chairman Svend O. Hansen question the sporting value of a mutilated Olympiad. We intend to keep in close touch with the Danish Olympic Committee in the immediate future, and the resolution that has been adopted leaves room for a reassessment at an extraordinary meeting of the Danish Olympic Committee," the culture minister said.

GOVERNMENT MAY SUPPORT EC INITIATIVE ON CHANGING RESOLUTION 242

["F.B." report: "Denmark Will Support EEC Initiative on the Middle East"]

[Text] Denmark is prepared to support, on a number of conditions, an EEC initiative to change UN Resolution 242 so that, instead of referring to the Palestinians as a refugee problem, it will contain a demand for Palestinian self-government.

Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE that such a move has been the subject of unofficial discussions in EEC circles as one of several possibilities in the event that negotiations between Israel, Egypt and the United States on self-government for the Palestinians reached no satisfactory outcome before 26 May. This date is laid down in the Camp David agreement as the deadline for a conclusion to negotiations on the question.

Kjeld Olesen stresses that Denmark has not taken the initiative in the matter, but is prepared to support any attempt to bring about a reasonable solution to the problem. If changes in the resolution are discussed this will mean, according to the foreign minister, that the wording of the resolution will be brought more into line with what has been said both in the United Nations and in the EEC by the Scandinavian foreign ministers concerning the Palestinian problem. "We can decide after 26 May whether it is appropriate to suggest changes in the resolution," Kjeld Olesen said.

Kjeld Olesen said in an interview with a Lebanese weekly Monday morning how it is important to stress that what Europe does ought to be "more or less in agreement" with American, Israeli and Egyptian views. Denmark considers the PLO the most representative Palestinian organization, but has not given official recogntion to the PLO because it did not want to interfere in negotiations, and because the PLO would demand the dissolution of Israel.

"In a sober assessment of the situation the PLO is the most representative Palestinian organization," Kjeld Olesen said.

UN Resolution 242 is the basis for Israeli and Egyptian negotiations on the occupied Arab areas. It was adopted by the Security Council in 1967.

ECONOMIC AGREEMENT SEES GOVERNMENT 'SAFE FOR 20 MONTHS'

LD120919 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 6 May 80 p 1

[Lisbeth Knudsen report: "Mini-Agreement Makes Everything More Expensive and Saves Anker Jorgensen: Value Added Tax Increases to 22 Percent From 1 July"]

[Text] The Social Democratic minority government is safe for the next 20 months after committing itself to steady cooperation on economic policy with the Radical Liberal Party, the Democratic Center Party, and the Christian People's Party.

This is one of the results of the agreement that the four parties reached yesterday. The agreement means an increase in value added tax which will rise to 22 percent from 1 July, an extra 1 billion kroner from duties on energy, and tax increases in 1981 that will bring in an extra 1 billion kroner. It also contains a number of measures designed to revitalize Danish industry, including the tax relief and support schemes worth billions of kroner. Lastly, the agreement includes measures to achieve savings in public spending of 8 billion kroner in 1981.

Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen will inform the Folketing of the contents of this new political settlement which will remain in force until the end of 1981. The parties which agreed on the settlement have a Folketing majority of only one seat. The first draft bills resulting from the agreement will be introduced in the Folketing today; the total number of bills is at present expected to total 17. Initial discussion of the bills is expected to begin either this Friday or next Tuesday.

The agreement does not contain a clause dealing expressly with cooperation among the four parties, but Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen confirms that such an agreement exists.

"We have reached an agreement on economic policy primarily for 1981. It is therefore the government's view that, once an agreement has been reached, important decisions contrary to the spirit of the agreement will not be taken. There is no old-fashioned, so-called 'mousetrap clause' in the agreement since it is not an agreement covering a lengthy period. And the economic situation could also make it necessary for the parties to meet to solve other problems," Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen said yesterday at a press conference.

There is already much for the four parties to discuss. A number of points in the agreement will only be given final shape in later bills, and the details of these have not been discussed in advance by the parties. Definite proposals for 912 million out of the 8 billion kroner savings plan have yet to be formulated. There will be negotiations with employers and trade union organizations on the shaping of significant parts of the plan for industry and employment which are, therefore, not finalized yet. No solution has yet been found to the problem of the position of defense spending within the general economic framework for 1981. And no agreement on a renewal of the annual wage settlement for 1981 has been reached, apart from an appeal to the two sides of industry to find a solution themselves. And, as yet, no economic estimates of the effects of the crisis agreement have been made.

COMMONS APPROVES LEGISLATION ON IRANIAN SANCTIONS

LD130156 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0007 GMT 13 May 80

[By Tom McMullan, PA political staff]

[Text] MPs tonight gave a comfortable 145 majority to the first stage of legislation enabling the government to impose sanctions against Iran. The Iran (temporary powers) bill is due to complete all its stages in a lengthy Commons sitting tomorrow. This will enable Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington to join the other Common Market foreign ministers in Naples at the weekend to discuss what sanctions should be imposed against Iran if the American hostages are not released by then. Much of tonight's debate, which was listened to from the gallery by American Ambassador Mr Kingman Brewster centered on how useful the legislation would be in securing the release of the hostages. But in the end the government was never in danger of defeat, winning by 230 votes to 85. These figures meant that barely half the Commons voted.

Labour MPs in particular argued that sanctions would harm trade and employment prospects in the constituencies. The Labor Party allowed a free vote and Shadow Ministers Mr Denis Healey, Mr Michael Foot, Mr Roy Hattersley, Mr John Silkin, and Mr Stanley Orme voted against. Among shadow ministers who voted in favour were Mr Peter Shore, Mr Eric Varley, Mr David Own, and Mr Merlyn Rees. Tories were also divided but less obviously so. Tory business managers estimated that only a handful of their supporters abstained. One Tory backbencher who voted against the government was Mr Jock Bruce-Gardyne. Mr Harvey Proctor was a Tory MP who declared in advance that he was abstaining. Tories were not under a mandatory three line whip. They were told they would not need to attend if they were paired. This lighter whipping arrangement was seen as a means of disguising the size of the revolt. The house rose at 1242 a.m.

LIBYA TO WITHDRAW 4 NATIONALS FROM LONDON EMBASSY

LD121658 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1524 GMT 12 May 80

[Text] Libya has agreed to withdraw four nationals connected with their London mission "who have been involved in activities incompatible with their functions," Foreign Office Minister of State Mr Douglas Hurd announced in Commons. The government expects three of them now in UK to leave within the next few days. But there was no evidence that the four Libyans are "directly implicated" in murders being investigated by the police, Mr Hurd added. "The government has for some time been concerned about statements and activities by Libyan Government officials which amount to political intimidation of Libyans resident in this country," Mr Hurd said. "Our objective throughout has been to show we wish to maintain good relations with Libya but that harassment of Libyan expatriates here must stop." Libya had said it wanted improved relations with the UK said Mr Hurd. "We share this desire, but our relations cannot improve unless the campaign of harassment ends immediately."

"We are determined that London should not be a battleground for Middle East factions," said Mr Hurd. He was supported by Shadow Foreign Secretary Mr Peter Shore who said the murder of two distinguished Libyans in London and Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's "brazen threat" to murder Libyans who did not return home was "a challenge no government could fail to meet."

OFFICIALS DENY REPORTS OF PLANNED KIPRIANOU REPLACEMENT

Government Spokesman

NC121220 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 12 May 80

[Text] The government spokesman today denied press reports according to which Greek Cypriot negotiator Ioannidhis is said to be involved in backstage moves for the ousting and replacement of the president of the republic. The government spokesman said that Mr Ioannidhis has already denied any involvement in any backstage moves aimed at ousting President Kiprianou and holding early presidential elections.

The spokesman stressed: I have been asked by Mr Ioannidhis himself to state categorically that he has not contacted or approached any persons, faction or organization for the sake of promoting himself as a candidate for president of the republic. Besides, the spokesman added, there is no question of any such thing. I refer here to a recent statement that Mr Kiprianou does not intend to withdraw from the office of the president.

Negotiator Ioannidhis, Others

NC120604 Nicosia I DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek 12 May 80 p 1

[Excerpts] AKEL circles have described as absolutely unfounded yesterday's press reports alleging that backstage consultations have been held with the aim of conducting early presidential elections prior to the parliamentary elections. At the same time, Mr Y. Ioannidhis, minister to the president and representative of the Greek side at the intercommunal talks, has described as completely false the reports that he allegedly agreed to become the replacement candidate for Mr Kiprianou.

On his part, Mr Ioannidhis has also denied another press report alleging that he had a meeting with Archbishop Khrisostomos on the same issue.

At the same time, circles close to Mr Azinas and PEK [Pan-Agrarian Union of Cyprus] have also denied the allegations and stressed that the press reports are aimed at "causing confusion among the country's democratic forces, a fact that favors the extreme rightwing and its stooges."

Archbishop Comments

NC130715 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 13 May 80 p 8

[Text of 12 May statement by Archbishop Khrisostomos]

[Text] We are sorry because a profane attempt to disgrace and undermine persons, institutions and the situation has recently been noticed in Cyprus. We believe that behind this attempt there are perfidious goals which are "encouraged" by foreign circles. The aim is to cultivate a climate of confusion, unrest and strife among the peoples, intensify their agony and generally hurt and undermine their morale, thus creating conditions that would allow the imposition of an unacceptable solution to our national issue.

In light of this situation we are obliged to call on the people to become conscious of these crucial times, reforge their unity and be vigilant to eliminate, through their unity and resistance, the crafty designs of our country's enemies.

PAPER REPORTS ESTABLISHMENT OF RAPPROCHEMENT COMMITTEE

NC080702 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 8 May p 1

[Text] The Cyprus Government has set up a special committee which will deal with questions of rapprochement with the Turkish Cypriot community.

The government has already declared its support for a policy of rapprochement between the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities but there have been recently several calls that there should be better coordination for implementation of various measures toward this end.

A statement yesterday announced that the president of the republic "with a view to strengthening the efforts being made for a rapprochement between the two communities--a policy adopted by the government as helpful for the struggle of survival of Cyprus--has established a "rapprochement committee" which will handle the whole matter in cooperation with the committee established by the (trade and political) organisations."

EXORMISI: LISSARIDHIS SCORES WESTERN 'SOLUTION,' AID

AT111557 Athens EXORMISI in Greek 11 May 80 p 12

[Article by Vasos Lissaridhis, chairman of EDEK, the Cyprus Socialist Party: "New Plan for Turning Cyprus Into a Neocolony"]

[Text] Turkish intransigence in Cyprus--which has intensified as we forecast--has led the dialogue into a deadlock. Turkish officials state that whatever Turkey has conquered by force of arms will not be handed over under the "pen". Denktas openly proclaims that his basic goal is to establish two separate state entities.

--Waldheim, instead of standing as the defender of principles and UN resolutions, is unfortunately being turned into a dangerous bureaucrat who makes the criminal and his victim equal and who in certain instances, in order to blackmail the victim, resorts to views which are contrary to the principles he undertook to uphold. Unfortunately, it must be stated that nothing was done officially to prevent Waldheim from changing from a Pontius Pilate into a Caiaphas.

--The true intentions of those who inspired the notorious U.S.-Canadian-British plan became even more evident after the recent slanderous statements of the British official, Sir Ian Gilmour. For them there was no invasion but an arrival. There is no occupation but only a presence. There are no dead, missing and refugees but only a game of words. After this monstrous diagnosis they offer their "services" for a Cyprus Camp David. It is apparent what its goals will be.

How is this "revelation" viewed by the supporters of the line that a solution will be provided by the West? The question answers itself. In essence they also support a solution with two separate entitles since in Cyprus there is neither invasion, nor occupation but only differences between the two communities. Once again this reveals the role of the domestic political bridgeheads.

At the same time the method, time and content of the exchange of visits between Kliridhis and the pseudo-prime minister of the occupied [territory] is not unrelated to more general developments.

--Gilmour's statements and the subsequent wordage about new "lost opportunities" (the new plan will even be worse, Gilmour warns us) in the form of the U.S.-Canadian-British plan are aimed at undermining the people's morale and at preparing the psychological climate for acceptance of the foreign-presented partitionist plans. In this way the role of these bridgeheads becomes even more transparent.

--It is time to establish certain bitter truths which EDEK issued its warnings about a long time ago. It is time we laid down our perspectives on the basis of these conclusions.

--The talks are at a deadlock. It would be a dangerous delusion to believe that imperialism will become a friend of the people (and Gilmour must have dissolved delusions) or that Turkey will willingly abandon its expansionist plans or start a movement toward talks with a fundamental content for a solution which is based on UN resolutions, which Turkey votes against, as a goal.

Already certain Western countries are openly moving toward a new Camp David and they are assisted by the bridgehead circles. Recognition of the occupation situation, which for them is not an occupation but a friendly arrival and presence, is the basis of such a course.

--We must, therefore, turn directly toward virtual internationalization. We must appeal to the Security Council to denounce a situation which is already explosive and full of basic dangers. Even the committee--about which we had well-known reservations--should have been appointed by the end of March but has not been appointed while our own official side, which fought for its establishment, is silent.

--We must develop a more active campaign within the nonaligned movement and among other friendly areas and we must abandon dangerous delusions.

--We must coordinate our activities with other countries, particularly neighboring countries which face the same danger.

--We must systematically mobilize the Greek nation which is faced with dangers from the same sources as we do.

--We must directly address ourselves to the Turkish Cypriot masses which have the same interests as us and not to Denktas who, representing the Turkish Cypriot economic oligarchy, has an interest in erecting walls of separation and creating separate states. The Turkish Cypriot workers must realize that the enemy is imperialism and the occupation forces which serve imperialism, and that their own prospects for progress are related to the establishment of a fundamentally independent and territorially integrated Cyprus without foreign troops and bases.

--We must organize not only our defensive armament but also the civil guard. We must disperse the climate of fatalism and passivity which foreigners and locals so successfully cultivate and we must correctly create a militant climate. We have all the potential to resist foreign plans and foreign incursions if we organize correctly and if we create a broad patriotic front on the basis of this line.

EDEK will hold to this course without any doubts. The people have learned to have confidence in EDEK, which is the force for fundamental change. We will not write off either the fatherland or our rights. We will fight and we will win.

Our economy is being led to destruction. Then "foreign aid" might be considered to be the alleged only hope of survival. In this way the economy will be mortgaged and with it our political foundations will be destroyed. Some will then tell us that if this foreign aid is stopped we will collapse and that, therefore, we must accept the recommendations of the financiers of the Ian Gilmour type. We all know where they will lead us.

I warn that this is a well-prepared plan to convert Cyprus into a fundamental neocolony with the alleged consent of Cyprus itself since it will be unable to survive without this "aid."

TFSC FOREIGN MINISTER ATAKOL DEPARTS FOR ISLAMIC CONFERENCE

TA111153 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 11 May 80

[Text] Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Minister Kenan Atakol left Cyprus for Pakistan by air a while ago to attend the Islamic countries' foreign ministers conference to be held in Islamabad.

In a statement to reporters in Lefkosa [Nicosia] before his departure from the island, Atakol said that, during the conference, the Turkish Cypriot delegation will explain to Islamic countries the developments regarding the Cyprus problem and particularly the inhuman economic embargo imposed on the Muslim Turkish Cypriot community by both the Western and Eastern blocs in accordance with the Greek Cypriots' wishes.

Atakol said: We are going to attend the Islamic conference at a time when countries which claim that they are interested in the Cyprus problem, are familiar with it and want it to be solved humanely, are supporting the Greek Cypriot embargoes, which are depriving the Turkish Cypriot state of its livelihood. We will explain the truth to the Muslim brother countries.

Atakol noted that he will inform the conference that between 1963 and 1974 there were attempts to annihilate the Muslim Turkish Cypriot people through the use of arms and since 1974 the attempts to annihilate it through other means have continued. Atakol also said that he will ask the fraternal Muslim countries to help the Muslim Turkish Cypriot community, which is struggling against an outmoded Byzantine mentality.

Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Ministry Under Secretary Ozer Kora and Arab affairs desk chief Sait Erkin are accompanying Atakol on his visit. The Turkish Cypriot delegation will be headed by President Rauf Denktas, who will leave for Islamabad later.

The Cyprus issue and the problems of the Islamic countries are included in the agenda of the conference, which will begin on 17 May and continue until 21 May. The preparatory work for the conference will begin on 14 May. Atakol will head the delegation of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus during the preparatory work. Atakol and his delegation will leave for Islamabad via Karachi tomorrow after spending the night in Istanbul.

RALLIS COMMENTS ON GOVERNMENT POLICIES AT PRESS CONFERENCE

AT121241 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 12 May 80

[Text] The Council of Ministers convened this morning at 1030 [0730 GMT] for its first meeting under the chairmanship of Prime Minister Rallis. The meeting lasted about 1 hour during which the prime minister gave basic guidelines for the best implementation of the government tasks. At noon, Prime Minister Rallis gave a press conference for political editors from radio and television and the daily newspapers.

At the beginning of the interview Rallis said that he would try to establish meetings with journalists at regular intervals to brief them and, through them, the general public. Then, in reply to questions from reporters, the prime minister said that the government's policy statement will be made in the chamber about the middle of next week, most probably on Thursday, 22 May. He also stressed that no pressure was exerted by any side and no extortion was made regarding the formation of the new government. The government and the New Democracy party, he added, are always governed by the principle of democratic liberalism that was decided upon at the party's conference in Khalkidhiki and the government does not intend to deviate from this principle. New Democracy's credo, Rallis said, corresponds to the convictions of every democrat.

In reply to a question the prime minister said that the simple proportional electoral system means a lack of government and that we believe our country cannot accept this luxury of a lack of government. He also said that the financing of parties by the government budget means sacrificing other economic resources. Provided that this financing is decided upon, there must be--in any case--some control over the finances of political parties, Rallis said, adding that the government committee and the Council of Ministers will continue to convene at regular intervals. He made it clear that from now on Minister of Economics Evert will participate in the government committee.

Rallis also said that he will try to be present in the chamber during at least 1 of the 2 days devoted to interpellations. He also said that the government will be in close contact with the working classes so that there can be a dialogue, but this does not imply the government's submission to the views of the working classes.

EXORMISI ANALYZES RIGHTWING PROBLEMS, CALLS FOR ELECTIONS

AT111434 Athens EXORMISI in Greek 11 May 80 pp 1, 11

[Reportage by D. Marcudhas: "The Right in Total Decomposition--Internal Quarrels Within New Democracy--Immediate Elections Is the National People's Demand"]

[Excerpts] The composition of the "new" government of the right gives an in-depth picture of the compromises, the mutual concessions undertaken by the various factions and interests within "New Democracy" in their effort to maintain the party in authority and to avoid elections.

After a series of extortionist actions and attempts to undermine each other by the various groups, which came very close to breaking up "New Democracy", the "ultimate interests of the right and the establishment" imposed the final (?) solution of compromise and mutual tolerance between the groups.

Naturally all that happened and continues to happen on the "home front" of the government party would most certainly have been purely a family matter if it had no repercussions on our "national" affairs and our national economy. It is also a fact that the popular base of the largest rightwing party is shrinking more and more every day after the failure of the "New Democracy" governments during their 6-year administration of the country.

There is no doubt that the latest political developments--and this is the common conclusion of political observers in Athens--speed up with geometric precision the rate of failure of the "New Democracy" governments with catalytic effects upon our national affairs and economy, which are already in dire straits.

Irrespective of the compromises which are reached and the appointment of Rallis as prime minister, it is obvious that any "New Democracy" government, no matter which of its leading personalities is at the head, will pursue the same antipeople policy which the governments of the past 6 years have followed. This is because faithful implementation of an antipeople policy to serve the interests of large-scale capital and the foreign monopolies has already become the "trademark" of "New Democracy."

Any government which stems from today's majority of "New Democracy" in the chamber of deputies--a majority which is really artificial after the continued decline of the government party's popular base--will be a government with the forged credentials of a popular mandate.

It is an established and accepted fact--even by the leading "New Democracy" personalities --that today's chamber of deputies does not express the will of the people. Today's chamber of deputies, following the changing of positions taking place within the popular base, neither expresses nor does it represent the electorate.

This rift has now taken even greater dimensions since the decomposition which became obvious within the parliamentary group of "New Democracy."

Following this, a resort to the polls is a national peoples command today, so that the people can express their will.

The "new" Rallis government, however, will not be able to avoid a resort to the polls and an election confrontation with the forces of change.

Within only a short time, under the pressure of problems and national dead ends which were created by the governments of "New Democracy" as well as under the incessant hammer blows of the majority opposition party and the other parties, the Rallis government will be forced to give up its authority.

The decomposition which broke out with such intensity within the government majority party reached a point where the aspiring dauphins and their factions started to barter over sensitive sectors related to the country's own defense, such as the Ministry of National Defense itself.

Another compromise involved the appointment of Mitsotakis to a ministerial post and his taking over the Foreign Ministry. Mitsotakis was given this ministerial post--it was impossible for him to remain at the Ministry of Coordination after his repeated failures--in order to save face for the founder of "New Democracy", K. Karamanlis and to cover up the fiasco of his governmental "expansion." In this way Mitsotakis was "fixed up" with a basic sector--the Foreign Ministry--because his appointment to any other lesser post would have been a political slap at the former prime minister.

The architects of the compromises and mutual concessions, as well as of the final formula which was discovered in order to salvage the rightwing and to keep "New Democracy" as a government, were none other than Interior Minister Stratos--who is basically a member of the Averof faction--Minister to the Premier Stefanopoulos--who is with the Rallis faction--and Akhilleas Karamanlis to whose lively activities the election of the new prime minister is attributed.

Naturally, the forces which all of them represent also acted "with lightning speed." It must also be added here that the contribution of three newspaper editors to the formula discovered was not at all small. Thus the first move consisted of a Stratos visit to Rallis on Friday morning.

Stratos was among the first to disagree with Averof's tactics--his original demand that he ought to be the only member of his faction to be appointed to a ministerial post and that his friends should remain mere deputies--and he insisted that contrary to Averof's views and philosophy they ought to fight so that as many of their friends as possible should be given ministerial posts.

Right from the moment of Averof's defeat within the "New Democracy" parliamentary group, Stratos argued that "a clash with the other factions within 'New Democracy' must be avoided at all costs because, otherwise, we would reach elections sooner, at a time when PASOK [Panhellenic Socialist Movement] will sweep everything before it."

Stratos argued: "Above all else we must avoid elections." In this he was also supported by Stefanopoulos and A. Karamanlis.

Industrialist Stratos, who is known as a "good negotiator," bridged the differences in three hours (!) and later, with the help of K. Papakonstandinou, started preparing a list of those suitable for ministerial posts.

New disagreements broke out on Friday night after the list of ministers had been prepared when the Averof faction--acting through an as yet unknown mediator--demanded that a copy of the new prime minister's policy statement should be handed over to it 24 hours in advance. At present the position which Rallis will maintain on this demand is not known.

There is no doubt that the new government will be unable to stand up to the sudden explosion of problems and deadlocks which its own members have created for the country by participating in previous "New Democracy" governments. Very soon it will be forced to accept the only solution which could lead to a cleansing of the country's political affairs--a resort to the peoples will.

BRITAIN TO COOPERATE IN USE OF COAL AS ENERGY SOURCE

AT100905 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 9 May 80

[Text] After a recent governmental committee decision approving the introduction of coal into the country's energy system, the Ministry of Coordination issued instructions to DEI, the Public Power Corporation, to negotiate with British companies for the purchase of two thermoelectric power plants with a total strength of 707 megawatts. Negotiations will be carried out on the basis of a proposal submitted under the protocol for Greek-British cooperation which was signed in November 1979 during the visit of Coordination Minister Mitsotakis to London. This proposal was accompanied by extremely favorable financing conditions. At the same time the Ministry of Coordination also instructed the Bank of Greece to establish a joint stock company to act as an agent to guarantee the necessary supply coal under long-term contracts to be signed with various coal-producing countries. This same agent will also undertake construction of a coal port able to handle seagoing heavy tonnage ships. The security stockpile of coal will also be established near this port. Coal will be supplied from this port to DEI units and to Greek industry. Among the sites considered for the construction of the coal port together with the DEI installations, the island of Makronisos appears to offer the most advantages and it is considered the most suitable area.

The introduction of coal into our energy system permits a partial liberation from dependence upon oil. This can be achieved to a considerable amount which for the first 10 years is estimated at 25 percent. It also permits a cut in the cost of fuel imports since the cost per thermal unit of imported coal is half of the cost for a thermal unit of imported oil. On the basis of today's oil and coal prices the saving will amount to $250 million per annum. According to the estimates of the Ministry of Coordination the commencement of production of electric energy with the use of coal will start at the end of 1984 and the use of coal in industry, particularly in the cement industry, could start within 2 years.

The meeting between the Chairman of the London Chamber of Commerce and Industry Lord Jellicoe and DEI Governor Moisis was related to the above issues. During a press conference Lord Jellicoe stated that British industrialists are interested in developing commercial transactions with our country both on an interstate and a private level. During their talks in Athens, members of the London Chamber examined existing prospects for British participation in large-scale projects such as the Athens International Airport, the subway, the use of nuclear energy and improvement of communications and transport with particular emphasis on the Athens-Thesaloniki axis. The British goal is to equalize the balance of trade, to increase exports and to invest in Greek industry.

LEFTIST GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR BOMB BLASTS

AT121328 Athens TA NEA in Greek 12 May 80 p 16

[Text] ELA [Revolutionary Popular Struggle] has taken responsibility for the 20 incendiary bombs that explosed in Athens, Psikhiko and Khalandhri. The explosions occurred on Thursday night and early Friday morning and the Ministry of Public Order attributed them to the organization "Autonomous Nuclei." In a statement it sent to newspapers, ELA mentions among other things that "with their principal goal being the disorientation of the proletarians, the establishment forces in our country intend to have us deal with problems that anything but concern us with every means at their disposal (who will become president of their republic, when will the festival of the elections begin and so forth) instead of with those problems which they have created for us so they can control us." The statement lists the license plate numbers of the 20 cars under which the homemade incendiary bombs were placed.

LIBYAN STUDENTS, WORKERS TAKE OVER LIBYAN EMBASSY

WA121159 London REUTER in English 1129 GMT 12 May 80

[Text] Ankara, May 12, REUTER--About 100 Libyans living here today peacefully took over the Libyan Embassy, saying they were following the wishes of Libyan leader Colonel Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi and converting the embassy into a "people's bureau."

Some 100 students, workers and businessmen based in Ankara covered the embassy walls with portraits of Colonel al-Qadhdhafi before going inside with the permission of the embassy staff. They then held a meeting and formed a five-man people's committee to run the embassy. The Libyan ambassador to Turkey, Sa'ad ad-Din Abu Shuwayrib, attended the meeting but was not elected to the committee, a spokesman for the group told REUTER. Future meetings of the committee would decide whether the ambassador and the existing staff would be asked to stay on under the new system. If not, they were free to return to Libya, the spokesman said.

The spokesman said similar changes would be taking place in other Libyan embassies around the world, adding that Colonel al-Qadhdhafi had called for the change in the embassy structure. "Embassies and ambassadors represent government as a classic tool of power. Since no such government power exists in the Libyan Jamahiriyah, the Libyans in Turkey have converted the embassy into a people's bureau," the spokesman said.

CUMHURIYET OPPOSES U.S.-TURKISH DEFENSE COOPERATION AGREEMENT

NC121201 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 9 May 80 p 1, 9

["Observation" column by Ugur Mumcu: "Is This Ataturkism?"]

[Text] At this time when the joint defense cooperation agreement is on the agenda, we wish to remember Ataturk's words which fully describe the ingredients embedded in the foundations of our republic: We are not only trying to protect our freedom and independence from Western imperialists, but we are also trying to prevent Western imperialists from using the Turkish nation as a means to their imperialistic ends. We thus believe that we are doing a good service to mankind."

The defense cooperation agreement came into being at a time when Iran rejected U.S. leadership in the Middle East. The immoderate rise in the oil prices, the setback suffered by the Ba'th parties in Iraq and Syria and the satellite administrations set up in Pakistan and Afghanistan by the United States and the Soviet Union have greatly increased the importance of the joint defense cooperation agreement.

Can Turkey be one of the cornerstones of peace and security in the region amid such agitation and unsettled conditions? Behind the joint defense agreement lies the 1974 Cyprus intervention and the U.S. arms embargo that immediately followed it....

NATO is a "defense" organization set up to meet a possible Soviet onslaught. Turkey is a member of this organization which is under U.S. patronage. How can the arms embargo imposed on the Turkish Armed Forces be explained in light of these agreements and alliances? If an attack or an act of occupation is expected from the Soviet Union, how can this arms embargo be interpreted? And, if no Soviet attack is seriously feared, what then is the mission of the bases in Turkey? The most vital aspects of Turkish foreign policy, which appear to be so complex, are embedded in these questions.

If the Pentagon thought a Soviet attack was likely, the arms embargo should not have been imposed at all. The embargo signifies that such an attack is not considered likely. If that is the case, should not Turkey raise its voice against the heavy burden of responsibility laid on its shoulders--heavier than that of any other member of NATO?

Turkey gets less aid and credit from the United States than any other NATO country. NATO documents prove this. If this is true, what relation does this dependence and submission have to "the spirit of national struggle" and "national sovereignty" which forms the foundation of our republic?

The Middle East is filled with new disturbances, new conflicts and new revolutions. Strategists and planners on the other side of the ocean wish to use Turkey as a Trojan Horse against neighboring Islamic countries. This is common knowledge. Is Turkey preparing to assume duties as the guardian of the oil resources for the West in the Middle East, whose political geography will be redrawn in the near future, or will it diffuse new light in the region with its full consciousness of the value of independence. There is tangible proof that after the downfall of the shah in Iran, the United States is engaged in forming a new "secret CENTO" based on the Egyptian-Israeli-Turkish triangle. Though this has not yet been put on paper, it is clear that the United States seeks to create a new "bloc" on the basis of this triangle. The defense cooperation agreement, which we have signed with the United States and which is now before the Turkish parliament for ratification, appears to be one of the cornerstones of this triangle.

The concepts of "nationalism" and "Ataturkism" carry more weight now than ever before. It is so easy to eulogize the Turkish soldier, but is allowing part of our land to be used as a "base" against neighboring Islamic countries in a hot war--which is likely to break out in the future--compatible with Ataturkism, nationalism and the spirit of national struggle? How can we trust the U.S. policy which deprived the Turkish army of arms and equipment after our intervention in Cyprus?

Won't the bones of Mustafa Kemal who had upheld the banner of the "nationalist forces" and said, "We are not only trying to protect our freedom and independence against Western imperialists, but we are also trying to prevent Western imperialists from using Turkey as a means to their imperialistic ends," ache a little more each day?

ERKMEN LEAVES FOR BRUSSELS NATO MEETINGS, COMMENTS ON NOTAM

TA121720 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 12 May 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen has left for Belgium to attend the defense and foreign ministers special meeting of the NATO Defense Planning Committee to be held in Brussels on 14 May. In a statement to journalists at Esenboga Airport, Erkmen said that developments prior to the NATO ministerial committee spring term meeting to be held in Turkey between 25 and 27 June will be discussed. Erkmen said that from Brussels he will travel to Pakistan to attend the Islamic foreign ministers meeting to be held in Islamabad.

Commenting on the doubts expressed by various political circles regarding lifting Notam 714, Erkmen said: Jeopardizing Turkish rights is out of the question. No one will force Turkey to consent to unacceptable conditions. He added that the lifting of the Notam will not yield results which will make it necessary for Turkey to renounce its rights in the Aegean. Erkmen noted that an Aegean airspace problem existed, but that Turkey was benefiting equally from Aegean airspace because of the freedom in international airspace.

Noting that Turkey was also benefiting from international waters, Erkmen said: The continental shelf issue has not yet been solved. The problem is a subject for discussion. The problem can be solved through negotiations based on the principles of justice and equity. We shall continue negotiations.

In reply to a journalist who asked his views regarding the people's bureau set up at the Libyan Embassy in Ankara in accordance with the decision taken by the General People's Congress of the Socialist People's Libyan Jamahiriyah, Erkmen said: The issue of who is to represent Libya in Turkey concerns the Libyan Government. When the new representative is selected we will recognize him.

RPP OFFICIAL STATES LIFTING NOTAM JEOPARDIZES INTERESTS

TA121802 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 12 May 80

[Text] RPP Secretary General Mustafa Ustundag said that the government's foreign policy is seriously jeopardizing national rights and interests. In a written statement in Ankara, Ustundag said that the government made the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General issue a statement on 10 May regarding the Aegean airspace and the lifting of Notam 714 and that it was impossible to agree with either the content or the form of the statement. Ustundag said: The government should carefully refrain from involving state offices in its exchange of views with political parties. Governments should, at least, bear the responsibility for their decisions. It seems that the current government does not intend to do so. One wonders whether the government wishes to use the respectability of the Foreign Ministry--following a similar attempt involving the chief of the General Staff--to shield itself vis-a-vis the public. This is an expression of impotence. Ustundag noted that the content of the statement was not substantial and that it portrayed a very dangerous foreign policy. Ustundag said that the statement pointed out that the lifting of the Notam created a positive atmosphere in the Aegean, but that press reports the following day noted that Turkish planes were molested by Greek planes during NATO maneuvers. Pointing out that the Turkish Government protested that incident, Ustundag said: The government does not care to admit that its act of good will has not been reciprocated. The government refers to a positive atmosphere.

Noting that the statement also pointed out that the lifting of the Notam did not create any problems for Cyprus, Ustundag recalled a statement made by the president of the Federated State of Cyprus to the effect that the lifting of the Notam gave cause for concern. Ustundag said: With this statement our concern regarding the conditions for Greece's return to the NATO military flank has increased. The government should refrain from new steps and decisions regarding the Aegean issue before the views of the parliament on the issue are clarified. It would, no doubt, be more appropriate to refer the issue to the National Assembly Foreign Affairs Committee in accordance with the request of the committee chairman instead of making the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General issue statements on the subject.

COMMUNIST PARTY ISSUES MAY DAY STATEMENT

TA111124 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0700 GMT 11 May 80

[Turkish Communist Party May Day statement]

[Text] The Turkish working class and our people successfully celebrated May Day--the struggle, unity and solidarity day of the international working class--despite all the pressures, bans and oppression. The working class and the toilers replied to the bans against May Day celebrations and to the attempts by reactionaries and martial law forces to escalate terrorism through the glorious general strike on 30 April. May Day celebrations turned into a countrywide anti-imperialist and democratic resistance by the people. A massive march and rally was held in Mersin following the appeal by DISK [Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions].

The fact that U.S. imperialists used the bases on our soil in their act of military aggression against Iran concretely displayed the great threat posed by the bilateral slavery agreement to the security and sovereignty of the country. May Day voiced our people's struggle for national independence, peace and security against the aggressive and expansionist policies of the Pentagon and NATO and against the insane arms race which is being exacerbated by them.

The government is leading millions of workers into a state of hunger for the sake of the interests of imperialists and a handful of local and foreign monopolies. The peasants, the middle classes and the small enterprises are being destroyed. May Day reflected the mounting reactions of the working class and our people against the increasing burden of the grave crisis on the toilers, against unemployment and the high cost of living. May Day has seen powerful action by the working class and all the democratic forces forthe sake of democratic rights and freedom against martial law, the state of emergency law, the state security courts and all laws of oppression and the limitation of syndical rights.

The Demirel government and the martial law forces engaged in an extensive attack against our people before and after May Day. Progressive Youth Association leaders were arrested and tortured. DISK leaders and thousands of factory representatives were arrested. The Turkish Labor Party [TLP] headquarters and numerous labor union buildings were raided. Army units were on duty in all the big cities. On 29 and 30 April alone, some 50 citizens were killed or injured by terrorism. The pressures in Turkish Kurdistan were increased in an extraordinary manner. The general strike on 30 April and the May Day celebrations granted the working class and all the progressive forces the opportunity to increase their ranks. Workers from numerous unions affiliated with DISK and Turk-IS [Turkish Confederation of Labor], democratic organizations, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP], the TLP, the Turkish Socialist Workers Party, several RPP organizations, the National Salvation Party and the Justice Party--in some places--workers without any affiliation and revolutionary youths acted in solidarity with each other. On the other hand, Maoists and some adventurist groups, which are dragged into collaboration with the Maoists, engaged in armed provocations that served the interests of the sovereign forces. RPP leaders made the accusation that the May Day celebrations were illegal and thus sided with the government, which is trampling on democratic freedoms and human rights.

Adventurism and reformism are damaging our people's struggle. They are confusing and [word indistinct] the masses who want to engage in actions. The division in the syndical movement and the insistent divisive position of Turk-IS are weakening the struggle power of the working class. The TCP calls on the RPP, Turk-IS and the youths who are led towards adventure to join the struggle of the masses against the anti-people policy of the reactionary government. The Communists were in the front lines of May Day celebrations this year as well. They organized the masses. The TCP supported the DISK statement on the strike on 30 April. It called on the working class and all the toilers to hold a general strike against the May Day bans and the increasing oppression. The party organizations successfully fulfilled their hard tasks under harsh conditions on 30 April and 1 May. They struggled against the reactionary and martial law terror together with strugglers of different views on May Day.

It is now our duty to ensure that the masses adopt the May Day experiments and to further organize the forces. It is our duty to further strengthen the syndical and [word indistinct] unity of action among the working class--the factor which played an important role in the success of the celebrations--and among the democratic forces. It is also our duty to deter the reactionary attack with massive moves against the anti-people policy of the government and to struggle for the release of DISK and Progressive Youth Association leaders, unionists, factory representatives, workers and youths.

BARRE, CARRINGTON STATEMENTS AT EUROPEAN MOVEMENT MEETING

LD131459 Paris LE MONDE in French 11-12 May 80 p 4

[M.D. report: "Barre Stresses 'Decisive Importance' of Franco-German Understanding"]

[Text] A certain disenchantment prevailed at the European movement's 10th congress held in Paris on 8 May. Many leading Europeans had gathered to mark the 30th anniversary of Robert Schuman's statement which launched the Community process: prime ministers--Mr Barre and Luxembourg Prime Minister Werner--foreign ministers, representatives from all the Community governments and all the Community institutions--Commission President Jenkins and Parliament President Veil--and early European militants like Mr Luns who had left the NATO General Secretariat for a while; former Commission President Rey and former British Prime Minister Heath. However, the gathering in the Sorbonne's great amphitheater was sparse and full of gray-haired people, like a meeting of war veterans, and was in no way reminiscent of the enthusiasm which in 1948 made the founding congress of the European movement in The Hague a historic moment heralding the process of building Europe which had not even been started.

The applause which repeatedly interrupted Mr Barre's speech was a tribute to Franco-German reconciliation, the initial form of European understanding. The prime minister even got the audience to applaud a quotation from General de Gaulle, an unusual occurrence at European gatherings.

Robert Schuman and Jean Monnet, the prime minister stated, "tackled the root of the issue. And in May 1952 the root of the issue was Franco-German reconciliation.... It was necessary to change the course of events through an initiative which only France could take. The fact that he understood and did this reflects creditably on Robert Schuman...."

"Ever since, Franco-German understanding has been the cornerstone of the building of Europe without causing the least offence to the European partners of France and the FRG," Barre continued, "since they fully perceived this understanding's decisive importance for the future of our continent.... It was completely consistent with this tradition and desire that in April 1978 the French president and the FRG chancellor took the initiative in proposing to their Community partners the creation of a European monetary system.... It is not surprising that, while asserting their loyalty to an alliance which no one has called in question at any time, France and the FRG openly stated immediately after the Kabul coup that the European powers have special responsibilities, and emphasized their determination to fulfill them, ensuring at the same time, together with their Allies, that the fundamental balances on which the security of their two countries and of Europe depends would be guaranteed."

Emphasizing that the main stages of European building have been "so far irreversible," because the "necessary sacrifices" have been accepted, the prime minister criticized in passing the Commission chaired by Mr Jenkins by expressing regret that "on certain occasions" the institutions have failed to play the role assigned to them.

In conclusion, the prime minister paid tribute to those who "in the six founding states of the Community have been able to keep the flame of European building alive from the beginning....

"At this time, when there is more evidence than ever of the need for a Europe which is neither a protectorate nor a stake for anybody--a Europe master of its destiny.... I would like to reaffirm that, come what may, despite doubts and uncertainties and all disappointments, France will unfailingly continue to pursue the process of building and defending Europe in order to give peace a chance."

Lord Carrington Supports Agricultural Policy

The message from Lord Carrington, secretary of state for foreign and Commonwealth affairs, read by Sir Michael Palliser, Foreign Office secretary general, was intended to be reassuring. "Britain's Community membership is not in doubt," the British secretary of state said.... "All of us--Britain like the other member countries--have an interest in strengthening and developing the Community.... Just as we are committed to the Community as a whole, we accept the existing common policies. The Common Agricultural Policy, in particular, is an important part of the Community foundations and will continue to play a vital role in the Community. However, I think that all member states agree that we should work together to seek measures enabling us to improve its functioning."

Many speakers had harsh words to say about both France and Britain, regretting the elimination of supranationality, as Netherlands Foreign Minister van der Klaauw did, and asserting, as Mr Rey did, that "the Community rules will not be changed." The congress adopted a resolution calling for the Community to move toward a federal structure.

Barre on British Stance

LD131728 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 9 May 80

[Excerpt] Speaking at the Sorbonne this morning, where the congress of Europe is being held, Raymond Barre clearly implied that what could not be done with the British (?would be done) without them.

[Begin Barre recording] Today we should see that what has been gained is maintained, pursue our undertakings by making long-term common interests prevail over short-term particular interests and avoid the dilution of a Community whose successive enlargement could cause rules to be weakened and mechanisms to be paralysed. I would like to repeat to you today that, despite all the uncertainties, all the worries and all the disappointments France will continue to tirelessly pursue the construction of Europe and to defend Europe in order to give peace the best chance. [Special DIE PRESSE report: "Libyan Embassy in Vienna Now 'People's Bureau'"]

[Summary] Vienna (GPE)--On 12 May about 40 Libyan students, allegedly followers of Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, penetrated the Libyan Embassy in Vienna without using force, and proclaimed it a "people's bureau." They were acting in line with Libyan chief of state al-Qadhdhafi's instructions to turn all Libyan embassies into "people's bureaus." Libyan Ambassador 'Izz ad-Din Mahmud Ali al-Ghadamisi told DIE PRESSE that the embassy has been headed by a committee since 0830 local time [0630 GMT] on Monday, 12 May. He added that he would leave Austria presumably at the end of June but would not return to Tripoli.

According to informed Arab quarters in Vienna, Ambassador al-Ghadamisi had been warned a few days ago that such an action was in the offing. On Friday, five men selected by the revolutionary leadership in Tripoli arrived in Austria. The transformation was carried out on Monday. "At the Foreign Ministry DIE PRESSE was told that Ambassador al-Ghadamisi continued to enjoy full diplomatic immunity and to be regarded as his country's representative in Austria. A new chief of the Libyan mission, whether acting in the framework of an embassy or of a 'people's bureau', requires acknowledgement by the Austrian Government, it was stated."

MANY FOREIGN MINISTERS' TALKS EXPECTED DURING ANNIVERSARY

[Unattributed report: "All Sides Pay Tribute to Austria; Also Bilateral Foreign Ministers' Talks During State Treaty Anniversary in Vienna"]

[Excerpt] In regard to the State Treaty anniversary, there will not only be the talks between Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko and his U.S. counterpart Muskie, but there will also be various bilateral talks between the 11 foreign ministers attending the Vienna anniversary. This was stated yesterday [13 May] by Asutrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr. He particularly mentioned in this context the names of Genscher (FRG) and Lord Carrington (Great Britain), who presumably will not only hold talks with Gromyko but also with each other. Pahr himself will have separate talks with all of the foreign ministers. Yesterday he declined to make any comment on his assessment of the chances of the foreign ministers' Vienna meeting.

MINORITIES SEND APPEAL TO FOUR-POWER FOREIGN MINISTERS

[AZ report: "Slovenes and Croatians Say: Article Seven Has Not Been Fulfilled"]

[Text] Vienna (AZ)--on Monday [12 May] representatives of the Croatian and Slovene minorities in Austria complained that article seven of the Austrian State Treaty had not been fulfilled. The representatives of these two ethnic groups have also sent letters to this effect to the four foreign ministers of the signatory powers who will be coming to Vienna on the occasion of the State Treaty anniversary.

The organizations represented at the press conference, the Council of Carinthian Slovenes, the Central Association of Slovenes, the Croatian Cultural Association and the Croatian Alumni Club, have used the occasion of the forthcoming celebrations to strike at what in their opinion is a negative balance of minority rights in Austria. [paragraph continues]

They claim that in essential sectors their situation has not improved but has even deteriorated. The Croatian representatives complained about inadequate opportunities for Croatian language school education and called for Croatian language lessons at secondary schools and the establishment of a special Croatian secondary school.

The Slovene representatives declared that there are still major discrepancies between promises of the Austrian Government and everyday practices in Carinthia. Thus the singing of Slovene songs at official celebrations is still forbidden even in communities which, according to the language census, are clearly situated in the bilingual zone. The minority finds itself exposed to daily pressure from German-nationalist organizations, which leads to an atmosphere of hostility and constant quarrels that is detrimental to Austria in the present period of international tensions. The minorities are staking great hopes on the readiness for talks to solve the outstanding minority problems, recently expressed again by Chancellor Kreisky in Belgrade.

GENERAL KUNTNER REVIEWS STATE OF WARSAW PACT

DW131148 Bonn DIE WELT in German 13 May 80 p 10

[Correspondent Carl Gustaf Stroehm interview with Austrian Gen Wilhelm Kuntner, commander of the Austrian Army Leadership Academy; place, date not given]

[Text] WELT: General, there are politicians such as Federal Chancellor Schmidt, for example, who compare the present situation with 1914. Do you share this opinion?

Kuntner: I am rather of the opinion that one ought to compare the present situation with 1938 or 1939. At the beginning of World War I the interests of ruling dynasties were involved first as well as the power policies of states having a similar structure. In 1938 or 1939, however, an ideological dispute was underway. Today we are in an analogous situation. At that time liberal democracy was facing fascism. Today liberal democracies face Soviet communism.

WELT: The Warsaw Pact will celebrate its 25th anniversary tomorrow. What was the situation of the Warsaw Pact like when it was established--compared with the present situation?

Kuntner: In 1955 the FRG was accepted by NATO. In this connection it was naturally important to the West that everywhere in the East--particularly where Soviet troops were stationed--pro-Soviet communist regimes were establised with the support of the occupation force. On the other side, the Soviet Union at that time certainly had the trauma of the American "roll back" policy. Second, it turned out that the Austrian model of neutrality did not provide the FRG and the West with an incentive to imitate it. In 1955 there was a strong atrategic and particularly a nuclear superiority for the West. The East was just at the beginning of its nuclear development.

Twenty-five years later it looks completely different: The level has changed. There is parity in the intercontinental field, that is between the Soviets and the Americans. In Europe there is a clear superiority for the Warsaw Pact in the Eurostrategic as well as the conventional fields. The Eastern fear of a "roll forward" by the West today has turned into Western concern over a "roll forward" by the East.

WELT: Thus the Warsaw Pact in this quarter of a century has been an unusually successful alliance?

Kuntner: It certainly had its internal family problems--Hungary in 1956, Czechoslovakia in 1968, and then also certain events in Poland or the "GDR", but due to the reinforcing function of the Soviet troops, consolidation has been achieved over and over again. In particular the Soviet troops have experienced an amazing development in arms technology, which the West has not.

WELT: On what ideological and military-strategic bases is the Eastern military alliance established, do you think? What are its aims?

Kuntner: It is believed in the West that there is a contradiction between the Soviet doctrine of peaceful coexistence and the Soviet military doctrine. But that can be assumed only if one does not know Soviet dialectics. The Soviet military theoreticians, who know their doctrine better certainly than most people in the West, say very frankly, as does General Sidorenko in the Soviet Officers' Handbook: "The character of the Soviet military doctrine is offensive." Or Soviet Marshal Sapozhnikov in his work "The Brains of the Army": "War is the highest form and the most important part of politics. The preceding and the following peace is the continuation of the fight for power with other means."

This clearly indicates that the military element is drilled for an offensive. This can also be deduced from the equipment, stationing and training of the Soviet Armed Forces. If one views the Soviet maneuvers of past years, one sees again and again that priority is given to the offensive. This is in accordance with the ideas of the Soviet military that the East bloc, if it is attacked in a determined way [entscheidungsuchend], will defend itself "forward of its own state area," which means on the territory of the adversary. So peaceful coexistence is aimed at an interim solution because--as Khrushchev realized--the use of military means for a final class struggle between communism and capitalism does not seem opportune at the moment because of the possible destruction and counterdestruction. So a phase of peaceful competition takes place in the class struggle, a phase which certainly need not be final--should their own side become the militarily stronger one again.

WELT: How do you explain the intensified armament pursued by the Soviet Union in the decade of political detente, which it continues to pursue?

Kuntner: There is certainly a very large security need involved--the fear of becoming encircled, which the Russians experienced already under the tsar and which has been adopted by the Soviets. Thus the look at China. Some of the states, however, by which the Soviet Union feels encircled, have in the meantime become communist themselves. The second factor is that up to today the Soviet Union has not given up its original aim, namely, to make the whole world "happy" with its social system. Expansionism is certainly an element of Soviet ideological thinking. In order to do that one certainly needs armament--even if one wants to implement it without force--in order to implement the dynamic foreign policy in a credible way. And it has turned out lately that Soviet foreign policy has become more dynamic--such as, for example, in the case of Afghanistan.

WELT: But there are voices saying that Afghanistan particularly has been more of a defensive action by the Soviets. They had to become active out of fear of Islamic tendencies involving their own state territory, or out of fear of a possible failure of a communist regime.

Kuntner: We find both elements there, also: defensive and offensive. It is certainly worth pondering for the Soviet Union that in the year 2000 every third Soviet citizen will be a Muslim. There is also a second defensive element: For a big power such as the Soviet Union it seems intolerable that their military advisers are being killed one after the other by freedom fighters--last year there was talk of 200. It is hard to explain to one's own people and to one's own leading class that as a big power there are no plans to take action against this. It is the same problem the Americans have now with the hostage affair. [paragraph continues]

On the other hand, we see that the Soviet Union exploits its present preponderance as soon as it detects a power vacuum somewhere. In doing this Moscow calculates the threshold of risk most accurately. Maybe Moscow did not exactly predict the outrage of the West and of one part of the Islamic world, but the Soviets certainly knew exactly that there would be no military conflict with the Western superpower over Afghanistan. After all, Moscow has now come somewhat closer to the energy umbilical cord of all of Western industry.

WELT: Do you think it is possible that the Soviet Union's aim is to make a thrust toward warm waters and the Persian Gulf?

Kuntner: I do not consider that impossible. If the Soviet Union knows that its present preponderance will last 5 to 7 years, and that this preponderance will then be mitigated through parity or a change of the pendulum, it will exploit that time for itself.

WELT: So you expect turbulent times in international politics for that reason?

Kuntner: Yes, I expect a glacial period in politics and further dynamic activity in Soviet foreign policy. By the way, that can be gathered from the language of recent Moscow demarches which have an unusually self-assured tone.

WELT: The Warsaw Pact is valid only for Europe. The Soviets have attempted several times to extend it--say to Asia and their disputes with China. But the European East bloc states apparently did not quite want to play ball?

Kuntner: The situation among the European alliance partners of the Warsaw Pact is probably similar to that among the European NATO partners who want their alliance to apply first of all to Europe. However, one hears over and over again that both blocs, the Warsaw Pact and NATO, ought to be dissolved. In this matter things are not on the level: Every East European state is tied to every other East European state through bilateral friendship and assistance treaties, and all these states again are tied through such treaties to the Soviet Union, the leading power. So a dissolution of the Warsaw Pact would actually mean nothing. In addition, the ranks of East European states simultaneously have a stationing treaty for the presence of Soviet troops. Nothing would change about the military-political landscape of East Europe if the Warsaw Pact were dissolved.

WELT: How are the focal points of the Warsaw Pact distributed?

Kuntner: The focal point lies in the GDR. Of 31 Soviet divisions stationed in Eastern Europe, 20 are in the GDR--10 of them being tank divisions. Two Soviet divisions are stationed in Poland, four in Hungary and five in Czechoslovakia.

WELT: And how about the tanks?

Kuntner: In the framework of these 31 divisions there are 10,000 medium and heavy tanks with about 6,000 of them being stationed on GDR territory, not counting the National People's Army.

WELT: Is that being built up to cement the partition of Germany--or are there also their strategic motives?

Kuntner: I as a Central European who feels he belongs to the free world am worried by the following: I do not believe that the Soviet Union wants to unleash a military conflict in Europe at present. But if the Soviet Union changes its political approach, it could at any time begin such a conflict with this potential. [paragraph continues]

That worries me. No great regrouping is needed and no great concentration is necessary, because with the Soviets everything is set up for a forward move--and not for a defensive approach, naturally with the counterattack elements every army needs.

WELT: How does one tell whether an army stations its troops offensively or defensively?

Kuntner: First there is the ratio between the recognizable offensive elements--such as tanks--and the defensive elements, such as the infantry and artillery forces. The second point is certainly the location of these tank units close to a confrontation line. The next is the installation of great depots--close to the demarcation line or further back. If I expect an attack and if I must accept a possible surprise success by an attacker, I will not establish my depots within the reach of such a thrust, but further back.

Then there is the stationing of bridging equipment: the further forward it is located, the more one can conclude that he wants to march forward with it--otherwise in case of a breakthrough by an adversary this equipment would be left to the other side. From all these factors one can conclude that there are offensive intentions. The representatives of the Warsaw Pact states make no secret of it: They say they will defend themselves in a "forward" way if they are attacked. But the question is, who will determine what an attack is? There have also been cases in history where an attacker claimed he was defending himself.

WELT: What do the high Soviet or East European officers say to these problems?

Kuntner: They say exactly what all the Soviet instruction books say. It cannot be doubted that the primacy of politics is valid for the Warsaw Pact. But, in political decisions in the Soviet Union and in the other communist states, military men also take part who are members of the Politburo.

WELT: Can the Soviets in an emergency count on the reliability of their alliance partners?

Kuntner: One must differentiate here between the populace, political organizations--such as the communist parties--and naturally the armies. Military structures are generally trained to obey. One should not foster too great illusions in the West such as the possible erosions of the Eastern military structure.

WELT: There is a classic example of such an erosion, namely the Hungarian Army in 1956....

Kunter: Yes, but the Hungarians had to learn their bitter lesson. One cannot predict if and when something like that will happen again. There are theories about a new generation which is not burdened by this experience trying it again or doing it better. I do not believe, however, that it will be tried again in a similar form, because the next generation is able to assess the ratio of power, too. The Romanians do it quite skillfully by demonstrating that one must not follow the superpower in all matters.

WELT: Would the Soviet Union in case of signs of disintegration be in a position to keep the East European situation under control with military means?

Kuntner: It has demonstrated that--and it leaves no doubts that it would act as it did again. The will exists to maintain socialist unity and to protect the system.

WELT: Will the National People's Army of the GDR fire at German compatriots in the West?

Kuntner: I recall that historically Germans have frequently fired on Germans. Today there is the ideological aspect in addition. It would be an illusion again to believe that national concern must lead to difficulties in the carrying out of orders. I am also convinced that in an emergency NATO would defend itself, even if Germans from the East stood against Germans from the West.

WELT: Can a situation be imagined in which the Warsaw Pact, without having fired a shot, will achieve control of Western Europe through blackmail?

Kuntner: That would be imaginable if in Western Europe the European allies were to detach themselves from the leading power, the United States. If this process of decoupling should take place, the West Europeans would have no choice but to make the attempt vis-a-vis the Soviet Union to become "clients"--I do not like the word "Finlandization" because this means doing injustice to the Finns. That would be a situation in which free and sovereign foreign policy would become impossible. I fear this kind of development--and it could take place if the solidarity of the West does not appear to be stronger.

WELT: You just mentioned that the Soviets are under time pressure: the next 5 or 6 years. So there is the magic year 1985.

Kuntner: If NATO implements its decision to close the arms gap, a balance will be achieved again on the European Continent. This creates time pressure for the Soviets. If the Americans are less vulnerable in the field of intercontinental missiles--such as through the MX system--the leading power United States will have become more credible for the Europeans again. Detente, however, can be pursued only in a state of balanced forces.

WELT: Could one say that it is the Soviets' intention to turn Western Europe into an economic supplier for its own industry?

Kuntner: Yes, and the Soviet Union would also have something to offer in this connection, namely, its raw materials. It reaches more and more for raw materials outside Europe. In such a way Western Europe's dependence on the Soviet Union would become even greater, and Moscow could exert better control on the West European states in this field--without having to directly change their inner social forms.

WELT: Do you consider a Soviet attack from a stationary position possible? Could it happen that we would wake up some day with such an attack in the offing?

Kuntner: No, or we would have to have slept for a long time. First, one must count on political preparatory work--and that would be rather critical at the moment. At the moment one can hardly speak of detente. Militarily one must calulate with a warning time of 72 hours.

But if one views the whole affair politically, there are two factors on the Soviet side: On the one hand, there is the urge to get out of their encirclement; on the other hand, there is the ideological will for expansion. If one has in mind the China problem, they have fears which one probably fails to grasp rationally--but what is rational about political decisions? And that brings us to the next problem: Western policy stands in an election year under the pressure of public opinion in the United States and also in the Federal Republic. It is cause for worry that in all Western democracies foreign and security policies are becoming more and more dependent on opinion polls, while full professionals sit in the Kremlin who are calculating and analyzing matters most carefully and whose aims are set by their ideology.

WELT: What is the situation on the southeastern flank of the Western alliance--in the area bordering directly on Austria?

Kuntner: Constantinople in its time was an old target of the Russians, the entry to the Mediterranean. This entry leads either through the Turkish straits or through land--and here we can only hope that the Soviets, from their experience in Afghanistan, will refrain from repeating such an enterprise in Europe--say in Yugoslavia.

WELT: How can the West meet such Soviet dynamics without simultaneously provoking the irrational Soviet trauma even more?

Kuntner: The fact that the two superpowers are not speaking to each other at all is dangerous. There is no need to accept the Soviet kind of detente. But one should not withdraw sulking either, maybe with the argument: We are technically in a position to push the Soviet Union to the wall in the field of armament. If the Americans begin to tighten this screw, it can certainly be achieved technically--but it will not get you anywhere. It will again create irrational reactions on the other side before one has achieved the aim. I am not an adviser to the West or to the East--but I believe that the clear language of negotiations is still the best. However, it must be a clear language and one must make it very clear to the Soviets where it will lead if they are not prepared to contribute their share to the mitigation of tensions.

WELT: It is sometimes said that one must compromise with the Soviets as much as possible and make economic and maybe political concessions to them.

Kuntner: We have gained considerable experience with appeasement policy in our century. When Hitler marched into Czechoslovakia in 1938, Chamberlain said that this was a small and faraway country about which one knew little. When Poland's turn came, appeasement came to an end. So appeasement is not the answer to the problem.

I also do not believe that one can use human rights as a weapon. That is not the way to cut short the dynamics of the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union must know that the dynamic way it has embarked on will not help it at all in the long run. The West must make that clear with a certain solidarity. Then a process of reflection could start in the East. But giving in, appeasement and unilateral concessions will lead only to the hardening of the propelling forces of world revolution.

GERMAN-POLISH FORUM ON ECONOMIC, DETENTE POLICY OPENS

Dohnanyi Response to Polish Remarks

LD131322 Hamburg DPA in German 1211 GMT 13 May 80

[Excerpt] Darmstadt--Ten years after the signing of the Warsaw treaties, politicians from both countries reaffirmed in Darmstadt today at the opening of the Third German-Polish Forum the will to continue the process of detente between the Federal Republic and Poland. Minister of State Klaus von Dohnanyi gave an assurance that there is no power in the German lower Bundestag that might cast doubt on the legal validity of the treaties, even though there are differing political opinions on them.

Dohnanyi was thus reacting to critical remarks by Waclaw Piatkowsi, head of the foreign trade department of the PZPR Central Committee, who in his welcoming address warned against "forces in the FRG" which are attempting to undermine the aims of the Warsaw treaties through "aggressive anti-Polish campaigns." He said that the treaties are, however, the only platform and the only legal framework which Poland can accept for the continuation of the policy of detente.

Until Thursday 80 prominent politicians and public figures from the Federal Republic and Poland will be discussing in Darmstadt the state and further development of relations between the two countries. The mainly confidential talks will be centered on economic and detente policy and cultural contacts.

Genscher on Gierek Disarmament Proposal

LD131640 Hamburg DPA in German 1502 GMT 13 May 80

[Excerpt] Bonn/ Darmstadt--In the words of Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher the Federal Government will examine "in a constructive sense" which elements of the latest disarmament initiative submitted by Polish party leader Edward Gierek are compatible with Bonn's views. Genscher said at the Third German-Polish Forum in Darmstadt today that it will be welcomed if the followup meeting of the European security conference this autumn in Madrid can approve a mandate for a disarmament conference in Europe.

Genscher described NATO's double decision of last December as one of the "broadest disarmament endeavors since the end of World War II." NATO appealed to all to accept the proposals.

LOWER SAXONY PARLIAMENTARIANS DEPART FOR GDR VISIT

LD121315 Hamburg DPA in German 1226 GMT 12 May 80

[Text] Hannover--A delegation of the SPD group from Lower Saxony led by group chairman Karl Ravens left today for a 3-day fact-finding mission in the GDR. The delegation comprises some 50 members.

According to Ravens, the parliamentarians hope to have talks with GDR officials, particularly about border-crossing problems such as the salination of the River Weser, the opening of an additional border-crossing point at Bad Harzburg, as well as general questions of local cross-border traffic. The deputies are to visit the former concentration camp near Nordhausen and the towns of Quedlinburg, Magdeburg, East Berlin, Brandenburg and Potsdam.

DEFENSE MINISTRY OFFICIAL SEES NO NATO REORIENTATION

DW131003 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0442 GMT 12 May 80

[Excerpts from reporter Weber interview with Andreas von Buelow, parliamentary state secretary at the Defense Ministry; date, place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] How strong and how uniform is the Western military alliance at present? Will there possibly be a completely new orientation by NATO?

[Answer] No! That is most unlikely and will almost certainly not happen.

[Question] But there is talk of it. Since the United States is heavily engaged due to crises outside Europe, the Europeans ought to perhaps make an additional contribution to NATO, such as relieving the Americans in the Gulf region, for example.

[Answer] Well, this must first become the subject of intense talks, namely, to what extent the United States will be engaged in the future in the Gulf region and what this engagement will mean for Europe. It will certainly not mean withdrawal or partial withdrawal from Europe--which has been mentioned by the press. But naturally there will be discussions on whether the European part of the NATO allies need to take over part of the additional burdens of the Americans, such as in the field of logistics here in Europe.

[Question] You say it has not been fully discussed whether the Americans will be more heavily engaged in the Gulf region. But if there is more engagement it will probably mean the thinning out of NATO troops here in Europe. Would that not necessitate defense efforts at an earlier date, such as the strengthening of nuclear protection?

[Answer] No, that is not automatically so because the Americans--if we are correctly informed--do not intend to thin out any troops in Europe; what they are thinking about at present is whether they will consider the reinforcements in America envisaged for action in case of a crisis for possible use outside the NATO area. In such a case, replacements ought to be created to a certain extent.

[Question] Could that mean that closing the arms gap in Europe with medium-range missiles would take place at an earlier date?

[Answer] No. For technical reasons alone it is probable that stationing will be possible in 1983 at the earliest.

[Question] You rule out European participation in a possible involvement in the Gulf region?

[Answer] In any case, not under the NATO organization. It is quite possible that combinations could come about were such a development to take place, but we do not assume this at all. We believe that in the long run we will need to deal with developments there that must be steered into a field that is not directly a military field. So I believe that, for the time being, matters will not develop in that direction.

[Question] How does one manage in times of strong Soviet pressure, also military pressure, to be militarily present on the one side while, on the other side, seeing to detente?

[Answer] One must primarily work to avoid becoming so weak as to become the plaything of military forces. On the other hand, one must try to eventually eliminate the reasons for tension if possible, or if that is impossible--unfortunately it is impossible in Europe --to at least see to it that these hotbeds do not cause warlike developments. That is the task of detente policy. This task will remain. Sometimes it may be a bit easier, sometimes a bit more complicated. Sometimes it may be impossible to pursue. That is quite possible. But the task remains for the Europeans. For all of us here in this part of the world it is unimaginable that warlike developments can be allowed to take place.

PRESS DISCUSSES NATO MEETING IN BRUSSELS

DW140845 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 14 May 80

[Press review]

[Text] KOELNER STADT-ANZEIGER writes: At first glance the picture of the Soviet Armed Forces setup outlined by the chairman of the Military Executive Board is alarming. Naturally it should not be ignored that General Gundersen is not supposed to report on the state of NATO. Yet Gundersen's description must be taken seriously. The Afghanistan invasion has shown at least one thing: The Soviets assess their own military power today in such a way that they are running risks they were not prepared to run before. It is high time that NATO agrees on a program that must be considered mainly as a military answer to the Soviets' invasion and their obviously increased self-confidence.

SUEDKURIER of Konstanz notes: The realization is not new, but the consequences must now be drawn--and they are unpleasant and at the very least expensive. In the past weeks and months NATO military leaders have warned over and over again about the military preponderance of the Soviet Union. In some European countries--the Federal Republic is no exception--these warnings have been ignored despite knowledge to the better. The fact remains that the United States as a world power also has interests outside Europe and that these interests also involve the Allies. It is not a matter of dispatching Bundeswehr units to some place in the Middle East. But it is a matter of creating the prerequisites for the Americans, permitting them to exert the necessary pressure with regard to their policy. In other words, the Europeans must at least use more money for military purposes than before.

NUERNBERGER NACHRICHTEN maintains: It is obvious that the partners on this side of the Atlantic must do their share. The more Washington rediscovers its role as a world power, the more urgent becomes its demand to be at least partially relieved in the alliance. The partners recognized this immediately at the beginning of the Brussels May meeting when they confirmed at the conclusion of the Eurogroup meeting that they are prepared to take over a greater part of the common defense burdens than before. One must seriously ask, however, whether the good intention will go beyond the state of a declaration. An expert said that this NATO meeting is "the beginning of the beginning," a new orientation of the alliance--militarily and politically. The process will require much time, because a self-assured America, strong in leadership, is as little to be found as a united and purposeful Europe.

NATO SECRETARY CHARGED WITH SPYING FOR GDR

LD121252 Hamburg DPA in German 1101 GMT 12 May 80

[Text] Karlsruhe--At the Fifth Criminal Senat of the Higher Land Court, Duesseldorf, the Federal Prosecutor's Office has charged Ingrid Garbe, a 41-year-old foreign language secretary, with intelligence activities. This was announced by the office in Karlsruhe on Monday.

The former foreign language secretary at the Bonn Foreign Office and later on the staff of the Bonn mission at NATO in Brussels is suspected of having provided the GDR Ministry for State Security with a number of reports she had access to as part of her job. She is suspected of misusing her official post for several years up to the beginning of February 1979 in return for money.

According to the Federal Prosecutor's Office, the defendant had been recruited by an official of the main intelligence administration of the Ministry of State Security who had been infiltrated in to the Federal Republic and who made her engage in intelligence work and prepared her singlemindedly for her activity as a foreign language secretary at a job interesting from an intelligence point of view.

The Karlsruhe office further reported that, up to February, 1976 Frau Garbe had given oral reports to the Ministry for State Security about the work at the Foreign Office and had let them have written classified material. After being moved to the Federal Republic's permanent mission at NATO in Brussels on 1 March 1976, the defendant is said to have carried on her work as an agent. The secretary was temporarily detained on 3 February 1979 and has been in custody on the basis of a warrant issued by the investigating judge of the federal court.

PLO REPRESENTATIVE CLARIFIES 'THREAT' AGAINST STRAUSS

LD131528 Hamburg DPA in German 1446 GMT 13 May 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--The Federal Government is convinced that there is no threat to the Bavarian premier and CSU chairman, Franz Josef Strauss, from the PLO. Siegfried Froehlich, state secretary in the Federal Interior Ministry, said today during question time in the Bundestag that the PLO representative in Bonn, 'Abdallah al-Ifranji, meanwhile made it clear that his "misunderstood" attacks on Strauss in response to the latter's statements in Israel on the Middle East problem did not mean the use of physical violence against Strauss. Al-Ifranji had stated after Strauss' return from Israel that the Palestinians would not remain idle in the face of such a hostile attitude toward their interests.

In reply to a question by Paul Roehner, parliamentary manager of the CDU/CSU parliamentary group, Froehlich said that in a talk with a Foreign Ministry representative, Al-Ifranji made it clear that his statements had related to purely political action against the CSU chairman's attitude.

Strauss Rejects PLO Criticism

LD131924 Hamburg DPA in German 1805 GMT 13 May 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--Bavarian Premier Franz Josef Strauss today rejected during a meeting with Arab ambassadors the statements by PLO spokesman 'Abdallah al-Ifranji regarding his stand on the question of the Palestinians as "impermissible interference and misuse of hospitality." According to the CSU Press Office in Bonn the meeting had been requested by the dean of Arab ambassadors in Bonn, Mohammad Ali al-Nasari (Qatar).

The meeting, which lasted for 2 and 1/2 hours, was also attended by the chairman of the CSU group, Friedrich Zimmermann, and by a total of five Arab ambassadors, and was described by the CSU as a "frank and friendly discussion of mutual views." Strauss spoke about his recent visit to Israel and offered to meet the ambassadors again following his visit to Egypt planned for the beginning of July. The offer was accepted.

PAPERS REVIEW CDU/CSU ELECTION PROGRAM

DW140952 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 14 May 80

[Press review]

[Text] RHEINISCHE POST of Duesseldorf writes: The 1980 CDU/CSU election program has not been merely clearly thought through, it addresses itself to central issues and is formulated with a remarkable sense of reality; it is also a government program. It is to the merit of the program introduced yesterday that it consistently refrains from any announcement of a policy only designed to make people feel happy. On the contrary, peace safeguarding peace and freedom has absolute priority for the Union. Because the crisis situation commits one to costly defense preparedness and loyalty to the alliance, which is certainly not cheap, Strauss says that domestic political reform plans probably cannot be implemented as speedily as planned. A second point of view is important. The election program is not content with the solution of current problems, it aims for the solution of future tasks. But in order to make sensible and convincing factual statements, Strauss must present the Union's top men, who will demonstrate professional competence with him and for him. This is not an easy matter, as it turned out yesterday.

WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE of Essen: It was obviously a long time ago that Strauss said that basically one does not need programs to win elections, it suffices to have the right people and to pursue the right policy. At the moment it seems to be mainly a matter of finding the right people in the CDU. If one leaves the polemics aside, the program contains little that cannot be found in this form or in a similar form in to other parties. The focal point is safeguarding peace. This corresponds to the desires and worries of the voters. But this demonstrates particularly clearly the dilemma the CDU is in. Naturally it wants to have peace, but simultaneously it wants to stress the dangers of detente policy. The pressure of having to be opposed to the chancellor's course is driving the CDU back into adopting a rigid attitude with regard to Ostpolitik, something which seemed to have been overcome at one time and which is not justifiable today in this form. There is no real alternative to this policy and the CDU knows it. In its program it tries to cover up this problem with many words.

HANNOVERSCHE ALLGEMEINE writes: The effort's result is something that does not exceed the framework of the usual mixture of aggressive polemics, well-sounding formulas and concrete promises. In the present situation and in view of the expected or feared election campaign style, it would be a considerable surprise if this platform were to play the main role. The problem of the Union will not be the program, but the candidate who will have to make it credible.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE VOTES TO PARTICIPATE IN MOSCOW GAMES

NC131726 Paris AFP in English 1721 GMT 13 May 80

[Text] Paris, May 13, (AFP)--The French Olympic Committee meeting here today voted by a clear majority after a six-hour meeting to take part in the Moscow Olympic games in July. The French Olympic Committee (CNOSF) voted 22 in favour and one abstention to go to Moscow.

Earlier in the day the various French Olympic sports federations also voted in favour of taking part at Moscow. The vote was 17 for, with one to be confirmed by the relevant executive committee, four for a deferment and two against.

The decisions were read out at a press conference by CNOSF President Claude Collard. He went on to say that the CNOSF "recalled its decision of Jan 23 to take part at the summer Olympics, reaffirmed the aim of the Olympics to bring together the world's leading sportsmen and underlined that decisions taken by the French Olympic movement were based strictly on sports considerations...in respect of International Olympic Committee rules. In consequence, the Administrative Council of the CNOSF confirms French participation at the Moscow Olympic games."

Despite the overwhelming vote in favour of going to Moscow, however, Mr Collard said that the letter confirming French participation would not be sent to Moscow immediately. "Before sending the letter we want to know what conditions the IOC stipulate for participation," he explained.

He did not know what the Soviet reaction had been to the propositions made by the May 3 meeting of West European Olympic committees in Rome and said it was up to the IOC to take a decision to the reply given by the games organising committee in Moscow.

Mr Collard went on to say that the French Government's attitude to the games had been discussed at the meeting, but he added that it has been said time and time again that it was up to the relevant sports authorities to decide.

POLICE GUARDING IRANIAN EMBASSY WOUNDED IN SHOOTOUT

NC140610 Paris AFP in English 0606 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] Paris, May 14 (AFP)--Four French gendarmes guarding the Iranian Embassy were wounded this morning by bursts of submachinegun fire from a passing car. They were hit in the legs, according to first reports. One gendarme was in serious condition.

Police said two or three bursts of bullets were fired from the car at a group of gendarmes standing on the pavement (sidewalk).

A phone caller claiming to be a militant of the Corsican National Liberation Front (CNLF) later told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE the front mounted the attack.

But observers wondered why Corsican autonomists or separatists would have shed blood, having until now limited themselves mainly to damaging public buildings with small bombs that caused no casualties.

The concierge (doorman) of the embassy said he heard a burst of sub-machinegun fire, and saw one gendarme fall. [Words indistinct] walking ten metres (yards) from the embassy gate [words indistinct]--one of them just below the eye and one in the leg. Two others standing farther from the gate were also wounded.

In addition, a dozen high-calibre bullets riddled a parked van in which other gendarmes were sitting, and a crude grenade or bomb exploded several metres from the van and damaged the back, police said.

The embassy had been guarded by French authorities for about two years, the concierge said. It is in the Avenue d'Iena near the former residence of the U.S. ambassador.

Corsicans Claim Responsibility

LD140715 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] The Corsican National Liberation Front a short while ago claimed responsibility for the shootout against the Iranian Embassy in Paris during which four policemen were injured, one very seriously. The Corsican separatists explain that their action has nothing to do with the situation in Iran. For them the point is to attack the security forces. It was an answer to the sentence imposed last evening by the State Security Court: Seven Corsican autonomists got sentences from 3 years in jail, suspended, to 8 years of hard labor.

FOREIGN MINISTER ON BELGRADE CONTACTS, IRANIAN SITUATION

LD131415 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 12 May 80

[Correspondent Pedro Cid interview with Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Freitas do Amaral--live]

[Excerpts] [Question] Is there anything specific you can tell us about the meetings held in Belgrade by the president of the republic and the prime minister with leaders of other countries?

[Answer] I still have no reports on the meetings held in Belgrade by the president of the republic. As to those involving the prime minister, I believe that they were important in general terms insofar as they served, so to speak, as a barometer enabling us to assess the international situation. The conclusions these talks have prompted is that most of the statesmen concerned--be they from the West, the East or the Third World--are worried about the increasing international tension. They are ever more conscious that the utmost care and, on the other hand, the utmost firmness are needed to prevent an even greater deterioration of the situation, which might lead to undesirable confrontations.

[Question] The prime minister had a meeting with Premier Hua Guofeng. Can you give us any specific details of this meeting? Did it deal with the development of our relations with China? With the question of Macao? With the prime minister's forthcoming visit to China?

[Answer] Basically this meeting dealt with the international situation, with a strategic analysis of the situation of potential conflict that presently exists. On the other hand, the Chinese premier once more declared--on this occasion directly--that he is looking forward to the prime minister's visit to his country.

[Question] Were any points of convergence acknowledged by the two sides with regard to international affairs?

[Answer] Well, as is known, there is indeed a degree of convergence--a significant degree--in our assessment of the international situation and of the main threats at present, and also in our recognition of the need for great firmness to confront these threats. To be more specific, as you know the People's Republic of China has said for many years that the world's most expansionist--and therefore most dangerous--power is the Soviet Union. This is also the view taken by the Portuguese Government.

[Question] Indeed, it could be said that immediately after the installation of the sixth government, Portugal's foreign policy acquired certain traits of aggressiveness. There was the stand adopted on the issue of Afghanistan--virtually the first public announcement made by the sixth government, if I am not mistaken. More recently, when you attended a session of the foreign affairs committee of the Assembly of the Republic, an opposition deputy commented that there had been a change in style. Would you care to comment on this?

[Answer] I would start by saying that the government's foreign policy is not, never has been and never will be an aggressive one. What it has been, continues to be and, I hope, will so remain, is a clear and firm policy. A policy of firm and clear attitudes and of condemning what merits condemnation is not, in my opinion, an aggressive one. Rather, it is a necessary one, and also our only means of preventing situations from degenerating into states of confrontation more difficult to control.

To be more specific, with regard to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and to the growing expansionism of the USSR, the only way of averting a situation of generalized conflict is by confronting the Soviet Union with a very clear and firm attitude--an attitude to be adopted not only by the Western bloc but also by other countries that are now coming closer to the Western bloc in their strategic assessment of the threats posed by the Soviet Union to worldwide freedom and peace. I have in mind countries like the People's Republic of China and a number of Third World countries, namely, the Islamic ones.

So this was the stand adopted by the government. It may well be that people were not very used to such assertive, unequivocal and firm attitudes in our foreign policy. On the other hand....

[Question] Excuse me for interrupting. Do I detect a veiled criticism of the foreign policy of previous governments?

[Answer] Not veiled. I am openly critical of the foreign policy of the previous governments.

[Question] Which you would say was marked by ambiguities?

[Answer] By some ambiguities and by a lack of clarity and firmness. On the other hand, it should be recognized that the international situation during the previous administrations was different. It changed precisely at the time of our coming into office. Only a few days separated our installation in office and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. And it was the latter that so drastically changed the international situation.

[Question] Then there is the case of Iran--of the developments in Iran. At a certain stage the Portuguese Government took a step that put it ahead even of the EEC. This step--and you will correct me if I am wrong--proved harmful to the country's economy because of Iran's subsequent ban on oil supplies to Portugal. Could it be that, as I have read somewhere, the government tried to be more papist than the pope himself?

[Answer] I do not think so. I think that the government acted correctly. I would have thought that the Iranian issue is perfectly unequivocal and not liable to create doubt in anyone's mind. In Iran we have an extremely grave violation of international law and also a no less significant violation of most basic human rights. These people have been held hostage for over 6 months now, surrounded by (?total) hostility, totally in the dark as to what is to become of them. If we stop and think for a moment how we would react if we found ourselves in such a situation for over 6 months, surely we will all understand that it is hard to accept the doubts, hesitations and procrastinations of friends and allies who until recently had failed to adopt a stance active solidarity with regard to those people and to the need to (?defend) them.

The situation was (?clear) as far as we were concerned, and we decided that we did not have to wait for others to take the steps we deemed justified. And the truth is that, although we were somewhat ahead, shortly afterwards the EEC finally adopted similar measures. [passage indistinct]

Our measures against Iran do entail some economic sacrifices for Portugal, but the magnitude of these sacrifices is reduced to some extent by the fact that we had already decided not to import oil from Iran this year. [passage indistinct] We have no wish to be party to the sort of appeasement that might bring the law of the jungle into international relations and would purely and simply destroy any chance of peaceful diplomatic links among states. [passage indistinct]

MINISTER ASKS PARLIAMENT FOR HIGHER DEFENSE SPENDING

LD120825 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 30 Apr 80 p 3

[Unattributed report on Portuguese Defense Minister Adelino Amaro da Costa 29 April address to the Assembly of the Republic: "There Is an International War Psychosis"]

[Excerpt] "Portugal cannot fully enjoy its independence if it is either unwilling or unable to treat foreign military cooperation as more than an important complement to the means already at its disposal to help enhance the armed forces' professional status. The country must also invest in this sector in order to advance and not merely conserve, partly because in matters of this nature to conserve is to regress." This was stated yesterday to the Assembly of the Republic by the defense minister, who added that "this sector therefore demands renewed attention from the country in view of the current circumstances and the world in which we live." Minister Amaro da Costa's speech, during the afternoon session, and the speeches by the education and domestic administration ministers, both during the morning session, were the main features of yesterday's proceedings which were devoted entirely to the debate on the 1980 general budget bill which will be voted on tonight by a plenary session of parliament.

Speaking specifically about the financial means to be made available to the Defense Ministry, Minister Amaro da Costa stressed that "in fact, Portugal's effort in this area is relatively much smaller than that of any of its NATO partners. On average the European members of the Atlantic Alliance allocate 36 [as published] percent of their GDP to the defense sector. In the past 2 years Portugal has allocated about 3 percent.

"I do not believe it would be rash to note in this connection that, for our country to come into line with the defense solidarity of which it is part, it will have to make an intensive effort to allocate to the defense departments a proportion of its national resources at least not lower than the average among its European allies. This will only be possible if it manages to increase in real terms the allocation to the sectors most directly involved in national defense in the coming years. The fact that this increase must go hand in hand with a percentage increase in allocations to materials and equipment indicates that it is a peaceful thesis. In this connection it should be stressed that the government is proposing to the Assembly of the Republic a 4-percent increase in real terms over 1979 in the current allocation to defense excluding pay to personnel. This is significant if we bear in mind that the overall economic policy drawn up and proposed to us is based on maintaining public spending in 1980 at the 1979 level, with the aim of imparting a new thrust to investment, combating inflation and achieving a real increase in public consumption.

"The government is profoundly convinced that its approach is correct. Only by means of a policy of this kind will it be possible to make real progress towards improving the armed forces' professional status. [paragraph continues]

"The options are clear: Either we drastically reduce the volume and quality of duties entrusted to the military, or we must provide it with the minimum of means of ensure that its activity is not futile, unproductive or ineffective."

Having pointed out that "it will be necessary gradually to begin work on restructuring the armed forces with a view to strengthening our air and sea strength, as demanded by our geostrategic situation, our extensive exclusive economic zone and the Azores-Madeira-mainland triangle, by our participation in the objectives of the Atlantic Alliance forces and by our army's special responsibilities in organizing obligatory military service," the minister stressed that "the national defense effort being demanded of our country is justified by the need to draw nearer to Europe in this field also."

Another aspect discussed by Minister Amaro da Costa was "the government's great concern with the increasing emergence of factors of insecurity on the international scene." He continued as follows: "We are in fact now living in a very different situation from the one which characterized the balance of world forces when the Helsinki Final Act was signed in 1975. Some vivid examples of this new situation have been the invasion of Kampuchea by regular Vietnamese troops and the occupation of Afghanistan by the Soviet Armed Forces. Worrying signs of this change emerge from the presence of major Cuban contingents in Angola and Ethiopia. As a result of these and other factors, lovers of peace and freedom have become skeptical about detente and relaxation. In fact, we are very probably witnessing the most powerful and insidious instance of expansionism by a world power this century, paralleled only by Hitler's madness. And the free nations often fluctuate, in view of this formidable challenge, between militant loyalty to democratic principles and the defense of their own economic interests. The most fundamental rules of international law and morality are being challenged, and we are witnessing the frightening hypocrisy of those who, supporting the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, are farcically scandalized at and cry out against the U.S. Government's failed attempt to guarantee, by limited use of force, the safety and freedom of a group of its citizens. I would not like to err on the side of excessive pessimism. But the fact is that we are beginning to witness a war psychosis on the international scene. It should be pointed out to those who believe that all this is happening a long way from the confines of the Mediterranean that we have, right here on our doorstep, just south of the Algarve, a serious armed conflict that prompts from some Portuguese democrats an incomprehensible sympathy with the side attacking a friend of Portugal's. With regard to this situation, it would be worthwhile for peace-loving Portuguese committed to guaranteeing our independence and historical and democratic values to start reflecting thoroughly on the role which national defense must be able to play in the event of a serious exacerbation of the world situation."

In conclusion, the minister said: "National defense therefore requires that the country pay greater attention not only to the amount of money that the nation allocates to it but also to the circumstances of the present situation and of the world in which we live. At this time the Portuguese people's lawful representatives are debating the government's policy as reflected in the general state budget and the major options of the 1980 plan. It is to be hoped that this house will manage to distinguish between what is, from a legal viewpoint, the constitutional transition which we are experiencing and what is in practice and in fact the legacy handed on to this period from the years when the major transformations took place in Portugal. The Assembly of the Republic can and must debate national defense policy. It owes it to itself, to the country and to those within the military--Portuguese citizens, like ourselves--who have been able to accept the sacrifices which austerity demands of their personal and family circumstances, added to the difficulties stemming from the lack of adequate professional stimuli to guarantee its loftier status."

SOCIALISTS DISCUSS PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION STANCE

LD140827 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 12 May 80 p 3

[Unattributed report on Portuguese Socialist Party (PS) National Committee 11 May meeting in Lisbon: "Mario Soares Tells Journalists: I Have Never Intended, Nor Do I Intend To Stand as Candidate for the Presidency of the Republic"]

[Text] Mario Soares has denied that it is his "political intention" to stand as candidate for the president of the republic. "This never has been and is not now the case, and I have never authorized anyone to say so." This is what he told journalists following yesterday's meeting of his party's National Committee.

The PS secretary mentioned a possible meeting of the Steering Committee "soon, with a view to formulating decisions."

The National Committee discussed PS strategy both with regard to supporting a presidential candidate and with regard to the general election which the Socialists plan to contest in an alignment with the independent Social Democratic Association, the Union of the Left for Socialist Democracy, the Social Democratic Movement and independents.

In connection with the choice of the right moment to announce the name of the candidate backed by the PS in the presidential election, Mario Soares said that "it is no coincidence that the Democratic Alliance has already announced its candidate." According to the Socialist leader this implied an attempt "to create, by fielding Soares Carneiro, a difficult situation for the opposition forces and for the president of the republic."

The conclusions of the National Committee meeting, as outlined in a communique, urge Mario Soares "personally, with the National Secretariat's backing, to take the necessary steps to enable the Steering Committee to take a final decision, when the time is judged right, in accordance with party rules."

The National Committee also confirmed the stance adopted at its Oporto meeting: that "the party must field its own candidate or back an independent candidate."

At the same time it decided "to reject all pressure aimed at influencing the lines of approach democratically adopted by the party bodies," explaining that "PS decisions always stem solely from the collective will within the party."

With regard to the possibility of opting for an independent candidate, the communique states that "the candidate must make an undertaking to the PS specifically guaranteeing, among other things, loyalty to the spirit of 25 April and the essential principles of political, social, economic and cultural democracy enshrined in the Constitution."

The National Committee also decided to express its "full confidence" in Mario Soares and announced that "he represents the continuous and militant assertion of the PS' identity as the effective leader of the Portuguese democratic left; the unyielding defense of the PS program and of the 'PS blueprint for the eighties' approved by the latest national congress; and the steadfast rejection of anything which could tend to alter the PS' character or obstruct the building of democratic socialism in accordance with the Constitution and safeguarding the values of 25 April."

PRESS CRITICIZES 'ANTICLIMACTIC' CABINET CHANGES TOWARD RIGHT

LD131453 [Editorial Report] Spanish newspapers published 3 May 1980 carry editorials on the recent Spanish Cabinet reshuffle, mostly noting the relatively minor nature of the changes and the rightwing shift which they allegedly indicate.

Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA notes on page 5 that "3 weeks of vacillation, negotiations and haggling could seem anti-climactic," but the laborious nature of the process can be explained "if it is borne in mind that the government crisis was exacerbated by an internal party crisis." It asserts: "Politics is the art of the possible, and the attempts to reconcile the viewpoints of Mr Abril and those of Mr Fernandez Ordonez apparently proved vain. On this occasion Prime Minister Suarez' power of persuasion appears to have failed, and his closest colleagues' viewpoint naturally prevailed. The deputy premier for economic affairs not only retains his post but strengthens his authority with ministers closer to his strategy, backed, according to semiofficial reports, by the support of the employers' organizations which prefer the continuation of known policies to initiatives deemed too hazardous in the present situation."

Maintaining that the "U.S. presidential system of unconditional 'yesmen'" has been adopted, it adds: "Perhaps all this will prove more efficient since, as has been recently said, we are confronted with problems which are not simply the problems of what to call policies. What the country is hoping for is more vigorous, specific and encouraging action. In view of the obstacles to broadening his government's base, Prime Minister Suarez has decided to close ranks until he reinvigorates his own party."

Madrid EL PAIS asserts on page 8 that Prime Minister Suarez has effected a shift toward the right with his new government and, maintaining that "the country's problems are not a matter of people but of political programs," it adds: "and if this government had any program, it would be unable to implement it, having originated from discord and disenchantment." It concludes:

"Suarez, Abril Martorell and the Moncloa Palace 'plumbers' have formed a government which will make the difficult moment of the 13 May parliamentary debate very bitter for the prime minister and which will increase the discord within the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] during the months preceding the party's next congress. It is a government of disenchantment which could accompany Suarez in his descent to the hell of unpopularity in his party and in the nation--a government like those of the past, that is, full of Falangists, technocrats and Christian democrats. That is, the tunnel of time."

Madrid ABC notes on page 2 the "anticlimactic" nature of the Cabinet reshuffle and the fact that "UCD social democrats and liberals have been virtually deprived of government responsibility," adding that the party crisis "remains open, with the hope of healing the splits which have recently occurred, represented by the change in the secretary generalship and the anticipated appointment of former Minister of Labor Rafael Calvo to it." It concludes:

"However, the accompaniment of confusion and disorientation which has surrounded the crisis, amid self-interested rumors, vacillation on the part of the prime minister and disclaimed potential deputy premiers, continued until the last moment. Until this last moment, before the official announcement, the uncertainties about names and portfolios persisted. This impression of indecision and uncertainty is one of the gravest burdens with which the new government comes into being and from which it will only be able to free itself--it may be reiterated--by means of clarity and determination."

Madrid YA asserts on page 7: "Politically, the verdict on the crisis will be linked with the interpretation of Mr Abril's remaining in office as the continuation of a style of government deemed inappropriate to the gravity of the circumstances and the country's increasing disenchantment. But in this instance the answer cannot be given by a mere change of ministers, however skillful, nor would it have been given even by Mr Abril's replacement since it concerns the deterioration of the government's own image, and it is its prime minister who should repair that image."

It also comments: "A strong government needs a strong party, and the government party is not strong, not because it may not keep much of the country behind it but because, as a party, it is still virtually uninformed."

Madrid MUNDO OBRERO states on page 9: "One can give the polls in Andalusia, the Basque Country and Catalonia whatever interpretation one pleases. But could any sensible person take their results as a basis to justify the entry into the Cabinet of the most rightwing exponents of the UCD's Christian democrats?"

It asserts: "How rightly we demanded and continue to demand another government and another policy: The 'recluse' replies with a worse government because it is more right-wing, and with a policy which will repeat and exacerbate the worst mistakes--to put it mildly--of its predecessor."

OREJA COMMENTS ON BASQUE COUNTRY KILLING

LD132046 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 13 May 80

[Excerpts] The Spanish foreign minister, Marcelino Oreja, is accompanying the king and queen of Spain on their visit to Ecuador as part of their official retinue. Oreja was approached by a journalist on the subject of the latest attack in the Basque Country. He said: I am upset about the news of the murder of my dear friend Ramon Baglieto, one of my most loyal collaborators in Guipuzcpa.

In the face of so many savage acts, like those which are continually being repeated in our homeland, we the Basques have to react with courage, sacrificing our lives if need be, but not making any concessions to blackmail from murderers. And Oreja concluded: Let there be no mistake--and I say this here in Quito and will repeat it anywhere--you cannot negotiate with murderers. You must try murderers and condemn them. Let no one talk about amnesty for those who kill and want to break up our society.

COMMUNIQUE ON PCP DELEGATION'S TALKS WITH LABOR PARTY OFFICIALS

LD091057 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 1 May 80 p 3

[Apparent text of "Portuguese Communist Party-Swiss Labor Party Joint Communique"]

[Text] On the initiative of the Portuguese Communist Party (PCP) a delegation, headed by party Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal and comprising comrades Domingos Abrantes, member of the Political Commission and secretariat, and Albano Nunes, member of the Central Committee, met in Geneva on 16 April 1980 with a Swiss Labor Party delegation comprising Armand Maguin, party secretary general, Jean Vincent, honorary president, Hansjoerg Hofer, member of the Secretariat, and other members of the leadership.

The two parties' delegations exchanged information on the situation in their respective countries and on the struggle they are waging to defend the interests of their peoples and countries. There was also a broad exchange of views on the international situation and the world communist and workers movement.

During the conversation the Swiss Labor Party delegation expressed satisfaction at the victories achieved and expressed its full solidarity with the PCP and the Portuguese working people in their struggle to defend the gains of the revolution and the democratic regime.

For its part the PCP inquired about the struggle the Swiss Labor Party is waging to defend the working people's living standards and to safeguard and develop democratic rights and expressed the PCP's solidarity with Swiss communists and working people.

Concerning the international situation the two parties stressed the numerous important victories achieved in recent years by the socialist countries and progressive and revolutionary forces in various parts of the world--victories which are further blows to imperialism, which is currently trying to launch a counteroffensive against the struggle of the working people and the people and, if possible, recover lost ground.

This policy is manifested in the boosting of the arms race--specifically by the deployment of new American nuclear missiles in Europe--and in the new threat to detente, peaceful coexistence and world peace, accompanied by the orchestration of regular anti-communist and anti-Soviet campaigns.

The two parties believe that the primary tasks of the communist and workers parties and all progressive and democratic forces is to head a broad campaign for general balanced and controlled disarmament and for peaceful coexistence, the sole alternative to war.

The two parties confirmed, moreover, their complete solidarity with the peoples struggling for the recognition of their rights, their independence and the establishment of a regime of free choice.

The two delegations stressed the need to strengthen friendship and cooperation among the three big revolutionary forces in the modern world: the socialist countries, the workers movement in the capitalist countries, and national liberation movements.

They demonstrated their parties' desire to act for strengthening the unity of the international communist and workers movement, taking into account the different conditions of its activity and its independence.

The meeting, which took place in an atmosphere of warm and fraternal comradeship, ended with the two parties' delegations stressing the excellence of their relations and their determination to develop them further.

Neither is affected by the sanctions order. Danish industrial exports to Iran last year totalled 23.6 million dollars.

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON PROBLEMS OF OILFIELD DEFENSE

LD120849 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 6 May 80 p 16

[Unattributed report: "Defense Forces Plan Section Against Oil Terrorism"]

[Text] The essential parts of the coast guard's installations on land will be ready, and materials and equipment will be in place during the course of next year, Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg said in an address yesterday to the Rogaland section of the Norwegian National Association of Reserve Officers. In Stoltenberg's opinion the coast guard will be in a position to fulfill its objectives satisfactorily, but he added that the Defense Department is now planning a special section for use in crises on the continental shelf. On the subject of the defense of the oil platforms, Defense Minister Stoltenberg said the activities on the continental shelf must be considered in peacetime and in wartime. In peacetime the problems are connected with the surveillance of activities and the maintenance of sovereignty. It must be possible to protect oil installations against sabotage and terrorist actions: This is the responsibility of the police, and the defense forces can put troops at their disposal when necessary at police request. These troops would be subject to police orders in the event of any action. At present the defense forces are planning a special section to assist the police in the event of serious accidents, sabotage, hijacking and other terrorist activities on installations on the continental shelf. This section will total around 40 officers and enlisted men. The force will be recruited from the army's commando school, the marine commando group and frogmen. On the subject of defense problems on the continental shelf in conflicts and crises, Stoltenberg said that they are more complicated: They must be seen in the light of the limited resources we have at our disposal and of the fact that these problems cannot be solved by one nation alone. They must be seen in the context of the other objectives of our own defense forces and of the joint defense forces within NATO.

DENKTAS LEAVES FOR ISLAMIC CONFERENCE IN ISLAMABAD

TA131603 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 13 May 80

[Text] President Denktas today left for Islamabad to take part in the Islamic conference, which will be held there from 17 to 21 May. The Cyprus problem will be among the international topics discussed. The minister of foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, who will also take part in the conference, has already flown to Pakistan accompanied by two senior officials of his ministry. Mr Atakol will attend the preparatory meeting tomorrow before the conference opens on Saturday.

In a statement before leaving, President Denktas said he was going to the conference at a time when world peace was being threatened and events threatening peace were taking place inside or on the borders of some important Islamic countries. Mr Denktas stated that, in the face of these threats, Islamic unity and solidarity were of vital importance. Superpowers of the East and West who were trying to exploit the Islamic countries for their own interests and to use these countries as stepping stones for their political and military designs were now worried that Islamic unity had become a reality. The concern of the superpowers was clearly manifested in the recent operation of the United States in Iran and in the intervention of the Soviet Union in Afghanistan.

President Denktas also said that he would inform the conference that the Muslim Turkish Cypriot community, which had established its own state in Cyprus in the face of dangers threatening Islam, was on the side of those fighting for freedom to take their place within the Islamic world. He said he would also make it clear that the anti-Islamic attitude of the Greek Cypriot leadership did not reflect the views of the Federated State and that the Greek Cypriot administration in the south did not represent the government of the Muslim Turkish Cypriot population in the north.

ATAKOL: GREEK SIDE INTERFERING IN FLIGHTS TO UNDERMINE ECONOMY

TA091400 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 9 May 80

[Text] Minister of Defense, Foreign Affairs and Tourism Kenan Atakol has protested the Greek Cypriot attempts to undermine the Federated State's ties with the outside world to UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim. Atakol said that the Greek Cypriots were, through indirect methods, trying to prevent the flights to and from the Federated State of an aircraft the Turkish Cypriot airline rented from the Sobelair Belgian Airline and were thus trying to deal a deadly blow to the Turkish Cypriot economy. Describing the Greek Cypriot action as part of the economic embargo imposed on the Turkish Cypriot people, Atakol noted that it was contrary to the sixth article of the Denktas-Kiprianou agreement.

ERKMEN REITERATES NONPARTICIPATION IN EMBARGO ON IRAN

TA140811 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen has said that Turkey fulfills all its responsibilities within the framework of NATO. In a statement in Brussels, where he is participating in the foreign and defense ministers' special meeting of the NATO Defense Planning Committee, Erkmen said that member countries of the alliance are inclined to increase their defense expenditures by 3 percent but that Turkey does not feel that such an increase is necessary.

AKAJANS [MEDITERRANEAN NEWS AGENCY] reports Erkmen as having reiterated that Turkey will not participate in the Western countries' economic embargo on Iran. Erkmen said: We have earlier announced that these sanctions will not prove beneficial but detrimental. Our stand on the issue has not changed.

Erkmen noted that the Turkish Olympic Committee will decide independently on whether to boycott the Moscow Olympic games--an issue which has arisen following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. He added that the committee decision on the issue will be examined by the government. Erkmen is expected to hold bilateral contacts in Brussels today. He is also expected to meet with new U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie.

CUMHURIYET CITES QOTBZADEH ON TURKISH MEDIATION, TRADE

NC140757 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 11 May 80 pp 1, 9

[Excerpts] ISTANBUL NEWS SERVICE--Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh of Iran has stated that Iran has received assurances from the Turkish Government that the U.S. bases in Turkey will not be used against Iran. Returning from Yugoslavia, where he attended President Tito's funeral, Qotbzadeh stopped at Yesilkoy Airport where he stated that an improvement in Turkish-Iranian relations would be useful.

Qotbzadeh further stated that Iran is willing to obtain its needs from Turkey and that Iran wants to reach an agreement with Turkey. Qotbzadeh added that "such an agreement will bring both countries closer together." Qotbzadeh further added that Iran is ready to provide Turkey with all the oil it needs.

Answering a question concerning Turkey's mediation, Qotbzadeh said: "Our demands to the United States are clear. We have submitted our demands. There is no question of mediation. The Americans will either accept or reject our demands. Apart from this, nothing can be done."

HURRIYET REPORTS STATUS OF U.S.-DEFENSE AGREEMENT IN ASSEMBLY

NC140847 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 11 May 80 p 3

[Text] Ankara--It has been reported that the Foreign Ministry will not submit the supplements to the Turkish-U.S. joint defense cooperation agreement to parliament. It has also been reported that if the agreement is not ratified or if some of its clauses are amended by the Turkish Grand National Assembly, the committees of both countries will have to hold new negotiations. If this happens, the functioning of the bases in Turkey will be subjected to a new status until a new agreement is reached. The unratified agreement, on the other hand, could be acceptable as a document defining this provisional status.

Competent officials at the Foreign Ministry have confirmed reports that the supplements to the joint defense agreement will not be submitted to parliament.

It is stressed that the supplements, which have not been submitted to parliament, contain "confidential" military information. A competent official stated that the supplements are intended to regulate certain military aspects which could be considered as details. For example, he said, these supplements will specify such matters as the type of weapons the soldiers on guard duty will carry.

However, some officials point out that reference is made to these supplements in many parts of the agreement and note that it is difficult to reach a satisfactory conclusion with regard to the entire agreement.

Kemal Kayacan, chairman of the National Defense Committee of the National Assembly, has stated that the full text of the agreement has not been sent to the committee.

EVREN RETURNS FROM NATO MEETING, DISCUSSES POLITICS

TA131733 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 13 May 80

[Text] The chief of the General Staff, Gen Kenan Evren, returned to Turkey today after attending the 73rd session of the NATO military committee in Brussels. In a statement on arriving at Yesikloy Airport, General Evren said that Turkey's extremely important strategic position was stressed once again during the military committee meeting. He pointed out that certain friendly countries suggested that the NATO countries should extend all necessary aid to Turkey. General Evren added: I hope that it will be possible to increase the military aid we will receive a little more.

Recalling that a NATO exercise had been held in Turkey while he was abroad for the military committee meeting and for the (SHAPEX-80) maneuvers, General Evren said that he had observed with concern Greece's attitude in connection with this exercise. He said: This does not indicate friendship or neighborliness. The chief of the General Staff expressed the wish that such behavior would not recur. He recalled that Turkey did not have to inform Greece when taking off for international airspace.

General Evren then said that during the NATO military committee meeting he had been asked when Turkey would elect its president and that he had been dismayed about this question. He said: As a citizen I would like to say that this problem must be resolved. I believe that it is high time, even overdue, for all the parties to unite; not only the leftist parties or the rightist parties but the leftist, rightist and central parties to unite together and solve this problem. On arriving in Turkey I felt I must point that out.

General Evren noted that his visit had been very positive. Replying to a journalist who recalled that the NATO military committee meeting hall had been changed following rumors that the meeting could be listened to from outside, General Evren said: I am sure the NATO authorities are investigating that. I do not know whether it was a technical failure or whether it was deliberate. The NATO authorities will surely find the reason and explain it. We received the information that the talks at the meeting hall could be listened to from the outside. This can be deliberate, but it can also be a mistake. Such things should not happen.

Replying to another question on the presidential elections in Turkey, Gen Kenan Evren said: The parties must unite. I am not discriminating among the parties. I wish all the parties would cooperate and solve this problem. It is out of the question for me to discriminate among parties. They must all unite. This is the wish of the nation. Everyone is impatiently waiting for the results.

The chief of the General Staff was received at Yesilkoy Airport by 1st Army Commander Gen Necdet Urug, War Academies Commander Gen Bedrettin Demirel and other officers. Navy Commander Adm Bulent Ulusu returned to Ankara today after observing the (SHAPEX-80) exercises. Air Force Commander Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya went to Naples for talks in connection with those exercises.

VOTCP NOTES NATO MEETING; OPPOSES RATIFICATION OF U.S. TREATY

TA131034 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 13 May 80

[Unattributed commentary: "Turkey, Which Is Being Forced To Pull the NATO Cart, Is Being Used as a Trojan Horse Against Its Neighbors"]

[Excerpts] Dear listeners: A series of meetings are being held at NATO headquarters in Brussels. Foreign ministers are also attending these meetings, which began with the NATO planning group session under the slogan 'armament and Atlantic solidarity.' These meetings, which were scheduled for the end of July, were moved up upon the request of the United States. The Carter administration is anxious to include the NATO allies in its adventurist policy in the Middle East and to have this approved at NATO headquarters.

Turkey, which approves all the NATO decisions against peace and security, is sending its chief of staff and its defense and foreign ministers to the Brussels meeting. In a statement he made before his departure for Brussels, Defense Minister Birincioglu said: Our relations with Iran are special. However, we will protect NATO's interests. This statement again proves that the antipeople government will continue its policy of using our country as a Trojan Horse against our neighbors. This policy has brought only danger, grief and destruction to our people.

The Turkish Government has alloted 40 percent of the state budget to military expenditures and to NATO. In comparison with the national income of the NATO countries this is the highest per capita military expenditure. Turkey also has one of the highest rates of unemployment and inflation. The bilateral slavery agreements, the bases and our membership in NATO constitute the source of the economic, political and military threats to our country.

In the face of the massive reaction by our people against the slavery agreement, which lends permanence to the bases of aggression on our soil, the government leaders are resorting to the lie that the bases cannot be used for any operation without the knowledge of the Turkish authorities. Expressing his views on the great dangers caused by the bilateral slavery agreement in the 29 April issue of CUMHURIYET, senator for life Tunckanat said: There are U.S. strategic air force planes in the Incirlik Air Base carrying hydrogen bombs. It is not possible to control the destination of the planes taking off from this base. Planes taking off from this base could fly for thousands of kilometers, participate in a military operation and then return to the same or another base. The Turkish authorities would not even be aware of such an action, because it is the Americans who give the orders.

Dear listeners, as you can see, through the bilateral slavery agreement, the U.S. imperialists and the NATOites are rendering our country helpless and presenting us with a fait accompli. They are endangering Turkey. This document of betrayal, which transforms our country into a factor against regional peace and security, should not be ratified by the Grand National Assembly. The agitation and propaganda to be stepped up throughout the country should primarily be aimed at preventing, through massive and organized actions, the ratification of the slavery agreement by the Grand National Assembly. All progressive and democratic forces and our toiling people should unite around this primary goal.

OZAL COMMENTS ON DEBT DEFERRAL BY IMF, WORLD BANK

TA140742 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] The Prime Ministry Under Secretary and Deputy Under Secretary of the State Planning Organization Turgut Ozal said that work is being conducted to prepare a 3-year deferral program for Turkish debts which are due. According to TRT correspondent Berna Kulac, Ozal said that he aimed at speeding up work on deferring the payment of debts. Ozal added that in talks held with the IMF and the World Bank officials Turkey's relations with the two organizations were reviewed and that the officials were briefed in detail on the current economic situation in Turkey. Ozal noted that the World Bank is considering extending a loan of $600 million to Turkey this year. However, Ozal did not give any information on the new standby [last word in English] agreement expected to be signed between Turkey and the IMF.

[Text] The contacts of Erbakan [National Salvation Party leader] with Afghan counter-revolutionary (Mukhadjirzadeh) has caused reaction. The progressive public which supports the Afghan revolution has reacted against the 5-day visit to Ankara of CIA agent and Afghan counterrevolutionary (Abdul Karim Mukhadjirzadeh) and his meeting with Erbakan. It is reported that (Mukhadjirzadeh) has begun to work at the anticommunist radio stations under CIA administration in Munich. It is also reported that the NSP administration, and especially Erbakan, are supporting the CIA agent who secretly entered Turkey, and that he has been supplied with housing and a car. Erbakan's behavior, which proved that he is pursuing a double policy toward the Islamic peoples, is being denounced.

They drew up plans for a meeting of communist parties from the capitalist European countries on the crisis, European integration and workers' and democratic struggles. 'SHCHARANSKIY TRIBUNAL' 12-13 MAY REPORTED

[P.T.S. report: "'Shcharanskiy Tribunal' To Be Held in The Hague 12-13 May"]

[Text] The Hague--Rarely have more "personalities" participated in the proceedings of any tribunal held to help imprisoned Soviet dissidents than will participate in the proceedings of the tribunal in support of Anatoliy Shcharanskiy--who was sentenced in July 1977 to 3 years' imprisonment and 10 years' detention in a strict-regime labor camp for espionage--which will sit in Amsterdam [as published] 12-13 May.

Michel Rocard, Professor Lwoff and attorney Badinter (who will appear as expert witness) will participate in the debate as the French representatives. Mrs King, widow of the assassinated American black leader, will announce the "verdict" Tuesday, said Harry Van den Bergh, Dutch Socialist deputy and chairman of the Friends of Anatoliy Shcharanskiy Foundation, during a press conference. Former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, former Portuguese Prime Minister Mario Soares, former Dutch Prime Minister Joop den Uyl and former U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Andrew Young will also participate in the debate.

According to the organizers of the tribunal, Shcharanskiy is held in a concentration camp and his state of health is causing grave concern. This view is not shared by the Soviet APN agency which, reacting to the projected Amsterdam meeting, has issued a health bulletin on the prisoner with a view to proving that he "needs no hospital treatment." In APN and TASS reports published in a number of Dutch papers, the people who are scheduled to participate in the "tribunal" have been called "opponents of detente and international cooperation who want to contribute to the anti-Soviet hysteria fostered by the White House." An invitation extended by the Dutch organizers to Ambassador to the Hague Vasiliy Tolstikov to state Moscow's viewpoint to the meeting has not been accepted.

AIR COMMANDER ON INCREASE OF FORCES ON NORTHERN FLANK

LD141255 Hamburg DPA in German 1158 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] Keil--The air forces on NATO's northern flank are to be increased by about 50 percent by 1984. The deputy supreme commander of the air force in this region, Lt Gen Jorgen Brodersen, described the planned transfer of several squadrons to the Scandinavian/Baltic region to journalists in Kiel today as a "regionalization of operational reserves."

Brodersen said following a 3-day NATO General Staff meeting that this plan's aim is to bring forces to the front line more quicklyin the event of a defense requirement. These and similar plans for land forces on the European northern flank have existed for some time and are not a "direct reaction" to military discussions or recent political events. Most of the new squadrons for Norway, Denmark and northern Germany are to be recruited from the present "strategic reserve" of the NATO Supreme European Command.

Approximately 60 generals, admirals and staff officers from the NATO command for northern Europe attended the conference which was entitled "Blue Horizon 80." They came from Denmark, Great Britain, Canada, Norway, the United States and the Federal Republic.

DEFENSE MINISTER SAYS MORE AID TO GO TO TURKEY

TA132046 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 13 May 80

[Text] It was decided at the NATO Defense Planning Committee's spring meeting, which began in Brussels today, that Turkey should receive more aid due to its strategic importance. National Defense Minister Ahmet Ihsan Birincioglu, who is in Brussels, told our correspondent that the committee members discussed the importance of the alliance's southwestern flank and agreed on Turkey's key position. Birincioglu said that the aid to be extended by the alliance members would be given in various forms.

Reports concerning the alliance's defense issues were also discussed at the spring meeting of the NATO Defense Planning Committee. National Defense Minister Birincioglu, who represented Turkey at the meeting later met with FRG Finance [as heard] Minister Hans Apel.

Birincioglu told our correspondent that during their meeting, Apel said that the FRG would extend a total of DM330 million worth of military aid to Turkey during this year and next year. Hans Apel said that Turkey would receive military aid worth DM150 million this year and DM180 million next year. He added that the aid would continue to flow during the following years.

The NATO Defense Planning Committee foreign ministers' and defense ministers' special meeting will be held in Brussels tomorrow.

BELGIUM

END OF INTERPARTY DELIBERATIONS SEEN APPROACHING

LD141155 Brussels LE SOIR in French 10 May 80 p 2

[J. Ly. article: "Finishing Stretch to Lambermont Before Martens Decides...."]

[Text] The negotiators met again at Mr Martens' official residence at 1000 Friday [9 May]. The texts which the experts worked on carefully throughout Thursday are again on the table: According to the plan, the negotiators of the six parties involved are to draft the final chapters of the government statement. They will be studying the results of the working groups which formulated the community and regional statements. Whether or not the 9 May deadline will be respected depends on the time spent on this study which many people hope will be the last; Mr Martens still has until midnight....

The outgoing prime minister spent Thursday in Belgrade attending Marshal Tito's funeral. The negotiations have thus been marking time, which has beenput to use for the writing up of the agreements effected Wednesday.

If the program that the "formateur" [premier-designate] settled Tuesday evening is still being pursued, one of the working groups which met Thursday was to have prepared the state reform which will be added to the government statement, and the other should have prepared the discussion about the statements inappropriate to the future executives. The latter group was in fact split, since the linguistic communities and the regions alone are to formulate their wishes before a discussion with all the negotiators.

At the end of his first "round of talks" Mr Martens presented an agreement on the community plan; featured among the various points of this preagreement were the new institutions' powers. These "autonomy issues" were to be expressed as a statement or action program for the community and regional executives Thursday.

Let us bear in mind that the "autonomy issues" in question fall into two groups: regional issues on the one hand and cultural or individualized issues on the other. The regional assemblies will have authority in nine well-defined areas: national development, environment, housing, water policy, economic policy (including planning and social industrial projects), energy policy, secondary powers (essentially the commune associations as a public utility), employment policy and applied research. Certain aspects within these spheres have, naturally, been retained within the powers of the central state, such as coal mining, naval yards and even dams.

Among the powers accorded to the community assemblies by the agreement which arose between the candidates to the six-party coalition and featured cultural issues and those termed "individualized" ones: This somewhat unsophisticated expression refers, in fact, to all those issues which concern primarily the citizen's very person: health care, family policy, social aid, measures to help the handicapped, immigrants, the aged, protection of the young, and so forth. The cultural matters include, of course, language, the fine arts, museums, libraries and other cultural institutions, radio and television broadcasting, higher education, leisure, tourism, intellectual, moral and social training and so forth.

The aggregate of these powers thus gives the various working parties which met Thursday some useful room for maneuver to formulate a "community or regional statement" in the image of the government statements. [paragraph continues]

It is more than likely, however, that the expert groups have "cleaned up" the texts which the negotiators have repeatedly discussed since the Lambermont talks began. Factors appropriate to one or another community and relating to other aspects of the discussion have certainly been added to the community and regional powers: education policy, foreign affairs, defense problems....

The days' results are thus to be submitted again to the negotiators gathered around Mr Martens. The "formateur" will be able to get down to the task from which he takes his title only after this final (?) study: He will be trying to form a team. As ever, there are numerous candidates for this final step before we emerge from the crisis.

LE MONDE PREDICTS SHORT LIFE FOR NEW MARTENS GOVERNMENT

LD141157 Paris LE MONDE in French 13-14 May 80 p 8

[Pierre de Vos dispatch: "Martens Has Formed His Third Cabinet"]

[Text] Brussels--On 11 May, 1 month and 2 days after his resignation, [Belgian Premier-Designate] Martens solved the crisis by forming a more rightwing coalition than the last one, with the liberals joining the outgoing majority (Social Christians and socialists). He will have 175 out of 212 votes in the house and 153 out of 181 in the Senate. However, this agreement is to be submitted to the party congresses on 13 and 15 May and is likely to encounter serious difficulties.

The agreement is based on acceptance of the harshest austerity program for 40 years, relating in particular to the reduction of "social gains." Although regionalization is moving toward almost complete autonomy for Flemings and Walloons, it is at the expense of Brussels' status, and Brussels will remain a state territory directly dependent on the government.

Finally, Foreign Minister Simonet, a Socialist who is accused of excessive Atlanticism and who has been abandoned by his own party, the French-speaking Socialist Party, has resigned from that party's bureau and has let it be known that he intends to leave political life. He could be replaced by Flemish Social Christian Party President Tindemans. All partners agree that he should be offered this portfolio with the essential aim of removing him from internal policy.

Agreement between the three political families would never have been possible without the fear of a 15 June return to the polls for the fourth election in 4 years. However, the third Martens Cabinet is likely to have a very short life in face of the general trade union offensive expected in the fall.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE VOTES NOT TO GO TO MOSCOW

LD151212 Hamburg DPA in German 1204 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] Duesseldorf--The FRG will send no athletes to the Olympic games in Moscow. The meeting of the members of the FRG National Olympic Committee decided today by 59 votes to 40 not to send a team to the Olympics.

Boelling: Government Grateful

LD151306 Hamburg DPA in German 1229 GMT 80

[Text] Bonn--On behalf of the Federal Government, State Secretary Klaus Boelling has welcomed the National Olympic Committee's [NOC] decision. Boelling said: "The Federal Government is grateful that the majority of NOC members appreciated the importance of the arguments of the Bundestag and the Federal Government." Boelling again recalled the Federal Government's recommendation of 23 April, 1980, in which the government said it was aware how hard nonparticipation in the Olympic games would be for many athletes who had for years been preparing themselves in rigorous training and had made personal sacrifices.

CDU's Kohl Welcomes Decision

LD151308 Hamburg DPA in German 1226 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] Bonn--The CDU has welcomed the NOC's decision not to send a team to Moscow. CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl stated immediately after the announcement of the vote that the USSR's incursion into Afghanistan had destroyed the foundations for peaceful Olympic games in Moscow this year. He said: "The games should only be held in a country which lives in peace with its neighbors." The United Nations General Assembly impressively confirmed that this is not the case at present in the Soviet Union when it condemned, with two-thirds of the votes of all nations, the USSR's incursion into Afghanistan. "We have great understanding for our athletes who, after hard preparation for the 1980 Olympics, are making the great sacrifice of not participating," said Kohl. "Sport, however, cannot be separated from the moral and ethical standards governing coexistence between nations."

Consultations Before Vote

LD141752 Hamburg DPA in German 1645 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] Bonn--In view of the continued Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, Federal President Karl Carstens has spoken out against participation by sportsmen from the Federal Republic in the Moscow Olympic games. He told some 50 members of the general assembly of the German National Olympic Committee (NOC) in Bonn today that he supports the decision of the Bundestag and the Federal Government in favor of an Olympic boycott in line with the American example. At the 1-hour meeting, which had been suggested by Carstens, at Villa Hammerschmidt, Federal Interior Minister Gerhard Baur expressed the Federal Government's view. The meeting was attended by NOC President Willi Daume, the president of the German Sports Federation, Willi Weyer, NOC Vice Presidents Claus Hess, August Kirsch and Fritz Wagnerberger as well as Presidium members Josef Nechermann and Eberhard von Brauchitsch. The federal president's spokesman said that Carstens had wished to make plain his view on the issue, which he had not previously stated in public, on the eve of the final NOC decision to be made in Duesseldorf tomorrow. Daume and Weyer left immediately after the meeting with the other NOC members for Duesseldorf. They said that they are satisfied with the discussion and that there is no reason for them to revise their attitude. [words indistinct]

GDR Sports Chief Denies 'Threats'

LD142026 Hamburg DPA in German 1819 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] Hamburg--Willi Daume, president of the FRG National Olympic Committee [NOC], and Manfred Ewald, president of the GDR Gymnastic and Sports Association, met today on the eve of the decision by the FRG National Olympic Committee on the Federal Republic's participation in the Moscow Olympic games. Daume said afterward that it had been a "rational conversation without pressure." Whether it could affect the NOC decision to be taken in Duesseldorf tomorrow was for the delegates to decide. Ewald said that Eastern reaction in the event of the Federal Republic boycotting the Moscow games had not been discussed. He rejected reports alleging that in his talks with Daume and--the day before--with Willi Weyer, president of the German Sports Federation, he had threatened sanctions. He said: "There have never been any threats, nor intimidation." The GDR was interested in developing relations, he said.

GENSCHER RENEWS ARMS NEGOTIATION APPEAL TO EAST

LD141748 Hamburg DPA in German 1658 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today renewed his appeal to the Eastern side to respond to the Western offer of negotiations on medium-range weapons and troop reductions in Central Europe. He said on Suedwestfunk today that it is now really up to the Warsaw Pact to make a "constructive and positive response" if the world is to avoid another arms race. Last December's Western proposals, he said, are realistic because they are based only only on Western interests "but also consider the other side's security interests." Regarding the Warsaw Pact summit meeting, he said: "I believe that such an invitation to the states assembled in Warsaw will be heard there." Genscher expressed hope that the talks in Vienna on Friday between U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie and his Soviet colleague, Andrey Gromyko, will provide a chance to discuss the issue of negotiations on medium-range weapons. The Federal Government welcomes this meeting because it has a vital interest in talks being held between the two great powers. It is convinced that the Soviet Union is as little inclined as the West to jeopardize peace.

STRAUSS ACCUSES SCHMIDT OF ANTI-AMERICANISM

LD141537 Hamburg DPA in German 1418 GMT 14 May 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--The Union candidate for chancellor, Franz Josef Strauss, has accused Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of having "openly played the Moscow card" during the last few months and of having encouraged anti-U.S. trends in the Federal Republic. In an article published by DEUTSCHES MONATSBLATT for CDU members, which has appeared for the CDU congress, Strauss wrote that a delegate of the SPD parliamentary group, Chairman Herbert Wehner, was told the conditions for the chancellor's invitation to the Soviet Union. Moscow itself places a high value on giving Schmidt election assistance "so that Messrs Wehner, Brandt and Bahr will still be able to continue their anti-Americanism after 5 October." The chancellor then called down Hamburg for a partial lifting of NATO's decision to counterarm. "In this way he openly played the Moscow card." The to-ing and fro-ing regarding the acceptance of the invitation, which went on for weeks, was simply a pretence of statesmanlike cautiousness. Strauss further stated that the chancellor was exposing himself as a "bourgeois cardboard comrade of the SPD leftwingers." when he warned his own party against anti-Americanism, even though he himself had brought about alienation in the United States.

CDU/CSU DEFENSE EXPERT WELCOMES NATO DETERMINATION FOR UNITY

LD141616 Hamburg DPA in German 1459 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] Bonn--On behalf of the CDU/CSU parliamentary party, its defense expert Willi Weiskirch has welcomed the determination, expressed at the NATO ministerial meeting, to respond to the continuing and increasing Soviet threat by the unity of the alliance and the solidarity of all partners in conjunction with the measures needed to maintain its deterrent and defense capability. He said that the CDU/CSU noted with satisfaction that the United States will not transfer American forces from Europe. The CDU/CSU shares NATO's view that these forces are indispensable to NATO's deterrent power. The CDU/CSU supports the need for modernising NATO forces, a need which had been emphasised by the ministers in Brussels.

FORMER LIBYAN MINISTER POSSIBLE TARGET FOR ATTACK

LD141626 Hamburg DPA in German 1454 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] Bonn--According to the Bonn CID, 37-year-old former Libyan Minister (Muhammad Duek) may be a target for an attack. The police said that the present whereabouts of the Libyan emigre is unknown. If he is still in the Federal Republic, he is urged to contact the police at once.

The Bonn CID is investigating the murder of 43-year-old former Libyan diplomat Umran al-Mahdawi, who was killed in the center of Bonn on 10 May by a 26-year-old Libyan who fired four shots at him. The police said yesterday that there was a growing suspicion that this murder had a political background. In recent months, several Libyan emigres thought to be opposed to the [word indistinct] regime in Tripoli have been killed in Britain and Italy. Searches have been carried out in various localities in the Federal Republic in connection with the Bonn murder.

PAPER ON GDR ECONOMIC RESTRICTIONS AGAINST POLES

DW131033 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 13 May 80 p 12

[Article signed KF: "Via the Pocketbook"]

[Text] They were never particularly popular, the masses of Poles who came particularly to Dresden and East Berlin with their enormous eagerness to buy and with their long shopping list for whole villages. With the "range of goods" becoming shorter, the disgust of the locals increased; the East Berlin government came under pressure. Now it has undertaken two things to improve matters: the exchange rate of zloty for Eastern marks has been increased considerably, and coupons have been introduced for the sale of gasoline to foreigners from the East bloc. These are coupons of a very special character: They do not indicate cheaper, but more expensive gasoline. As regards the revaluation of the Eastern mark vis-a-vis the zloty, one could almost speak of a piece of common German economic fate: It is the third revaluation of its kind since 1975, signs of a slide in wealth and purchasing power to the advantage of the GDR. What is remarkable about all this is that neither Poland nor the GDR have stepped on the administrative brakes; the border remains open. The braking down is taking place in a good capitalist way, so to speak, via the pocketbook.

AFRICAN SUMMIT DISCUSSES CHAD, AID, 'ORGANIC COMMUNITY'

FROLINAT'S Abba Sidick Cited

LD141613 Paris LE MONDE in French 10 May 80 p 6

[Philippe Decraene report: "France Has Duties Toward Chad"]

[Text] Nice--As if to echo the statements by Senegal President Senghor who, on his arrival in Nice Thursday afternoon, stressed the scope and gravity of this conflict, Chad was highlighted in Nice that very evening. Indeed, before the opening of the first plenary session of the seventh Franco-African summit this Friday, 9 May, precisely when Mr Giscard d'Estaing was giving a banquet for 120 people at the prefecture in honor of his African guests, Dr Abba Sidick, one of the "founding fathers" of the Chad National Liberation Front (FROLINAT) gave a press conference.

The National Unity Transition Government (GUNT) higher education minister protested the presence of an official Chadian delegation headed by GUNT Vice President Colonel Kamougue. "There is no more reason to admit the Chad Government delegation today than there was last year in Kigali," Mr Abba Sidick said in particular, recalling that the Chadian delegates were not allowed to take part in the work of the sixth Franco-African summit in the Rwandan capital. Abba Sidick justified his viewpoint via the fact that the GUNT, whose legality depends on a general consensus shown by the representatives of the 11 factions which signed the Lagos agreements, should take its decisions unanimously. However, he said, the backing of Mr Hissein Habre and several of his colleagues from their ministerial posts by President Goukouni Oueddei was decided unilaterally and arbitrarily and is therefore null and void.

The leader of the original FROLINAT also launched an appeal to the African heads of state and the French Government. With regard to the former he said he would try to meet with some of them in Nice, including President Senghor, and added: "I have come to show the African leaders their responsibilities. Whether you like it or not, Libyan expansionism exists and is threatening the whole of Africa with general contamination." Of France the Chadian leader said: "France still has duties toward Chad. It has the necessary means of imposing a cease-fire now, as it did last year, and it is its duty to impose this cease-fire on the warring factions...."

Communique Issued

LD141615 Paris LE MONDE in French 13-14 May 80 p 6

[Philippe Decraene report: "Paris Intends To Restructure Its Bilateral Aid, and Its Partners Want To Obtain a Better Deal From It"]

[Text] Nice.. 'The African holiday is over. The time has come to set to work and master our countries' development," Niger President General Kountche told us Sunday, 11 May, the day after the closing of the seventh Franco-African conference in Nice. According to him this conference constituted a continuation of the recent extraordinary conference held by the OAU in Lagos. Indeed, all the points in Saturday's final communique relate to strictly economic questions aside from one devoted to the "organic community" which [Senegalese President] Senghor, doyen of the conference, proposed to set up.

In light of the repercussions of the world crisis on their respective states, the representatives of the 25 African countries taking part in the summit decided to do everything in their power to increase the effectiveness of their own efforts and to take the greatest possible advantage of international aid, which they hope will be increased thanks to France's efforts. Indeed, Paris is going to restructure its bilateral aid and, in keeping with an idea which has gained increasing support in recent years, will support the portfolios presented throughout the world by its African partners and friends. In this context, concerted action for the development of Africa, which was planned 4 years ago, could play a coordinating role between France, the FRG, Belgium, Britain and Canada and may take over part of France's aid burden.

In the same spirit, French diplomacy will play an active role in planning the all-embracing negotiations which are to be opened in the United Nations, stressing the importance the Africans attach to the revival of the North-South dialogue. Similarly, since the African delegations confirmed their support for the plan for a "trialogue" among Europe, the Arab countries and the African states, Paris will speed up its implementation so that it precedes the eighth Franco-African conference planned for 1981 in Kinshasa.

Reservations on "Organic Community"

Despite some agreement on economic questions as a whole, on the fringe of the summit and during the press conference given at the Hotel Negresco Saturday [10 May] by Presidents Giscard d'Estaing, Senghor of Senegal, and Habyarimana of Rwanda, there was evidence of a serious contrast between the optimism shown by the French president and the pessimism of his two African partners--a pessimism which was particularly marked in the Rwandan president. Similarly there were signs of discord in the stance taken by several delegations with regard to the plan for an "organic community" put forward by President Senghor.

While a large majority came out in favor of this plan and although the conference participants decided to set up a permanent secretariat--headquartered in Dakar--of ministerial conferences of countries which are fully or partially French-speaking, France--or, more precisely, some French circles concerned with the defense of the French-speaking community--apparently expressed serious reservations. This attitude even seems to have been the reason for the delay in issuing the communique, which was published several hours after the conference ended.

Finally, with regard to Chad whose shadow loomed constantly over the conference, Mr Senghor reaffirmed that the OAU will appeal to the United Nations and its "blue helmets" if the neutral inter-African force fails to enforce the cease-fire in Ndjamena. However, before referring the matter to the United Nations the OAU will make one more effort to find a specifically African solution, and this formidable mission falls particularly to President Sekou Toure of Guinea, President Shehu Shagari of Nigeria and President Eyadema of Togo.

INTELLIGENCE OFFICIAL ARRESTED FOR PRESS LEAKS

LD132340 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2200 GMT 13 May 80

[Excerpt] Dr Silvano Russomanno, deputy chief of SISDE [Democratic Intelligence and Security Service], the intelligence service for the defense of the democratic state, has been arrested in Rome on the order of Deputy Public Prosecutor Giorgio Ciampani. Russomanno was apparently the person who delivered to Fabio Isman, the IL MESSAGGERO correspondent who is in jail in the same connection, the copy of the minutes of the interrogation of Patrizio Peci, the member of the Red Brigades who has repented. Isman edited the publication of ample excerpts of the document in a series of articles which appeared in the Rome newspaper.

The day after Isman's arrest there were rumors that the person who delivered the copy of the minutes to the journalist was possibly an official of the Ministry of Interior. The investigation then also encompassed the SISDE. Last week, Deputy Public Prosecutor Ciampani went to the SISDE headquarters and interrogated Russomanno and other officials. The warrant for the arrest of the SISDE official refers to continuous involvement in leaking official secrets and the arbitrary publication of penal proceedings.

The arrest of Dr Russomanno, who is at present in Regina Coeli Jail, took place at the end of the first interrogation, during which the magistrate concluded that there was sufficient evidence to issue the order. It has been learned that the judges have decided to hold a summary trial and it is therefore likely that the sentence will be pronounced on Friday or Saturday at the latest.

Press Commentaries

AU151605 Rome ANSA in English 1520 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 14 (ANSA)--The arrest yesterday of the deputy chief of Italy's internal security service (SISDE) on a charge of making available to a Rome journalist a copy of the interrogation of the self-confessed Red Brigades terrorist Patrizio Peci, sparked a range of speculation in frontpage editorials in the Italian dailies today.

Silvano Russomanno allegedly gave a copy of the policy interrogation to journalist Fabio Isman who was arrested last week after a Rome daily, IL MESSAGGERO, published excerpts of the sub judice document.

For the Milan paper IL GIORNO, "the episode bears implications which cannot be minimized by placing it under the heading of a simple news leak. The arrest of Russomanno raises disquieting questions far beyond those connected to the charge filed against him". Continuing with the note of alarm, the editorial said that the immediate question is "why did the SISDE deputy chief, whose organization is in the forefront of the battle against terrorism, feel that after receiving the photocopies of the statements by the repentent brigade member he had to disclose them rather than use them for his institutional duties?"

Rome's IL MESSAGGERO, for its part, asked, "how was it that the magistrates arrived at such a serious decision and one fraught with such consequences yet to be discovered. The decision to remove the deputy head of a service so sensitive in this uncertain time must have involved careful evaluations of the evidence", the editorial added by way of an answer.

The Socialist Party organ, AVANTI, speculated that, "it is clear that for the magistrates to have made such a serious decision due to the force of circumstances they must have in hand much more than clues and suspicions".

Looking at another aspect of the affair, the Socialist daily echoed the opinion of a number of other commentators with the statement that, "the agencies and the judiciary have demonstrated a desire to severely prosecute anyone who, in any manner, damages the fullscale action being effectively conducted against terrorism".

According to the Milan daily CORRIERE DELLA SERA, "the repercussions from the affair are certain to be farflung and weighty." "It has been learned", the editorial disclosed, "that the state attorney general does not intend to limit the investigation into the episode but will extend it to the 'revelations' published by Isman in IL MESSAGGERO".

The Christian Democrat paper IL POPOLO aired the view that, "it is improbable that Russomanno did everything on his own initiative" then asked whether the two days before the scheduled trial of the MESSAGGERO newsman would be enough "to delve into the shocking case and especially into the political reasons behind the episode, aside from the news leak".

A number of other commentators underscored the sad state of affairs apparently prevailing in the nation's secret services as, for example, in the headline over the editorial in Turin's LA STAMPA, "Services Without Secrets". The paper maintained that "our secret services have not had a good time of it in the postwar period" and indicated that "Now that confidence in these services was returning this new episode cropped up when comforting successes in the fight against subversion were being registered".

The Rome journal LA REPUBBLICA noted that, "once again, despite the reforms effected, the secret services are dragging the country's institutions into the grotesque. One of their highest officials has been caught distributing confidential documents to the newspapers. For what reason? For money? For faulty thinking? To channel the information?

"What can be said about a nation where such incidents occur?" the editorial asked in its string of question before posing yet another interrogative, "What will the Interior Ministry and the premier have to say about the matter?" LA REPUBBLICA then affirmed that "just at the time that Russomanno was handing the document on the repentant terrorist over to IL MESSAGGERO, Carabinieri General Carlo Alberto Dalla Chiesa, who coordinates a major share of the anti-terrorist operations, is said to have warned the deputy secretary of the Christian Democrat Party, Carlo Donat-Cattin, that statements exist naming his son as one of the leaders of the Prima Linea (Front Line) terrorist organization.

"We sincerely hope", the editorial concluded, "that the allegations made by a member of Parliament turn out to be false. If they are true, they will be a big matter".

FOREIGN MINISTRY CONTACTS LIBYA ON ARREST OF AIRLINE OFFICIAL

LD141802 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] The Italian Foreign Ministry has contacted the Libyan Government in connection with the arrest of Francesco Franco Corsi, 42, at the Alitalia terminal at Tripoli Airport on 26 April. Corsi is accused of spying and his arrest followed the arrest of the director of the Libyan Airlines by the Rome police who accused him of protecting the assassins of a rich merchant who was killed by 3 men on 18 April in Via Veneto. Corsi's arrest is therefore a case of retaliation on the part of the Libyan authorities following recent arrests in Italy.

PORTUGUESE PRESIDENT EANES, PERTINI HOLD FIRST ROUND OF TALKS

LD141830 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 14 May 80

[Excerpts] President Pertini and Ramalho Eanes, the president of Portugal, have held their first talks at the Quirinale. Eanes arrived in Rome this afternoon on an official visit. A report from the Quirinale by Claudio Angelini:

The EEC and Nato and Europe's policy in favor of its southern zones and the Western military alliance for security and strategic equilibrium in the world represent the two main themes of this visit by Antonio Ramalho Eanes, the first by a Portuguese president to Italy. Pertini met him 6 days ago in Belgrade during Tito's funeral. The talks at the Quirinale lasted about an hour, ending in a general agreement on various themes. Italy is in favor of Portugal's entry into the EEC. The conclusion of preliminary negotiations is due next June under Italian chairmanship. The two presidents then discussed security and stability in the Mediterranean, the relations between Europe and Africa and bilateral relations, which are good and developing rapidly.

BERLINGUER SPEECH TO PCE RALLY (EUROCOMMUNISM, DETENTE

LD150717 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 11 May 80 pp 1,9

["Text" of speech delivered by PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer at PCE 60th anniversary celebrations in Madrid on 10 May: "Carrillo and Berlinguer Celebrate PCE's 60th Anniversary in Madrid"]

[Excerpt] The material and moral conditions in which the younger generation lives has led many of them to reject the capitalist society which impedes their every prospect and any calm, happy and human future. At present the youth, even those who recognize the historical value of the great proletarian, people's and national revolutions which have taken place, starting with the 1917 October Revolution, are not attracted by the ways in which socialism has been implemented hitherto. This produces the possibility, and I would even say the great opportunity, which is before us now if we are able to gain credence for and promote--with the ideas we are proposing, the action that we are carrying out and the experiments which we are making--the idea that there can be a new socialism and that it is possible to build it by paths which are different from those hitherto followed by the workers movement in both the East and the West.

Is this not precisely the substance of Eurocommunism? Eurocommunism is a path which values and makes use of the experiments, victories and defeats experienced by socialists and communists throughout the world, but it criticizes them, stands apart from them and tends to move beyond them to reach a socialist solution which is historically and culturally adapted to the West's best traditions and present conditions.

It is a path toward socialism which, as we have said many times, progresses at all times with respect for the rules of democracy and in guaranteeing freedom; it is a path toward socialism which, to be victorious, requires an agreement (which might go so far as unitary reorganization on new bases) among all the forces which are truly representative of the working class and the people's masses, whatever their inspiration, and it also requires a resumption of dialogue and detente at the international level and cooperation and peace.

Tensions, hotbeds of conflict, acts of force, hot wars, fanaticism of various types--all are in danger of leading mankind to a nuclear hecatomb.

There are many reasons for this tension. Today, however, the most dangerous aspect of the situation lies in the aggravation of the conflicts between the United States and the Soviet Union. We regard this as the main cause of the crisis in detente, the lack of any mutual trust and the rise, even against the will of these two countries and their governments, of a real threat to peace in the world.

Detente in Crisis

During the recent trip which our delegation made to China we maintained, in talks with our Chinese comrades, that a third world war is not inevitable. However, it has now become possible. So, how and with what forces and initiatives can this terrible danger be averted? How can the logic of power, retaliations, military interventions and the violation of the states' territorial integrity be stopped? How can a lasting and definitive peace be restored in the Middle East, the Palestinian people's rights to an independent state recognized, the conditions for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan created, the tension in the Arab Gulf reduced, the U.S.-Iranian conflict peacefully settled, the security and sovereignty of all of Indochina's peoples guaranteed and normal relations between the USSR and China achieved? Finally how can the arms race be stopped--a race which has made our continent the most explosive of the nuclear arsenals?

The path exists and so do the forces: What is needed is the will, the determination and the courage.

West Europe is and ought to be among these forces. That is why we are fighting for a united Europe, transformed in its economic and social structures, with a new ruling class and new politicians and governments--a Europe which, without calling into question the Atlantic pact of the countries which signed it, works actively for detente and disarmament; a determined Europe eager to establish with the peoples and states of the Third and Fourth Worlds a relationship of cooperation based on equality, respect for sovereignty and independence and mutual benefit and justice.

Peace, disarmament, cooperation and a new world economic order are the answer to the present crisis and to the unsolved problems of underdevelopment, backwardness and famine in the Third World and of inflation, unemployment and social disintegration in the capitalist world.

There is therefore a need for a courageous West European political initiative, especially from the West European workers movement. Not only from the workers movement, however, and certainly not if it is divided. We must realize that the objectives of peace, disarmament, the defense and development of democracy, and social change are felt and shared by broad masses who follow not only our party but also other parties and associations.

The struggle to attain these objectives must therefore be extended; it must embrace a whole range of different forces and include the search for cooperation and understanding not only among the communist parties but must promote understanding with the European socialist and social democratic parties, with the Christian organizations, movements and institutions, and with all the democratic and progressive forces in West Europe.

However, these are not the limits of our initiative, and the forces in the world which can and want to pursue our objectives are not limited to the ones I have mentioned.

I am thinking mainly of the nonaligned movement.

The day before yesterday, saddened and moved, we paid our respects, together with the heads of state and government and political leaders from all countries, to Comrade Tito--legendary partisan leader, president of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia who was also one of the architects and founders of that vast movement of peoples and countries from all continents which has already made a valuable contribution toward leading the world out of the dark cold war period and opening new paths of cooperation and peace for mankind.

Jealous of Yugoslav independence, sovereignty and national unity and of his party's autonomy, Comrade Tito will be remembered not only for having been an ardent defender of these principles but also for the work he did to reduce divisions and conflicts within the international workers and communist movement.

Soviets and Chinese

Although given the different conditions in which we are working, we have been motivated by the specific intention of extending the network of democratic and peaceful forces whether in government or not, whether in Europe or in other parts of the world and which have not only viewpoints and reasons for agreement with us but also for disagreement.

We have acted and spoken with equal clarity, frankness and consistency in Strassburg, Washington, Moscow and Beijing.

If, for instance, we told our Chinese comrades that we do not agree with regarding the USSR as an adversary, indeed as the main adversary, we disagree equally with those who regard China as an enemy--that vast country in which almost one-fourth of the Earth's population lives and which legitimately aspires to become a developed modern nation and to have its rightful influence on the world scene and which could also have a major role in creating a world order based on peace and justice.

With this same loyal and open spirit we must also call for the intervention and presence of those high spiritual authorities which, like the Catholic Church and the other churches and the associations linked to them, claim to uphold values of peace and disarmament, fraternity and justice: They too can make a major contribution to the resumption of detente.

We have and must continue, therefore, to act for unity, not division, and must refrain from fanning the flames of division and discord.

As you see, dear comrades, what we are saying today in this new demonstration of solidarity between Spanish and Italian communists highlights the broad convergence which exists between our two parties in our analyses of the situation and in our objectives with regard to life in our countries and international life and, in particular the tasks of the West European workers movement.

We are confident that our cooperation will produce abundant and useful fruits not only for the working class and toiling masses in Spain and Italy but will also make a valuable contribution to the progress of the communist forces and all the proletarian and people's forces in West Europe toward peace and detente, toward a new society and toward socialism.

I once again give you my best wishes and convey affectionate wishes to the PCE, its members and leaders so that, on the strength of its memorable past and its present capacity for struggle, initiative and innovation, it might attain the success it deserves, which is vital for the future of a democratic Spain.

PCI STATEMENT ON THREAT TO PEACE IN WAKE OF IRAN OPERATION

ID141323 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 1 May 80 pp 1, 23

[Apparent text of 30 April PCI Directorate statement: "Acting for Seriously Threatened Peace"]

[Text] The PCI Directorate approved the following document at its meeting yesterday:

The PCI Directorate has examined the situation which has come about in the Arabian Gulf and throughout the world following the U.S. military action in Iran, with regard to the aims and the failure of which there still remain many obscure and worrisome points to be clarified. This rash initiative--which the U.S. administration decided to take while misleading the Atlantic Alliance countries--to which it had given assurances that it would not resort to military initiatives--has brought the world to the brink of war in a crucial area and has made the threats to world peace even more acute and imminent. The PCI--which has clearly and repeatedly announced its own censure of the unacceptable seizure and holding of the hostages and which firmly stresses the need for their release--expresses its own definite condemnation of the U.S. military intervention. As shown by the development of events, the U.S. intervention in Iran has not--nor could it have--led to the solution of the hostages problem, and has instead dangerously exacerbated the situation--and not only in the Arabian Gulf--and it has introduced special elements of more acute tension into the overall framework of the international situation. Such initiatives are misguided, damaging and dangerous, as shown by--among other things--the bewilderment and disapproval apparent among the U.S. public and in the U.S. Congress and the subsequent top-level government crisis involving Secretary of State Vance's resignation--an unprecedented event.

In view of these circumstances, the Italian Government's stance as outlined yesterday to the Senate by Minister Colombo is wrong and worrisome: It constitutes a serious backsliding with respect to the foreign minister's initial assessments and demonstrates this government's confused and contradictory conduct in foreign policy. The PCI Directorate draws the public's attention to the continual progressive deterioration in international relations brought about by recourse to the methods of force and reprisals, which are creating specific threats to world peace--especially since the tragic possibility of further U.S. attempts to use force and military intervention in Iran remains entirely open. Everybody must be aware of this danger and must work to promptly avert it.

The PCI therefore urges all democratic forces that want to work for peace and the resumption of the detente process to step up their efforts to draft and implement a policy based on negotiations which will lead to a solution to the hostage problem, alleviate the tension in the Arab Gulf and establish positive relationships with the new reality of the Iranian Revolution. This is the policy through which we must seek the solution of all the unresolved problems in various areas and therefore the solution, by means of the full reestablishment of independence and national sovereignty, of the crisis which was created in Afghanistan after the Soviet military intervention.

To this end, in order to not only defend national interests but also to help actively to reestablish an atmosphere of trust in international relations, Italy must carry out a rigorous and autonomous initiative, partly within the framework of the Atlantic Alliance and the EEC. Italy's alliances and relations with the United States cannot be invoked to impose a submissive solidarity with unilateral decisions made by the U.S. administration which are so fraught with repercussions. To this end it is essential that a clear stance be adopted against the overall policy of diplomatic and political reprisals, against economic sanctions and the use of force. Therefore it is essential that the Italian Government request the suspension of the recent EEC decisions affecting Iran and a revision of the EEC's policy toward Iran. More generally--and partly with the aim of reaching a positive solution to the hostage problem and to the problems of peaceful relations, economic cooperation and a new international order--it is essential that Europe adopt an autonomous attitude of understanding and assistance toward the current emancipation and liberation processes in that region. The PCI emphasizes the essential role that awaits Europe in working for the rejection of all acts of force, for exploring every possible avenue for dialogue and negotiation and for introducing a new method of understanding and cooperation in international relations. Only on these bases will both peace and democratic progress be guaranteed. The PCI Directorate appeals to party organizations and members throughout Italy to ensure in connection with this policy, the development of peace initiatives, the broadening of dialogue among all democrats and the vigorous demonstration of the Italian people's desire to cooperate, in this serious situation, in salvaging peace and in bringing about a strong resumption of the international detente process.

L'UNITA'S BOFFA LAUDS TITO'S LIFE WORK

LD141119 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 10 May 80 pp 1, 17

[Giuseppe Boffa article: "The Man to Whom They Bowed Their Heads Was Both a Revolutionary and a Communist"]

[Text] Something very important has happened. In a world of serious tensions, interrupted dialogues, armed conflicts and specters of war, all--or almost all--the top protagonists of international politics gathered in Belgrade to bow their heads before Tito's corpse. Of course, this must be attributed partly to the ritual of diplomacy and official state mourning. But was that all? It is sufficient to consider the series of meetings--some very significant--among the statesmen and politicians which were present, meetings which kept our own delegation very busy. Tito's immense authority in life and the universality of the homage paid to him in death have a profound significance. Tito's strength did not stem from a prestigious inherited crown; it did not have powerful armies or terrifying weapons behind it and did not depend on financial wealth. Many of us have pointed out that his influence in international life far exceeded the influence which his country's scale and economic limitations would seem to permit. Nor was Tito ever shown any indulgence by the men who nevertheless gathered round his coffin. During the past few days everyone has recalled his conflict with the Stalinist USSR; but not many people have recalled the hostility with which he was opposed without quarter immediately after the war (and partly even during the war) by the major Western powers. Why then so much respect?

Tito's example demonstrates how much strength can be accumulated--even in a world in which cynicism too often prevails--by using the value of political ideas and initiatives, as long as they are accompanied by the determination needed to defend them. Tito had no other tools available. Recently press and television fashion has demanded that we lament the "collapse of myths." Often the people who shed the tears are the ones who invented the myths to conceal their own political inconsistency (the fact that some of them declared or still declare themselves to be leftwing may displease us, but it cannot justify them in our eyes). Tito's experience was not surrounded by myths. It has submitted itself to our rational analyses. It was and remains a continuous exhortation--which we welcome--to lucidity and reason. The fact that we now regard Tito primarily as a communist--and we defend this claim--is no petty reflection of partisan sectarianism, partly because Tito himself always declared himself such and also because the episodes of disagreement which have occurred between us Italian and Yugoslav communists are unimportant in view of the fraternity in struggle which dates back a long way (as Comrade Doronjski has pointed out, very warmly recalling the Garibaldi Brigade's participation in the Yugoslav liberation struggle) and which continues now, as shown by the affectionate welcome given to our comrades. But this is not enough.

In fact Tito developed, grew up, has always fought and remained to the end--with his unmistakable originality--within the major current of what has been called (and he himself called) the communist movement and which it would perhaps be more correct, especially now, to regard as one of this century's major currents of thought and action. This current has been the protagonist of major revolutions, such as the Yugoslav revolution, but, for this very reason, also of implacable struggles and real tragedies. From this viewpoint Tito can also be considered a tragic personality. But in using these metaphors we do not have in mind the Shakespearean tragedies, which emerged from another century of profound transformations, and certainly not the grand Guignol-style tragedies of Montmartre, which a large sector of the press uses when discussing communists and revolutions. Finally, Tito was also a great innovator within communist culture and for this very reason was able to reveal its full vitality and overlooked potentials and has all the more right to belong to it.

The man to whom so many different figures bowed their heads Thursday in Belgrade was a revolutionary. He was so first and foremost in his own country. But as a communist he never isolated himself from the broader process of revolution in our century. Tito understood and helped us to understand that it was indeed a "process" and a worldwide one, moreover, involving several different historical and social components as well as various different countries or even continents. It is therefore also a phenomenon full of contradictions, which in any case could not be fettered in any scheme or controlled by presumptive forms of hegemony. All the forces belonging to it belong to it for their own reasons, which must be respected, because they cannot be swept away in the name of some more general scheme or other without jeopardizing the most deep-rooted motivations which inspire the actual revolutionary impetus of each of those forces. Only in this way was it and is it possible to lend scope to the internationalist ideal, as Tito tried to do--with frequently underestimated tenacity--both in his own multinational country and in the broader world field.

Now everyone can better appreciate the importance of these stances precisely because once again we can see how imminent the dangers threatening the world are in an era of revolutions such as ours. Now everybody seems to acknowledge that Tito always worked for peace, though everybody also knows that he never stopped fighting (not only metaphorically) when his own country's independence was at stake. But the lesson to be learned must not be only a general one. Indeed, Tito's Yugoslavia has shown how to work for peace in a continent of opposing blocs, thanks to the courage of its own autonomy without preconceived alignments.

In our country, Christian Democratic Party Chairman Deputy Forlani recently brought attention to himself with a confused proposal concerning the country's military organization designed to encourage popular resistance in the event of war. He has not yet explained what he means by this. What is horrifying, however, is that he seemed to regard the matter as an essentially technical problem. Since he cited Yugoslavia, however, there is reason to wonder whether he has ever imagined what a lengthy effort to insure the country's unitary cohesion, what kind of policy of proud independence and popular participation in the state, what fundamental democracy, what a struggle against privileges and inequalities and, in short, what a commitment to socialist transformation the concept of popular resistance, to which Yugoslavia entrusts its own defense, implies. Above all there is reason to wonder how Forlani reconciles such a prospect with the policy pursued by his party in Italy.

The secret of Tito's strength lay basically in a truth which might seem simple, since it has been known by the workers movement since its inception, but which is sometimes in danger of being forgotten. The gains of democracy, freedom, progress and peace are never given away to the peoples by anyone: They are built with hard work, organization, struggle and boldness.

FINANCE MINISTER ADDRESSES ASSEMBLY ON 1980 BUDGET

LD121505 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 29 Apr 80 pp 3, 6

[Unattributed report: "International Situation Imposes Several Limitations and Narrows Range of Correct Choices"]

[Excerpt] "In this extremely unfavorable international situation, the scope of the aims laid down by the government in its program requires at the domestic level an economic policy whose various elements will be coherent and whose effects will be correctly assessed, as well as perfect coordination and great strictness in its implementation," Minister of Finance and Planning Cavaco e Silva stated [28 April], when setting out the main guidelines of the sixth constitutional government's overall state budget and planning bill in the first of the main speeches [in the Assembly of the Republic debate].

Commenting on the external factors which have affected our economy, Cavaco e Silva said: "Some people have displayed some difficulty in perceiving the negative effects on our economy of the increase in the price of oil, the recession and the worsening of inflation among our trading partners and the rise in interest rates on the financial markets--interlinked aspects of the current international economic crisis. It is worthwhile to attempt to enlighten them--an essential precondition for a serious debate on the major options of the plan and the budget."

Increase in Price of Oil

"The sharp increase in the price of oil, which is reaching figures no less than those of the 1973-1974 crisis, means a transference of about 4.5 percent of our GNP to the OPEC countries, creating a severe depressive effect on the Portuguese economy and worsening the balance of payments through the increase in the cost of imports.

"At best, the country will have to pay 50 million contos more in 1980 than in 1979 in order to purchase the same amount of oil.

"The international economic recession is clearly reflected in the most recent forecasts of growth rates in the OECD area, which indicate a rate of only 1.3 percent in 1980, with negative growth rates of -2.1 percent in Britain and -0.3 percent in the United States.

"A recent estimate assessed the reduction of real income in the OECD in 1980, as a result of the deterioration in exchange rates and the fall in growth caused by the increase in the price of oil, at $400 billion--that is $2,000 (about 100 contos) for every family of four people.

"This behavior on the part of the Western economies cannot fail to lead to a fall in the growth rate of our exports, as well as of the emigrants' remittances. The acceleration of international inflation will entail higher prices to be paid for imports, and in this way will have a negative effect on domestic prices. The rise in interest rates, which on the Eurodollar market recently reached the level of 19 percent, as against 11 percent a year ago, has a severe negative effect on our balance of payments and is creating difficulties for the policy of boosting investment.

"The increase in the price of oil, the recession and the worsening of inflation among our trading partners and the increase in interest rates are external factors with severe negative effects on the Portuguese economy which are there for everybody to see. Those who do not see them or do not wish to see them must not complain if they are accused of dimwittedness or ignorance."

Reduction of Rate of Increase in Prices

"The government has accepted the challenge of refuting the OECD forecast of a growth rate of only 2.25 percent for the Portuguese economy in 1980--a forecast made last November which with allowance for the subsequent change in the price of oil would reduce to a level below 2 percent," stated the minister, who emphasized: "The creation of an atmosphere of confidence among domestic and foreign private investors, the guidelines for credit policy, the revision of the system of financial and tax incentives for investment, the opening up of new sectors of economic activity for private enterprise, the possibility of mobilizing rights for compensation and the increase in budgetary allocations earmarked for financing investment by the central public administration, the state enterprise sector and the local authorities, all fall within this context.

"Expansion of private consumption will result from an increase in the Portuguese people's purchasing power, to be achieved by reducing the rate of taxation of earned and personal income, increasing pensions and other social benefits, an adequate increase in earnings and containing the rise in prices.

"In order to make it possible at the same time to boost productive investment, prevent the recession and the worsening of unemployment which the external forces influencing our economy indicate and improve the living conditions of families--principally those which are most disadvantaged--it is necessary to control inflation. For this reason the government has accepted the challenge of reducing the rate of price increases in 1980, when the reverse is happening in other countries."

Cavaco e Silva then stated that "the information available on the behavior of the Portuguese economy during this government's few months in office, although scanty, is encouraging with respect to the possibility of the basic aims which it set itself being achieved, and it confirms the correctness of the economic policy which has been laid down and of the way in which it has been implemented."

"As far as the rate of inflation is concerned, the figures are plain: The consumer price index registered a 22.6-percent increase in the first quarter of 1980 with respect to the same period last year, whereas there was a 24.7-increase during the same period in 1979. But the rates recorded in February and March this year--which some people have displayed little ability to interpret--are more important than this decline in the quarterly average; the rise in prices was 2 percent in February and 1.3 percent in March, despite the increase in the price of fuels at the beginning of February and the increase in the prices of essential products in the middle of the month. In 1979 the increase in the 'shopping basket' prices occurred 12 April, and the consumer price index rose 3.1 percent in that month and 3.2 percent in the following month. In 1979, the increase in the price of fuels occurred 9 September, and the consumer price index rose 3.1 percent in that month.

"As far as investment is concerned, the sparse information available is such to confirm that the 6-percent growth rate envisaged in the plan will be achieved. Sales of cement and steel registered a 29-percent increase in the first quarter of 1980, in comparison with a 20-percent decrease in the same period of 1979. During the 3 months ending 11 April, the housing development fund authorized the construction of 8,205 homes, whereas the number of housing units started during the whole of 1979 was 2,182.

"A recent enquiry into the atmosphere among investors, to which 600 out of a maximum total of 1,000 replies have already been received, reveals that 75 percent of enterprises will be investing during the next 12 months, 62 percent of them at a rate exceeding that of the previous year, and the percentage increase will exceed 30 percent in most of them."

With respect to direct foreign investment, the amount authorized during the first quarter of 1980 "is 187 percent higher than the amount in the corresponding period of 1979."

Cavaco e Silva also stated that the income tax reduction from which incomes earned since 1 January of this year have benefited, the reduction of the supplementary tax, which already applied to incomes in 1979, the increase in retirement and disability pensions, family allowances and other social benefits announced by the prime minister, the way in which collective bargaining has been proceeding and the reduction of the rate of price increases already achieved clearly indicate that the aims of increasing purchasing power and improving the distribution of incomes will also be achieved.

He then stated: "A current account deficit of about $800 million is forecast for 1980, caused principally by the rise in the price of oil, the boosting of investment and the effect of the international economic recession on exports and emigrants' remittances. We have no information as yet about the behavior of the current account in the first quarter of 1980. However, it is believed on the basis of some available information that exports continued to display considerable dynamism and that the trend toward an increase in imports persisted.

"More reliable information is available about the trend in liquid assets outside the banking system; there appears to have been a reduction of about $400 million during the quarter--a sum which is deemed acceptable in view of the international situation, the seasonal characteristics of the first few months of the year and the rapid expansion of credit dictated by the need to rapidly give impetus to economic activity--principally, the construction industry. It is deemed perfectly acceptable for liquid assets outside the banking system to undergo an overall reduction of $300 million this year."

Tax and Budgetary Policy

"The bill containing the overall state budget for 1980 submitted to this assembly embodies a tax and budgetary policy which in several respects can be regarded as innovatory within the context of the last few years. In the field of taxation, the proposed budget rejects ease of revenue collection as a decisive criterion of tax policy and restores criteria which are valid and important in democratic societies and which have been somewhat forgotten here--tax equity, efficiency in the functioning of the economy, growth."

"We are undertaking the readjustment of the supplementary tax income scales, with a view to correcting, although not completely, the automatic, unapproved and arbitrary increases which have occurred over the last few years as a result of inflation. An income of 200 contos in 1974 was taxed that year at a rate of 5 percent in income tax and at a rate of 1.5 percent in supplementary tax; an equivalent income in 1979 was taxed at rates of 14 percent and 8.5 percent respectively, and the increase was caused almost entirely by the inflation which had occurred in the meantime. For the same reason, the maximum rate of income tax which applied in 1974 to incomes exceeding 900 contos per year applied in 1979 to an equivalent income of about 340 contos."

And he stated: "It is also proposed to increase the levels of allowances, with a view to the subsistence level, for children and with respect to earned incomes, to be taken into account in determining the taxable income for the supplementary tax. In addition, the scope of child allowances is being broadened to include young people up to 24 years of age, provided that they are enrolled at secondary or higher education institutions. With the aim of protecting families with a large number of dependents, the minimum allowance is being set at 100 contos if they number five or more. The proposal of a schedule of supplementary tax rates which will be more favorable for married taxpayers whose property is not legally separate, thus reducing the fiscal penalization to which lumping together the couple's incomes used to lead, should also be emphasized because of what it means in terms of improving fairness in taxation and the protection of families.

"The abolition of the various additional taxes will lead to great clarity and simplicity in the tax system, as well as to administrative simplification and the improvement of its application.

"In indirect taxation it is proposed to increase the rates of the excise tax on tobacco, which is justified by the inflation which has occurred and by the social benefit of curbing consumption. Mention should also be made of the updating of the limits governing qualification for exemption from the real estate and conveyance taxes on the part of people purchasing or constructing homes for their permanent residence, which reflects acknowledgment of the social value of housing and of the importance of the construction sector."

Local Authorities

"In the field of investments the major options of the plan and the budget for 1980 clearly demonstrate the government's intention, as expressed in its program, to encourage investment by the administrative and entrepreneurial public sector," the minister continued. "The central administration's development investments and expenditure program will total about 68 billion contos in 1980, with the overall state budget participating to the extent of 40 million contos, and this represents a 40-percent increase over the sum allocated in 1979. Some 19 million contos are earmarked for financing investments in the state enterprise sector, which represents a 55-percent increase, and the local authorities are being given financial resources which will enable them to increase considerably investments of local significance. In fact, the government intends this year to place at the municipalities' disposal through the overall state budget a total sum of financial resources 28 percent higher than that for 1979."

Detailing this policy, he disclosed: "The municipalities will also receive all the revenue from the real estate tax and the vehicle tax, which are registering a considerable increase this year as a result of the readjustment of rates made possible by the abolition of the special tax in force in 1979, the revenue from which went entirely to the state; the government also intends to create a special line of credit for the local authorities at a discount rate, aimed at financing investment in the sectors of low-cost housing, elementary sanitation, education and rural communications. The municipalities are thus guaranteed sufficient financial resources for significant progress in making investments of local importance. It is even forecast that the local administration sector will register financial savings of 5.5 million contos in 1980.

"As far as the overall state budget's share in covering the autonomous region's deficits is concerned, an important step forward was made this year in improving the criterion for determining the respective sum." The minister explained that application of the formula produces a share of 3.947 million contos for the Azores and 3.979 million contos for Madeira--sums substantially exceeding those for previous years, to which is added the financing of social security deficits totaling 596,000 contos for the Azores and 709,000 contos for Madeira.

Budget Deficit

"I also wish to broach the problem of the budget deficit. The deficit is not in itself an aim of economic policy but the outcome of the measures proposed for achieving the aims laid down. Viewed in this perspective, the overall deficit proposed for 1980 is, according to the forecasts, in keeping with the aims of expanding economic activity, boosting investment and containing inflation, and with the need to keep the current account deficit under control.

"A lower budget deficit would mean insufficient domestic demand in light of the fall in demand for exports.

"A large budget deficit would lead to the absorption of an excessive portion of domestic credit, preventing the boosting of productive investment--principally by the private sector--or would lead to a worsening of inflation or to a current account deficit incompatible with our ability to secure external means of finance.

"The policy of reducing taxation, required by the principles of tax equity, economic efficiency and the expansion of private consumption, as well as the increase in the budgetary allocations earmarked for public investment and the increase in payments to local authorities, have the effect of increasing the budget deficit. If nothing else were done, the outcome would be a deficit not in keeping with boosting productive investment, reducing inflation and controlling the foreign debt.

"The appropriate counterbalance to prevent this occurring has been found in three areas of the budget in which the action required by domestic demand was at the same time necessitated by the aims and guidelines outlined by the government; tax evasion and fraud, public consumption and subsidies for public enterprises."

Tax Evasion, Consumption and Subsidies

"The phenomenon of tax evasion and fraud has assumed such proportions here that it was necessary, for the sake of economic efficiency, distributive equity and respect for democratic legality, to abandon attitudes of tolerance toward offenders and take vigorous action to combat them.

"Public consumption had been increased for several years at rates exceeding 5 percent, without this being reflected in an equivalent increase in the quantity and quality of the goods and public services made available to citizens and representing, rather, great inefficiency in the use of public money. It was necessary to curb this trend. The budget was therefore drafted in accordance with guidelines of stringent austerity to ensure that the growth rate of public consumption in real terms would approach zero in 1980.

"The same spirit of a demand for austerity and the reduction of inefficiency was present in setting the subsidies to be granted to public enterprises. Contrary to what is to be inferred from statements by some people who have not yet perceived the role of the profit margin in public enterprises, it is the duty of all of them to create positive savings, while taking into account the value of the social ingredient of the goods and services which they provide. This has not been the case here, but it is imperative that a decisive effort be made to this end.

"Moreover, it is extremely doubtful whether the value of the social benefits of the activity of the entire Portuguese state enterprise sector exceeds the total sum of the subsidies granted in 1979. The continuation of this sum for 1980 reflects the government's commitment to combating the inefficiency of some public enterprises--an inefficiency which has always resulted in a high cost for citizens in the form either of payment of taxes without an adequate return or of unjustified increases in prices.

"The current deficit, despite being lower in real terms than that of the 1979 budget, still constitutes a sum which is deemed very high. This stems from the high level of the wages bill and of the public debt interest: This totals 39 million contos, registering an increase of about 36 percent, despite the 15 million conto reduction in interest payments to be made to the Bank of Portugal as a result of the revaluation of gold.

"Contrary to what some people have asserted, these 15 million contos in interest which cease to be paid to the Bank of Portugal are not a windfall for this government; they are virtually confined to offsetting a specific legacy received by the 1980 budget with respect to public-debt interest. In fact, in order to finance the 1979 budgetary deficit, the state raised a loan of 92 million contos at an interest rate of 18 percent from the Bank of Portugal at the end of the year, whereas in previous years loans had been raised at the rate of 7.5 percent. Although this readjustment of the interest rate to be paid to the Bank of Portugal may be correct, the fact is that its budgetary impact occurs for the first time in 1980, and represents 92 million contos. In addition, as a result of the increase in interest rates, there will be an increase of about 2 million contos this year in the costs of the loans raised by the republic on foreign money markets in 1978 and 1979, totaling $750 million.

"In one important respect, this year's current deficit has a significance different from that of previous years: In its formation, increases in taxation have been replaced by reductions, thus increasing private citizens' disposable incomes. But the current deficit nevertheless represents an obstacle to the country's economic growth. For this reason the utmost stringency is necessary in implementing the budget and continuing the effort which has gotten under way to surmount the crisis in Portuguese public finances by tackling key areas such as tax evasion, control over public expenditure and the management of the public debt.

"It is within this context of resolving the structural problems of our public finances that the gold revaluation operations falls, and this in fact makes it entirely justifiable.

"It remains to be added that we envisage financing about 12.5 percent of the budget deficit by resorting to foreign credit and the remainder through domestic credit. The financing through the national banking system is being duly coordinated with the production sector's credit requirements and with the expansion of domestic credit compatible with the expansion of the economy, the increase in prices and the fluctuation in liquid assets outside the banking system."

GOVERNMENT STATEMENT ON ILLEGAL ACTS, NEWS COVERAGE

LD150340 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] In connection with reports involving the self-styled Popular Forces of 25 April [leftist urban guerrilla organization] we have just received through the Presidency of the Council of Ministers the following official note from the Ministry of Internal Administration:

Acts of armed banditry and violence linked with bank raids and car thefts, currently being investigated and countered by the security forces and services, have justifiably been worrying citizens and public opinion as a whole. Fronts and organizations opposed to the government are seeking--as such events take place--to link these unrelated acts of banditry and present them as the result of a concerted, revolutionary and popular action.

The government--which is taking all the necessary steps to control and curb such acts--holds the view that any news speculation based on provisional, unconfirmed reports will only benefit the authors of such acts, as it will only slow up the activities of clandestine organizations, spread confusion and even render more difficult the action of the relevant authorities.

That was an official note issued by the Ministry of Internal Administration through the Presidency of the Council of Ministers.

MADRID REPORTS SUAREZ, GONZALEZ ROLE IN U.S.-IRANIAN CONFLICT

LD150236 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 14 May 80

[Excerpt] Here in Spain a real news bomb exploded tonight via the EFE agency. Spain could, says the dispatch, play host to an international meeting to find a solution to the U.S.-Iranian conflict and to the U.S. hostages in Iran, EFE has learned from reliable sources. According to the same sources consulted by EFE, other countries such as Switzerland and representatives of the PLO are participating in the preparation and groundwork for the meeting.

On the Spanish side both Prime Minister Suarez and opposition leader Felipe Gonzalez, the Socialist, are participating. Both of them had talks yesterday, Tuesday, 13 May, with French lawyer Mr (Bourget), the Paris representative of Iranian Shi'ite leader Imam Khomeyni, and with Argentinian lawyer Hector Villalon, commissioned by White House Chief of Staff Hamilton Jordan to look after U.S. interests in the matter. Both (Bourget) and Villalon, according to the sources, came to Spain before with the same aim.

The arrival in Madrid was expected of the former Melchite archbishop of Jerusalem, Hilarion Capucci, who is closely connected with the PLO and mediated in the return to the United States of the bodies of the nine U.S. soldiers who died in the abortive hostages' rescue operation. The archbishop did not come to Madrid for reasons of discretion because he could be easily recognized.

The same sources have said that both mediators were satisfied with their talks with Prime Minister Suarez and the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] leader.

As you will recall, Prime Minister Suarez had a long meeting with Palestinian leader Yasir 'Arafat in Riyadh, capital of Saudi Arabia, and met him again and Vice President Mondale in Belgrade. According to diplomatic sources, it appears that President Carter would give his blessing to these talks. The aim of the talks is to get Spain and other countries friendly to Iran and the United States to work alongside both governments to negotiate a solution to the conflict.

The Socialist Party says that it has accepted playing a part in the mediation and tonight issued an official note in which it ratifies this information and confirms that meetings did indeed take place in Madrid. It will try and gain the support of the Socialist International in the matter. The sources consulted say that it is possible that PSOE Secretary General Gonzalez may go toTehran at the invitation of Iranian President Bani-Sadr. The same sources believe that Bani-Sadr wants the Socialist International to intervene in the conflict because of his personal ideological sympathy with social democracy.

NEGOTIATIONS ON JAN MAYEN ZONE CONTINUE IN NORWAY

LD140759 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 7 May 80 p 6

[Alf Hildrum report: "Iceland Comes to Meeting With Tougher Demands"]

[Text] Iceland will not accept a Jan Mayen agreement unless it guarantees Icelandic rights on the continental shelf around the island.

In Iceland's opinion it is pointless to negotiate at all since the Norwegian delegation, under the leadership of Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund, does not have full authorization from the Storting's foreign affairs bodies to enter into negotiations about the continental shelf.

Iceland is not prepared to alter its view that it should have the final say on the distribution of the capelin quotas in the area.

According to reports received by ARBDEIERNES PRESSEKONTOR from circles close to the Icelandic delegation, these are the three most important points in the directives that Icelandic Foreign Minister Olafur Johannesson will bring with him when he arrives in Oslo today at the head of a large delegation to continue negotiations with Norway on a Jan Mayen agreement. The official negotiations will start on Thursday, but the two countries' foreign ministers will have informal talks on Wednesday.

Because of this basic Icelandic attitude it is clear that this round of talks will also prove difficult. After the talks in Reykjavik in April the leaders of both countries' delegations said that they were sure that there would be an agreement in Oslo during the 3 days set aside for the negotiations. But the new toughness in the Icelandic attitude is a warning that the difficulties have still by no means been ironed out.

Internal Icelandic discussions have resulted in a tougher Icelandic demand for access to the continental shelf,and at the meeting in Oslo the Icelanders will put forward a demand for the appointment of a Norwegian-Icelandic committee to oversee the exploration for and exploitation of what resources there may be on the continental shelf.

None of the questions involved in the talks has been finally solved, since the various aspects of the negotiations have such a great effect on each other. It is, however, reasonable to assume that questions like the demarcation line where the two countries' borders cross each other, the distribution of the quotas for various types of fish, and the sharing of resources in the Jan Mayen zone will be possible to solve, since there are solutions to the main problems. But if such a package is not achieved, it is hardly likely that agreement will be reached on anything else, apart from the capelin quota for the coming fishing season.

Because of the capelin fishing season, which could start as early as July, and because of the Danish extension of the border off Greenland, of which Denmark gave advance warning in the spring, it isnow becoming a matter of urgency that an agreement be reached. The Icelanders are saying openly that they expect a "softer" Norwegian approach. The optimism that characterized the conclusions of talks in Reykjavik could therefore easily be replaced by new problems which will mean that agreement will not be reached this time either. If this happens, it is clear that Norway will unilaterally establish an economic zone around Jan Mayen.

KARAMANLIS SWORN IN AS PRESIDENT OF REPUBLIC

AT151029 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 0900 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] The new president of the republic, Konstandinos Karamanlis, was sworn in a short time ago before the plenum of the chamber of deputies. The chamber meeting started at 1100 [0800 GMT] under Bournias, first deputy chairman of the chamber of deputies, because Chairman Papaspirou acts as president of the republic from midnight to the moment when Karamanlis is sworn in.

As soon as the chamber convened, Bournias read the letter of resignation from Konstandinos Tsatsos and the meeting was adjourned pending Karamanlis' arrival. The new president was welcomed at the east entrance of the chamber by Papaspirou and Prime Minister Rallis. The meeting of the chamber was reconvened at 1110 [0810 GMT] and Karamanlis entered the chamber. The swearing-in ceremony was held at 1140 [0840 GMT] by Archbishop Seraphim and members of the holy synod. The relevant protocol was signed by President of the Republic Karamanlis, the archbishop and the acting chairman of the chamber.

Accompanied by the prime minister and the chairman of the chamber of deputies, Karamanlis was scheduled to lay a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Warrior. Later he will be welcomed at the presidential palace by ex-President Konstandinos Tsatsos, who will install him.

I AVYI: RALLIS GOVERNMENT VULNERABLE TO RIGHTIST PRESSURES

AT131355 Athens I AVYI in Greek 15 May 80 p 6

[From the "I AVYI: column: "A New Situation"]

[Text] The procedure which led to the election of G. Rallis to the chairmanship of New Democracy and to the Office of the Prime Minister has publicized a situation of very sharp disputes that has been simmering within the government party for many years. Of course this does not concern disputes of a personal nature, although they appeared in the form of a confrontation in the persons of Rallis and Averof for the guarantee of the majority of the government deputies.

The two tendencies, which have manifested themselves so openly these days, have existed from the very beginning of New Democracy, despite the fact that they were covered up by and subservient to the strong and indisputable imperiousness of Karamanlis. Since 1974 New Democracy has aspired to become and then became the great party of the right. But it became a party of the right in which both the dictatorship which preceded it and the differentiations which resulted from it as well as the degree of the country's development in a world with very strong anti-imperialist forces and with multiple centers of economic and political power--contrary to the older indisputable American imperiousness--had caused numerous cracks and tendencies which represented many interests and a wide variety of choices within a generally conservative political-ideological direction.

Therefore, within the new postdictatorial conditions it has been an erroneous simplification to identify New Democracy with the predictatorial ERE [National Radical Union] because such an identification above all does not correspond to a great change in the domestic and international situation. All those people from the area of the left--like yesterday's RIZOSPASTIS--who are now forced to speak about two real clashing tendencies inside New Democracy and who actually forecast regroupings with unforeseeable developments in the future must--if they want to be simply sincere--admit that the mentality which perceived an essentially unitary and indivisible right with petty differences but without general significance has been proven entirely wrong.

Karamanlis' special political stature had given the appearance of a homogenous political organization to New Democracy. However, his departure from the leadership of the government party has unleashed the thus far muffled tendencies and has given them a substantive political existence. It does not concern--we repeat--tendencies which represent antagonistic social forces but this does not mean that the clash would not acquire an exacerbated form, since it represents very sharp differences in interests and corresponding political concepts, methods and international orientations. This is why the election of Rallis as the leader of the government party and prime minister simply constitutes the first stage in a process of regroupings that has only now begun.

The compromise between the two wings--the two tendencies of New Democracy--is not only temporary, it is also unstable and uncertain, something that will inevitably have repercussions on the entire government policy. Perhaps it would not be an exaggeration to state that Rallis "one-party" government is essentially a coalition government between two political groups which are quickly organizing their forces and their corresponding choices within an atmosphere of mistrust and confrontation. In this sense the compartmentalization of the armed forces under Averof gives the group of the "so-I-want-it" national defense minister greatly increased stature which is disproportionate to its true response within the base of the government party and renders Rallis' government even more vulnerable to pressures from the right and even more susceptible to concessions and compromises on basis issues of internal and external policy, regardless of any personal viewpoints of the new prime minister.

This is one basic new fact that distinguishes Rallis' government from the previous New Democracy governments, despite similaritiec in its composition and phraseology. However, within this same framework a greater possibility appears--from totally the opposite direction--of the intervention of the popular masses and the democratic political forces. The struggle to isolate the most reactionary pro-NATO and pro-American forces is becoming sharper because of the state of affairs and it requires increased vigiliance and political maturity and flexibility from all parties of the democratic opposition so that without weakening the front of total deployment against the right it can strengthen and promote all activities which contribute to a broader popular cooperation against reactionary forces and their efforts inside and outside New Democracy.

The new government without Karamanlis has acquired its true dimensions without transcedental symbols and supermen. This fact in itself changes the conditions of political struggle significantly. The sooner democratic parties understand this reality and proceed to the corresponding adjustments the better it will be for the nation and democracy.

DEMIREL CRITICIZES EVREN STATEMENT ON PRESIDENTIAL VOTING

TA141728 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 13 May 80

[Excerpt] Justice Party leader and Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that it is extremely erroneous to make certain speculations regarding the parliament by misinterpreting the statement made by the chief of staff yesterday on the presidential elections. Demirel said: It is also wrong to form certain groups [in the parliament] following the chief of staff's statement.

Addressing his party's joint parliamentary group, Demirel noted that the composition of the parliament is evident and that it is not easy to elect a president in such a parliament. Demirel continued: The reason for the failure to elect a president for the past 6 weeks is the composition of the parliament and the lack of support. It is insufficient to say: Come, let us elect a president. The election of a president is an extremely important issue. This election should be based on a foundation and on rules. The foundation is the Turkish Grand National Assembly and the rules consist of obtaining a 2/3 majority during the first two rounds and a simple majority during the subsequent rounds, as stipulated by the Constitution. Everyone is obliged to remain loyal to this foundation and these rules just as we are obliged to remain loyal to them.

We cannot allow the state to be handed over to just anyone. Choosing a person for the sake of choosing would be tantamount to disrespecting the Grand National Assembly as well as those who favor this action. We will elect the person and not the principle. Our strategy and tactics are clear. We explained this clearly. I repeat, our friends should not become impatient. They should not be influenced by pressures and propaganda from the outside.

Demirel said that a correct answer should be given to the questions: "What is delaying the election of a president; who is delaying it; who is to blame?" Demirel noted: The elections are now being held. However, there are no results. Does anyone know how to obtain results? He said that everyone is entitled to wish for fruitful elections. Demirel continued: However, the fact that there are no results is not caused by anyone's wish to delay them. This is a serious matter and it is a difficult one. The chief of staff's statement last night has made our friends sensitive. It is extremely erroneous to make certain speculations regarding the parliament by misinterpreting this statement. The solution to the problem will be found within the parliament. Efforts in this direction are continuing. It is also wrong to form certain groups following the chief of staff's statement. I do not consider it beneficial to interpret it further than this.

JUSTICE PARTY OFFICIAL FAVORS EARLY ELECTIONS DUE TO DEADLOCK

TA141811 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] Justice Party Secretary General Nahit Mentese has said that the issue of early elections has become real and is now included in Turkey's agenda. Mentese has noted that as long as the conditions and atmosphere remain the same, the presidential elections seem to have reached a deadlock. Replying to questions by YURT Agency [?HOMELAND NEWS SERVICE] on this subject, Mentese recalled that in their daily statements, the opposition parties criticized the government and expressed dissatisfaction with the functioning of the government. Mentese noted that those who are dissatisfied with the functioning of the government should not evade the judgement of the nation. Pointing out that the makeup of the parliament does not reflect the will of the nation, as expressed during the 14 October elections, Mentese said: if it had reflected, the present crisis would not exist. The Demirel government would not be a minority government and the presidential elections would not still be pending.

Replying to a question on the presidential elections, Mentese said: Democratic countries hold referendums to clarify an issue. Under these circumstances, why should the nation's judgement not be consulted? Pointing out that the current electoral system prevents the establishment of governments with strong parliamentary support, Mentese said that his party is in favor of amending the Constitution and theelectoral system before holding elections.

TA141646 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] State Minister Muhammed Kelleci resigned following a report that appeared in a magazine. The letter of resignation he sent to Prime Minister Demirel says: My dear prime minister, I will always live with the honor and pleasure of having worked with you. It is known to all that our government is working under extremely difficult conditions. I have been made the victim of an extremely cruel plot and slander. I ask you to accept my resignation from the Cabinet. Please accept my respects.

Our correspondent has learned that Kelleci resigned because of a report published about him in a magazine. It has been learned that Kelleci said: I cannot continue to serve in my position in light of this gossip.

$75 MILLION LOAN SECURED FROM EUROPEAN FUND

TA142046 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] It has been announced that a $75 million project loan was secured from the European Reconstruction Fund during the past 6 months to finance public limited companies and socially oriented investments. The agreement concerning the DM30 million loan, which is part of the $75 million loan, went into effect today.

According to information obtained by a TRT correspondent, the DM30 million loan will be used--under the sponsorship of the state industry and worker investment bank--to finance the internal needs of the Livestock and Dairy Products Limited company, which is being established in Istanbul's Umraniye District, and the Batikent project.

A 50 million Swiss franc loan was also secured from the fund last month. The terms of the loans vary from 10 to 15 years--with a 5-year grace period--and their rates of interests range from 7.5 percent to 9.5 percent. Officials said that the loans will be used to meet local needs and their foreign currency equivalent will be used freely by the government.

VOTCP COMMENTARY ON U.S. BASES, ACTION AGAINST IRAN

TA061226 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0800 GMT 6 May 80

[Unattributed commentary: "Struggle Against the Antipeople Demirel Government Which Is Following in the Wake of Imperialism"]

[Excerpts] Military concentration is taking place in the Eskisehir and Incirlik U.S. bases. Following numerous questions by reporters, Demirel was forced to confirm reports to that effect. The fact that the U.S. bases on our soil were put on the alert and the heavy concentrations in those bases of aggression confirm the following two facts: First, the ring of fire--created by imperialists--surrounding our country is closing in; secondly, the United States is insisting on using our country as a tool for its military and political policy in the Middle East, which has ended in failure. This assessment was affirmed by the recent provocative military action taken by Washington against our neighbor Iran. During this aggressive operation, which has further increased the tension in the region, the United States used some of its military bases on our soil such as Cigli, Incirlik and Ertas. These developments have shown that the United States has taken another step in dragging our country into the Iran adventure. The Carter administration now wants to go even further and take a second step. An article carried by the AL-WATAN, AL-'ARABI and (AL-DESSU) magazines published in Beirut reported that the United States is planning a new provocation against Iran and that preparations are already underway in the eastern parts of Turkey for a second act of aggression.

The Demirel government, which was not brave enough to openly support the U.S. military provocations and its aggressionagainst Iran in the face of our people's strong reaction, continues to support the imperialists' antipeace policy, which poses a great threat to peace in our country as well as world peace. The NATO maneuvers in our region, which began in the Mediterranean, constitute the most concrete proof of this. These maneuvers--in which Turkey is also participating--are new provocations directed against the peoples of the region. This show of force, which is also aimed at intimidating the Iranian people, displays once more that NATO is a tool of military aggression used to protect the interests of imperialism.

In addition to showing that imperialism is the source of tension, the military show of force planned by the United States along the border of socialist Cuba and the inciting maneuvers conducted by NATO in the Mediterranean also expose the antipeace facet of imperialism. These maneuvers prove that the imperialists are engaged in adventures and preparations for war.

The antipeople Demirel government is following in the wake of the antipeace and inhuman policy of imperialism. Through the new bilateral slavery agreements which it signed with the United States, this government has transformed our country into a powder keg. As noted by the progressive and democratic press, through this agreement Washington is able to drag our country further into its Middle East adventure. It is able to transform Turkey into a tool of threats and aggression against its neighbors. This is why the bilateral slavery agreement has caused harsh reactions among our people and in the parliament. Workers' parties--primarily the Turkish Communist Party--mass unions and progressive and democratic forces have adopted a firm stand against this slavery agreement which transforms our country into an outpost of imperialism.

STATE TREATY ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATIONS BEGIN

FRG's Genscher, SFRY's Vrhovec Arrive

AU151541 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0900 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] FRG Foreign Minister Genscher has arrived today in Vienna to participate in the State Treaty anniversary celebrations. After his arrival at Vienna Schwechat Airport, Genscher stressed that the State Treaty anniversary celebrations were an important event in a difficult international situation. Altogether, 11 foreign ministers are expected in Vienna to participate in the anniversary events, including the foreign ministers of the four State Treaty signatory powers. Yugoslav Foreign Minister Vrhovec has been in Vienna since last night.

Vrhovec Arrival Statement

For TANJUG reportage of Yugoslav Foreign Secretary Josip Vrhovec's arrival in Vienna and his arrival statement, see the Yugoslavia section of the 15 May Eastern Europe DAILY REPORT.

Genscher Schedule

LD150938 Hamburg DPA in German 0812 GMT 15 May 80

[Excerpt] Vienna--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher arrived in Vienna this morning to attend the State Treaty celebrations, the 25th anniversary of Austria's regaining its independence. He was welcomed at Schwechat Airport by Austrian Vice Chancellor Hannes Androsch. Immediately on arrival Genscher had a meeting in the German Embassy with Yugoslav Foreign Secretary Josip Vrhovec. At lunchtime he will confer with his Austrian counterpart, Willibald Pahr. During his stay in Vienna Genscher will meet on Friday evening with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko. Genscher said at the airport that he intends to discuss several topics with Gromyko, including Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's planned visit to Moscow. The minister stated that the State Treaty celebrations were important because East and West may discuss here their difficulties in understanding one another and express their desire to continue the dialogue. When asked about the fresh proposals by the Afghan Government for a solution to the crisis in this region, Genscher said that they will be examined constructively and without reservation.

Muskie Arrival Statement Reported

AU151537 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1000 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] Another prominent participant in the State Treaty anniversary events, U.S. Secretary of State Muskie, has arrived in Vienna. In a brief statement Muskie rejected the latest proposals by Afghanistan--published yesterday [14 May] by TASS--as illusory, ambiguous and insignificant. According to TASS, Afghanistan has proposed the conclusion of agreements with its neighbors Iran and Pakistan, to be guaranteed by the United States and the Soviet Union. In the framework of such a solution, TASS wrote, the withdrawal of the Soviet forces from Afghanistan could be effected.

Muskie, Kreisky Meeting

AU151538 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1300 GMT 15 May 80

[Excerpt] The first new contacts between Austrian politicians and those of foreign countries are taking place on the periphery of the festivities celebrating the 25th anniversary of the Austrian State Treaty signing.

U.S. Secretary of State Muskie met with Federal Chancellor Kreisky for talks at the Federal Chancellery a few minutes ago. Subsequently Muskie will conduct talks with UN Secretary General Waldheim.

Genscher on Talks With Leaders

LD151402 Hamburg DPA in German 1255 GMT 15 May 80

[Excerpts] Vienna--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher hopes for "fresh initiatives "above all with regard to negotiations on arms limitation from a meeting with his Soviet counterpart Andrey Gromyko. Genscher said today in Vienna where, like Gromyko and U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, he will attend the 25th anniversary celebrations of the Austrian State Treaty, a "signal" could come from the Vienna talks. However, this does not mean that solutions have already presented themselves. Genscher, who meets Gromyko on Friday, also hopes for information on Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's planned trip to Moscow. According to a Bonn Foreign Ministry spokesman, Genscher welcomes the opportunity of once again explaining to the Soviet foreign minister the thoughts developed by the West on arms limitation. The West's disarmament package has been submitted and reactions from the East are now expected.

At the start of his series of talks in Vienna Genscher met Yugoslav Foreign Minister Josip Vrhovec. The two (?politicians) agreed that the Madrid followup meeting to the European Conference for Security and Cooperation (CSCE) in Helsinki should definitely take place in view of the present international crisis. This meeting, planned for the autumn, offers an excellent forum for continuing the dialogue between West and East. In his talk with Vrhovec Genscher underlined the extraordinary world political importance of the nonaligned states. They now represent an irreplaceable element of stability and balance between the blocs. Today Genscher had an exchange of views with Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr.

Muskie, Genscher Afghanistan Comments Contrasted

AU151546 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] This morning in Vienna U.S. Secretary of State Muskie rejected Afghanistan's proposals for solving the crisis as illusory and insignificant. Muskie declared the proposals are aimed at dividing the Muslim countries so as to prevent further condemnation of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Regarding his talk with Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko scheduled for tomorrow, Muskie said he was not particularly optimistic that the meeting would lead to important changes. He hoped for constructive talks but did not expect any concrete results, he said. In contrast to Muskie, FRG Foreign Minister Genscher spoke in Vienna about positive elements that might be contained in the Afghan leadership's proposals. Genscher also wants to meet with Gromyko in Vienna tomorrow.

Genscher Denies Afghanistan Statement

AU152007 Vienna Television Service in German 1730 GMT 15 May 80

[Excerpt] There was some excitement about a statement by Minister Genscher today. Originally it was said that he had called the Afghanistan initiative "positive." The denial followed a few hours later. He had never used the word "positive" but was in favor of seriously examining the matter.

BAHR LETTER BEFORE NOC SESSION SPARKS NEGATIVE REACTION

LD151546 Hamburg DPA in German 1454 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] Bonn--A letter written by SPD Federal Manager Egon Bahr to President of the German Sports Association (DSB) Willi Weyer caused confusion at today's meeting of the National Olympic Committee [NOC] in Duesseldorf and ill feelings among the FDP in Bonn. In the letter marked "private," Bahr gave the DSB president to understand before the NOC decision that, in his view, contrary to that of Weyer, approval by the NOC to attend the Moscow summer Olympics would in no way threaten the solidarity of the Western alliance.

The letter was read last night to representatives of the 23 Olympic sports associations in Duesseldorf before today's decision. While Weyer denied ever having received Bahr's letter, SPD spokesman Iothar Schwartz said that it had been sent by express mail to Weyer's private address. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt was not briefed about this "private letter."

Weyer only learned about the letter from copies sent to the German members of the IOC, Willi Daume and Berthold Beitz.

Weyer assessed the letter as the SPD business mananger dissociating himself from the Federal Government's viewpoint on the Olympic question, and used the letter as an occasion to clarify the matter during a meeting with Federal Chancellor Schmidt this morning. Addressing the NOC later, Weyer said that the chancellor still adhered to the recommendation for nonparticipation.

The FDP said it was "astonished" at the Bahr letter. FDP spokesman Volker Hummel said on behalf of his party that "as to form and content it was an astonishing incident." The letter gains in importance because it is directed against a carefully considered decision by the Federal Government.

CDU spokesman Guenter Heinrich described the letter as a last-minute attack to again undermine the Federal Government's recommendation to the FRG sportsmen not to take part in the summer Olympics. Heinrich added that "the activities of the parallel government installed in the SPD center have reached a new peak." There will be anxiety regarding Schmidt's and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher's reaction.

It was learned from political circles in Bonn that Bahr did not intend to influence the NOC decision by his letter. On the contrary, with a view to affairs abroad, he wanted to make it clear that a "yes" by the NOC to participation at the Olympics would be a decision taken by an independent institution which could have no consequences for the alliance.

PAPERS ASSESS NOC DECISION TO BOYCOTT MOSCOW GAMES

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Praise

DW161000 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 16 May 80 p 1

[Article signed J.B.: "Worthy of Respect"]

[Text] The FRG National Olympic Committee decided more clearly than expected against participation in the Moscow games. It was not a small majority which could be termed accidental that made this decision. It was notso great either that--after the earlier recommendations by the Federal Government and the Bundestag--one could insinuate that sports has given up its independence under the pressure of political powers. The observers in Moscow and East Berlin, whose special interest has become penetratingly clear in past days and weeks, must realize that there are limits to the interpretation of polls on voting results. [paragraph continues]

Nobody has adopted the East bloc version about a connection between the Olympic and Afghanistan issues. Much rather the one group said Moscow was the guilty party because of the Afghanistan war, while the others said that a guilty Moscow was not mature enough politically to bring about the "nevertheless" that was supposed to justify participation in the games.

There have been few political discussions lately in public that have come close to the high level of this decision by the National Olympic Committee. The sportsmen and the presidents of the associations have set an example of how to make a democratic decision, and this should not be forgotten too quickly. This judgment would also be called for had the result been the reverse. The sports leaders, most of all Willi Daume and Willi Weyer, deserve respect because such meetings are not automatically given the rating they deserve.

Neither the vote by the French National Olympic Committee for Moscow, nor the irritation temporarily caused by a letter allegedly stemming from SPD Federal Manager Bahr, could hurt the body which carried out its responsibility so exemplarily. The Olympic idea is not dead--that is the first conclusion to be drawn. The Olympiad is facing hard times. But at some time Olympic games will electrify the public in an unhindered way. The Duesseldorf vote of 15 May will enter the history of the Olympiad.

Wounds Inflicted, Solidarity Preserved

DW161001 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 16 May 80 p 3

[Article signed KK: "Solidarity Above Everything"]

[Text] No Federal German team to the Moscow Olympics: This majority decision by the National Olympic Committee could hardly have come as a surprise to anybody since the boycott problem has been discussed fiercely for 4 months, and because almost all NOC members had stressed their positions long ago. The Duesseldorf debate, conducted remarkably seriously and factually, was aimed therefore only at achieving an external effect without being able to change anything in the NOC itself.

German sports and its leaders are probably facing hard times now. Most advocates of the boycott did not leave any doubts that they would not have made such a decision on their own. Only the recommendations of the Federal Government and the Bundestag were decisive for many, and the sports officials did not dare contradict them. Even though Bonn stated officially over and over again that the German sports leadership was free to decide, the officials felt (rightly) exposed to strong political and moral pressure. The final pressure came at a reception by the federal president.

As regards relations between the state and sports which is allegedly free, the Duesseldorf decision opens a most uncertain phase. One cannot say how deep the wounds are which have been inflicted on sports by the fierce boycott debate and how great the political and sports consequences of the Olympic boycott will eventually be. At the moment, all those involved comfort themselves with the idea that "solidarity", the key word at the moment, has been maintained.

Bahr's 'Stab in the Back'

DW161002 Bonn DIE WELT in German 16 May 80 p 6

[Commentary signed vi: "Bahr's Thrust"]

[Text] After months of quarreling, German sports has decided not to act against the Federal Government and the Western alliance. It was not made easy for the National Olympic Committee. [paragraph continues]

The fact that Korber had to remind people about the American protection for West Berlin in order to counter last-minute efforts by East Berlin functionary Ewald demonstrates the extent of external interventions. Egon Bahr's feeling obliged to write a letter to Weyer demonstrates what has been going on behind the domestic scene.

Bahr first backed the decisions by the Federal Government and the Bundestag. Later on he gave an expert opinion [gutachtliche meinung] designed to mobilize the National Olympic Committee against these decisions. If there were medals in the area of stabbing-in-the-back, Bahr would have earned one. But most suitably he lets an SPD spokesman state that he had written "privately." How private can an SPD federal manager be? It looks again like a double strategy signal, and the federal chancellor--and the SPD deputy chairman--must again accept having to be asked about the state his party is in. And about his determination to do something against it.

GENSCHER VIEWS AFGHAN PROPOSALS TO SETTLE CONFLICT

LD161019 Hamburg DPA in German 0937 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] Bonn--According to Federal Foreign Minister Genscher, the proposals of the Kabul government for the solution of the Afghanistan problem and of the Warsaw Pact states for a world conference to reduce international tension must be examined seriously and thoroughly. Genscher, who will meet Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko in Vienna later today, said in a broadcast on West German radio this morning that it is impossible to assess whether the Kabul proposal is positive or negative without knowledge of the full text. Genscher added that it is very important, however, to try and find starting points "where they exist," on all questions threatening world security. Whether this is true of this proposal is impossible to say at this stage.

Concerning the Warsaw Pact proposal on convening a world conference, the federal foreign minister, with a view to his meeting with Gromyko, said that he hopes that the participants in the Warsaw conference will avail themselves of the talks in Vienna to give a first explanation of the proposals put forward in Warsaw.

As to Chancellor Schmidt's visit to Moscow, which might also be discussed with Gromyko, Genscher said: "While a decision on the date of the visit to Moscow--which the chancellor and I intend to make--is still outstanding, it is quite certain that this too should be discussed."

The text of the interview was prereleased by the Foreign Ministry.

TURKISH FINANCE OFFICIAL ARRIVES; DISCUSSES IMF, UPCOMING TALKS

TA151921 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 15 May 80

[Excerpts] Prime Ministry Under Secretary and Deputy Under Secretary of the State Planning Organization Turgut Ozal arrived in the FRG after completing his contacts in the United States. TRT correspondent Can Akvel interviewed Ozal in Bonn.

[Begin recording] [Akvel] You have just arrived in the FRG after completing your contacts in the United States?

[Ozal] On the first leg of my tour in the United States I went to New York as the guest of the Turkish-U.S. Friendship Association and I participated in their annual dinner.

The next day I was invited to the renowned association called the Council of Foreign Relations [name in English]. There also I explained Turkey's economic situation. In Washington I conducted talks with officials from the IMF, the World Bank and with U.S. Government officials and congressmen. I met with World Bank Director Robert McNamara and his advisers. Relations between Turkey and the World Bank are exceptionally good. During the current year Turkey has reached the highest program credit level, and the value of agreements reached with the World Bank has reached $600 million this year. In addition to the program loan of $200 million included in these agreements, we have been promised another program loan of $60 to $70 million.

I also had talks in Washington with IMF Director Larosiere and his colleagues. We have the best of relations with the IMF. The IMF is seriously and widely supporting Turkey's economic stabilization program. This stand will be clearly reflected in the stand-by [last word in English] agreement to be signed between Turkey and the IMF during the coming month. At this stage I cannot say anything more on this subject. I hope that official statements will be made on this issue in the coming days.

In conclusion, as a result of all my talks in the United States, Turkey's needs for 1980 have been brought to the final phase and have almost been solved. There is no probability of any difficulties. Our needs are being met as we wanted them to be.

[Question] I would like some information about the meetings you are going to have in Bonn with German industrialists.

[Answer] In March last year I had contacts with German industrialists in Bonn. Our objective in our contacts here is industrial investments to be made in Turkey and the [postponement] of our unguaranteed trade debts to the German industrialists. We shall resume talks for the settlement of the debts and for facilitating investments in Turkey. Cooperation between Turkey and the FRG in industrial and related spheres will also be discussed during my meetings. [end recording]

"Codetermination rights of workers, employees: CDU/CSU 18 percent, SPD 54 percent, FDP 5 percent;

"More training positions for youth: CDU/CSU 31 percent, SPD 32 percent, FDP 6 percent;

"Keeping radicals out of public service: CDU/CSU 45 percent, SPD 21 percent, FDP 4 percent;

The answers do not add up to 100 percent because about 15 to 26 percent of those questioned answered "all are equally good" and 3 to 15 percent of those questioned gave the answer, "all are equally bad."

FINANCE MINISTER SAYS NO CURRENCY REFORM PLANNED

DW161033 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1815 GMT 14 May 80

[Statement by Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer on reports that a currency reform could occur in the FRG; date, place not given--recorded]

[Text] The report is absolute nonsense. The deutsche mark is one of the strongest currencies of the world which is very much in demand. It has always gained in value vis-a-vis the dollar in past years. We have--just to use such a comparison--more than covered the total circulation of cash with gold and foreign currencies. We have low price increase rates. With the exception of Austria there is no other country in the world with such a good combination of stable prices and economic growth. The deutsche mark is in demand everywhere in the world. We have great problems in keeping other central banks from using the deutsche mark as a reserve currency. All in all one must perhaps say that this report ought to be seen in connection with the election year: It is supposed to create unrest and worry. It is completely unfounded; it is all nonsense.

ENVOY DENIES REPORTS ON 'SECRET' ACCORD WITH IRAN

BK150957 Hong Kong AFP in English 0934 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] Singapore, 15 May (AFP)--The French ambassador to Singapore, Mr Henri Chollet, denied as "absurd and totally untrue" reports that France and Iran had signed a "secret sanctions-busting agreement." In a letter to the afternooner NEW NATION published today, Mr Chollet said the report, based on an article by the American syndicated columnist Jack Anderson, was without "a single shred of truth in it." Mr Anderson had said in the article published at the end of last month that the U.S. intelligence services were investigating a report published in London that France and Iran had signed a secret agreement providing for the supply to Iran of military and oilfield equipment, food and consumer goods in exchange for crude oil.

Mr Chollet, in his letter, said the allegations were totally untrue. "There have been no agreements whatsoever concluded in the field of technical military assistance with Iran, and there are no French military assistance personnel in that country," he added.

LE MONDE VIEWS DETENTE ON EVE OF MUSKIE-GROMYKO MEETING

LD150955 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 May 80 p 3

[Bernard Guetta dispatch: "Peace in New Clothing"]

[Text] Vienna--Peace--"main task of our age." Peace which must be defended against the "insane" U.S. policy. Peace threatened by the deployment of new NATO missiles in Europe. Peace which the world would never have recovered in 1945 without the USSR's "decisive" aid. Peace whose preservation rests on "one reason alone: the existence of the Warsaw Pact and its armed forces led by the invincible Soviet Army." Peace--the predominant theme in the communist countries' press since the European communist parties' meeting in Paris--has, therefore, assumed the scale of an offensive in the Eastern bloc recently. Nothing has been overlooked: Since Monday we have even had the announcement of the withdrawal of another Soviet contingent from the GDR and the condemnation in East Berlin by the latest NATO secretary to defect of NATO's warlike designs.

The communique to be published Thursday, 15 May, in the Polish capital at the end of the Warsaw Pact consultative political committee meeting will above all assert the desire of the USSR and its allies to preserve detente. Without ruling out a firm tone or a decision to strengthen the socialist camp's military potential, the emphasis would seem likely to be placed on three points: the need to ratify the SALT II agreements and to convene the Madrid conference; the convening of a conference on military detente and disarmament in Europe (Note 1: This long-standing Warsaw Pact proposal was revived by Mr Gierek in February at the PZPR congress); finally, the reaffirmation of Mr Brezhnev's offer of negotiations made in East Berlin on 7 October [as published], probably accompanied by new proposals.

This will set the scene for the meeting between Gromyko and the U.S. secretary of state in Vienna Friday afternoon. Mr Muskie makes no secret of the fact that he has nothing special to say to his interlocutor except that Washington does not accept the Afghan fait accompli. Mr Gromyko, however, will have a full bag of files both new and old to be negotiated. Far from Kabul he will find it easy to be the man of reason against the obstinate man. Mr Muskie will arrive from Brussels where there will have been talk of a response [to Afghanistan]. Mr Gromyko will arrive from Warsaw where he will have discussed the struggle for detente. The first will have left hesitant allies while the second will have left unanimously faithful friends.

The former will speak on behalf of a President who no longer knows what policy to follow. The latter will represent a confident team--a power which intends to succeed in normalizing its relations with the West after its thrust toward the warm seas; a power conscious of the fact that "the existing military-strategic balance enables the socialist countries to influence the solution of international problems by their foreign policy...." (Note 2: This is a quotation from an article by Czechoslovak Defense Minister Dzur which was published in Prague recently) In short, Mr Muskie will have to make this trial meeting a master stroke to avoid adding Friday's talks to the list of U.S. blunders.

However, the Warsaw Pact's peace offensive is not only directed at the Vienna meeting. It has been prepared since mid-January by numerous meetings among the leaders of the socialist camp (especially by Marshal Kulikov's visit to Central Europe and Mr Gromyko's visit to Bucharest) and has two aims: On the one hand to obtain the suspension of the deployment of Pershing missiles decided by NATO in December following the deployment of the Soviet SS-20's, and on the other to emphasise the differences of opinion between Europe and the United States.

The fact that the reservations expressed by The Hague and Brussels in December have been further strengthened since then, and the recent West German suggestion to block the deployment of the new Eurostrategic missiles for a while, give the first objective some realism. The second is based on facts:

First, the irritation felt by Paris and Bonn at the White House's vacillations, their anxiety at the economic and political dangers of a deterioration in detente and their desire not to alter their bilateral relations with Moscow in any way; second, Schmidt's temptation to play a role in keeping with his country's power in this crisis. Indeed there is no longer an entirely even balance between Atlantic solidarity and national interest in Bonn. Chancellor Schmidt's forthcoming trips to the GDR and Moscow are indicative of that, as are the importance of his political talks, notably with Honecker, during Tito's funeral (and in the absence of Mr Carter and Mr Giscard d'Estaing).

Socialist International's Role

Another factor is the mediatory role which the Socialist International intends to play between Moscow and Washington. Received by Brezhnev in October and praised by [CPSU aide] Ponomarev at the communist parties' Paris meeting, the Socialist International's working group on disarmament has seen its action result in the decision last week to send [Sweden's Olof] Palme on a mission to Moscow. The Socialist International is not Europe, but its influence there is definite, especially in the FRG.

The last advantage is that the peace offensive enables Moscow to soothe the apprehensions of those among its allies, Poland and Hungary especially, which had been disturbed by the possible repercussions of the invasion of Afghanistan. Reassured to see that their economies have not suffered, they think it more profitable to advocate maintaining detente than to cross swords for the "ideals of the April revolution" in Kabul. Even Ceausescu, who was anxious to recall his independence by receiving Hua Guofeng and DPRK President Kim Il-song in Bucharest a few hours before the Warsaw meeting and who did not attend the Paris meeting, should not this time find reason for outbursts like those in Moscow in November 1978.

"The Soviet Union," Mr Carter said in his Philadelphia speech Friday, "will not succeed in dividing the Atlantic Alliance or making us believe that Europe could be an island of detente while aggression continues elsewhere." This is clearly not Moscow's opinion.

TALKS WITH PORTUGAL'S EANES MARKED BY 'PROFOUND UNDERSTANDING'

LD160206 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2200 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] Portuguese President Eanes, who has been on a visit to Italy since yesterday, has invited Pertini to visit Portugal. Pertini has accepted the invitation. This marks the profound friendship and understanding which characterized the political talks held yesterday afternoon and this morning between the two heads of state. An ample convergence and in many cases a real and proper identity of views between Italy and Portugal have emerged. This also applies to Portugal's adherence to the European Community.

In this connection, during yesterday's talks at the Quirinale, also attended by Foreign Ministers Colombo and Freitas do Amaral, Pertini said that it would be absurd to keep Portugal closely linked with the adherence to the EEC but that Europe, too, cannot be a factor of stability and peace unless the countries on its southern flank are part of it.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE VOTES TO GO TO MOSCOW

LD160124 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 15 May 80

[Summary] Reporter Antonio Pedro has been outside the building where the Portuguese Olympic Committee met tonight in Lisbon. He reports:

"The meeting has already ended, but all the participants at the meeting stated on their way out that they could not say anything about the decision made with regard to the participation of Portuguese athletes in the Moscow Olympics. A communique will be released in due course, but we could not even find out exactly when. However, by other means we managed to find out what the decision was, and we are going to give it first hand: The meeting of the Portuguese Olympic Committee said yes to Moscow. There were 20 votes in favor of sending Portuguese athletes to Moscow, 15 against and 3 abstentions. The Portuguese Olympic Committee, therefore, and the sporting federations which took part in the plenary meeting tonight said 'yes' to Moscow, with 20 votes in favor, 15 against and 3 abstentions."

PAPER EXPECTS 'NEW STYLE' U.S. DIPLOMACY FROM MUSKIE

LD141035 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 9 May 80 p 2

[Editorial: "New Style"]

[Text] Edmund Muskie had just been appointed secretary of state, a post for which he was chosen by President Carter as Cyrus Vance's replacement. Muskie's first speech to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee enables us to perceive certain signs of a possible change in the conduct of U.S. foreign policy. Of course this change will be characterized more by a variation in style than in actual objectives, whose basic outlines should not be altered.

The new secretary of state began by stating clearly that he, and not the presidential adviser on national security affairs, will hold prime responsibility for setting the "foreign policy course." This reflects the demand for greater autonomy for the secretary of state, a figure often "threatened" by the presidential adviser's special position. This is what happened during Nixon's term in office, when Henry Kissinger effectively took charge of foreign policy; the same happened more recently to Cyrus Vance who throughout his period of office never managed to eliminate Zbigniew Brzezinski's influence on President Carter--another factor which contributed to his resignation.

The second inference to be drawn from Edmund Muskie's speech is that the U.S. administration seems willing to revise its policy toward Moscow. Specifically, Muskie stated that his country seeks a "steadfast and balanced policy with respect to the Soviet Union."

Having condemned in no uncertain terms the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, for which the Kremlin will have to pay a "heavy price," Muskie nevertheless emphasized that "insofar as Soviet policy permits, no opportunity to strive for peace must be ignored."

One can attach a similar interpretation to Muskie's first diplomatic mission--he is to meet with the Soviet foreign minister during his coming visit to Vienna on the 25th anniversary of Austria's liberation [sentence as published]. The announced meeting will be the first high-level U.S.-Soviet contact since the Afghan invasion in December and something which Zbigniew Brzezinski very recently opposed outright.

Muskie thus seems to be introducing a new style based, as he put it, "on a positive diplomacy of active compromise."

PCP DOCUMENT ON INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS, GOVERNMENT POLICY

LD151101 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 8 May 80 pp 5-8

[Apparent text of document approved at 3 May Portuguese Communist Party (PCP) Central Committee plenum: "The International Situation, the Government's Foreign Policy and International Activity"]

[Text] 1--The PCP Central Committee analyzed the recent evolution of the international situation which confirms the assessment made at its 25 January meeting.

The Central Committee emphasizes that the international situation is continuing to evolve in a manner favorable to the forces of democracy, national independence, peace, social progress and socialism.

The proclamation of Zimbabwe's independence, following a lengthy and difficult armed liberation struggle, confirming the revolutionary process' irreversibility and diversity, constitutes an important victory over imperialism and racism in Africa and in the world. The PCP Central Committee reaffirms the Portuguese Communists' militant solidarity with the Zimbabwe African National Union and the patriotic forces and people of Zimbabwe, as well as with the Southwest African People's Organization of Namibia and the African National Congress of South Africa, which are courageously leading their peoples in the national liberation struggle against racism and apartheid, and with all peoples struggling for national and social emancipation.

The Central Committee examined in particular the grave threats to peace and people's security resulting from imperialism's attempts to halt the progress of the revolutionary process of peoples' social and national emancipation and to tackle the exacerbation of capitalism's general crisis at the expense of the workers and the people's masses through restrictions of and attacks against democratic freedoms and peoples' independence.

Imperialism has unleashed the most protracted and dangerous counteroffensive against peace and peoples' security since the cold war period.

The long-term armament program adopted by NATO under U.S. pressure in May 1978; the sinister neutron bomb project; the U.S. failure to ratify the SALT II agreements; the setting up of the U.S. "rapid-intervention force"; the provocations against Cuba at the time of the nonaligned countries' conference; the strengthening of military bases and the gigantic naval operations on the part of the United States in the Indian Ocean, the Persian Gulf and the Caribbean; NATO's decision to deploy new U.S. missiles in the West European countries; the retaliation and boycott measures adopted by the Carter administration against the USSR and other socialist countries, as well as against Iran; [paragraph continues] the orchestration of violent anticommunist and anti-Soviet campaigns; the pressures and blackmail brought to bear by the United Sta s against its allie. and imperialism's collusion with the Chinese leaders; the atmosphere of hysteria and chauvinism surrounding the U.S. election campaign--these are developments which form part of the "position of strength" strategy, the strategy of confrontation with the socialist camp and of material and psychological preparation for war on the part of the most reactionary and aggressive circles of the United States and NATO.

Just as our party has already pointed out, the gigantic anticommunist and anti-Soviet campaign orchestrated by U.S. imperialism on the pretext of the events in Afghanistan constitutes a cover for imperialism's aggressive strategy and for its policy directed against peaceful coexistence among states with different social systems, against detente and for a return to cold war in international relations.

The military operation recently unleashed by the United States against Iran demonstrates how far U.S. imperialism's most reactionary and aggressive circles are prepared to go in their provocative and adventurist line. The operation was a resounding failure, but the dangers of further imperialist military adventures, in Iran and elsewhere in the region and the world, which could plunge mankind into a destructive war have not been dispelled.

The Pentagon hawks, who have even ousted Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, are seeking at all costs, in the name of "Western solidarity," to drag the imperialist powers of the EEC and Japan into their warmongering strategy by imposing on them a policy of faits accomplis.

The PCP Central Committee denounces as particularly dangerous imperialism's aggressive aims in the Near and Middle East, and reiterates its solidarity with the Arab peoples--specifically, the Palestinian people--the peoples of Afghanistan and Iran and all peoples and progressive and anti-imperialist forces in the region.

At the same time, it draws attention to the threats looming over other peoples and regions of the world such as in Central America--where, moreover, the peoples' social and national liberation movement is clearly progressing, specifically in Nicaragua, El Salvador and so forth. The gigantic U.S. military operations scheduled for 8 May--which envisage the movement of colossal military forces and resources and the violation of Cuban territorial waters--constitute a dangerous provocation against socialist Cuba and the Caribbean.

The Central Committee denounces once more the decision made by NATO in December to deploy about 600 new U.S. missiles in West Europe as an action of extreme gravity for peace and security on our continent, and calls on the workers and the Portuguese people to continue the struggle to prevent the implementation of this decision through negotiations and disarmament.

The PCP Central Committee believes that mobilization of the broadest peoples' sectors and the broadest cooperation among all political, social and religious forces opposed to war are possible and necessary.

The movement for peace and disarmament in Portugal constitutes an important specific element of the people's movement. The PCP is prepared to examine with all democratic, patriotic and peace-loving forces in our country broadly unitary initiatives and actions for peace and disarmament.

The PCP Central Committee expresses its deep conviction that it is possible through united and resolute action by revolutionary and peace-loving forces to repel imperialists hegemonic and aggressive plans, defend detente, ensure peace and achieve further successes along the path of democracy, national independence and socialism.

2--The Sa Carneiro-Freitas do Amaral government's foreign policy constitutes one of the cornerstones of the subversive plan aimed at eliminating the Portuguese democratic system and establishing another dictatorship.

The reactionary parties' government is seeking by every means to win support from the blackest European and world reaction, practicing a policy of national dereliction and submission to imperialism, proclaiming itself an opponent of detente, and actively taking part in the imperialist campaigns to exacerbate the international situation.

The Central Committee expresses the Communists' firm opposition to the rapid strengthening of Portugal's involvement in NATO and the subordination of the nation's armed forces to its machinery; Portugal's entry into the Common Market of the monopolies, which the government is seeking to hasten without heeding even the most elementary national interests; the irresponsible and provocative actions aimed at hampering and restricting Portugal's relations with the USSR and other socialist countries; the sabotaging of relations with the new African countries, specifically by welcoming traitors and encouraging neocolonialist plans, intrigues and conspiracies against those states; the servile submission to the Carter administration's orders, which were very obvious in the case of Afghanistan and in the severing of trade relations with Iran, as well as in the attempt to boycott the Olympic games; the use of military bases located on Portuguese territory in acts of aggression by imperialism against other peoples; the hostile attitude toward the holding of the Madrid CSCE conference.

The PCP Central Committee warns the workers and the Portuguese people of the grave dangers to which Portugal is exposed as a result of the Sa Carneiro-Freitas do Amaral government's involvement and active participation in the aggressive and adventurist plans of U.S. imperialism and NATO.

The PCP Central Committee calls on the working class, the Portuguese people and all democratic and patriotic forces to intensify the struggle in defense of national independence and sovereignty and against the policy of submission and alignment with imperialism.

The PCP Central Committee emphasizes the need for the rapid normalization of relations of friendship and cooperation with the USSR, other socialist countries and the new African states, with which the present government's policy is creating difficulties.

The PCP Central Committee emphasizes that respect for the principles of foreign policy enshrined in the Constitution, real diversification of our foreign relations, the defense of national interests and sovereignty, and the implementation of a policy of peace, friendship and cooperation with all peoples are of vital importance for the workers and the people and for the defense of the democratic system, progress and national independence.

3--The PCP Central Committee debated and approved the party's recent international activity.

Since the beginning of the year the PCP has received in Portugal delegations of the communist parties of Spain, the Netherlands, Czechoslovakia and France, and other official delegations and study groups. PCP delegations have visited Cuba, Angola, the Middle East and several West European countries. The PCP was represented at the congresses of the Polish United Workers Party and the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party, as well as at other congresses, meetings and international conferences. Further initiatives are envisaged for the near and immediate future.

The PCP always regards its national tasks as indissociable from its internationalist duties. The PCP is working for the cohesion of the three great revolutionary forces of the current era--the USSR and the other socialist countries, the workers movement in the capitalist countries, and national liberation movements--and for the strengthening of the unity of the international communist movement on the basis of the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism.

The Central Committee believes that the development of the PCP's relations with other communist parties, as well as with democratic and revolutionary parties and movements, constitutes an essential factor of the development of the Portuguese people's ties of friendship and cooperation with other peoples and of the development of relations of peace and friendship between the new democratic Portugal and the other countries of the world.

The PCP Central Committee emphasizes that the unity of the international communist movement constitutes the basis and irreplaceable decisive factor for unity among all anti-imperialist forces and all forces struggling for democracy, peace, independence, social progress and socialism. The Central Committee stressed in particular the importance of friendship, cooperation and solidarity among the communist parties of the capitalist countries and of the socialist countries.

A constant element of the PCP's activity and policy has always been its readiness and desire to meet with the fraternal parties in order to exchange experiences, analyze the situation, discuss opinions and agree on joint actions, both through bilateral meetings and in multilateral meetings of various kinds in whose preparation it is undoubtedly desirable for there to be prior consultation which will enable each party to contribute its experience and opinion.

The Central Committee received a report on the meeting of European communist and workers parties held in Paris 28-29 April, in which a PCP delegation took part. The PCP Central Committee regards as highly important the struggle for the aims cited in the "communists' appeal to the peoples of the countries of Europe" adopted at that meeting and the need to conduct appropriate initiatives at various levels aimed at mobilizing the broadest social and political forces for detente, peace and disarmament.

'LUKEWARM' RESPONSE TO AFGHAN PROPOSAL FOR SETTLEMENT

LD151324 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1255 GMT 15 May 80

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic staff]

[Text] Britain today gave a lukewarm response to the proposal from Afghanistan for a political settlement which could lead to the withdrawal of Soviet troops.

A Foreign Office statement said the proposal showed "little if any change from the previous Soviet and Afghan position."

But at the same time the Foreign Office indicated a relaxation of its January ban on high-level ministerial contacts with the Soviet Union after the invasion of Afghanistan. Lord Carrington is due to meet Soviet Foreign Minister Mr Andrey Gromyko in Vienna this weekend.

In its reaction to the Afghanistan proposal, the Foreign Office said it would "result in confirmation of the status quo since the Kabul regime would obtain Pakistani and Iranian recognition and secure frontiers with those countries before the Soviet Union gave any undertaking to withdraw.

"The arrangement foreseen would contain nothing about the Soviet-Afghan frontier, so that there would be no assurance that the Russians if they withdrew, would not invade again."

The statement said it was "satisfactory" that the Russians seemed prepared to contemplate a political settlement "rather than relying on brute force. This shows the value of international pressure."

But, the statement added, the proposal was based on the "unfounded allegation" that the present situation in Afghanistan resulted from outside interference by the United States and others.

IRAN SANCTIONS BILL PASSED BY HOUSE OF LORDS

LD151940 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1906 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] The government's bill to impose economic sanctions against Iran received its royal assent tonight, after the Lords passed it by 82 votes to 4.

The Iran (temporary powers) act has been rushed through Parliament this week to get it on to the statute book in time for the meeting of EEC foreign ministers on Saturday.

It has been severely criticized from all sides of the Commons, with many of the government's own backbenchers expressing misgivings about sanctions, and the damage they could inflict on British exporters. But ministers have argued that Britain must stand by her American ally to secure the release of the U.S. hostages in Tehran.

MPs sat through the night on Tuesday to meet the government's timetable, and today it passed through the House of Lords unscathed.

Leader of the House, Lord Soames told peers that sanctions were essential "to bring home to the Iranian authorities that the continued violation of the fundamental principles of international relations will not be tolerated by the West."

DEMARCHE MADE TO UK HIGH COMMISSIONER ON LETTER

NC161125 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis has made a demarche to the British high commissioner in Cyprus, Mr Rhodes, regarding the letter sent by the consular section of the commission to English buyers and owners of immovable property in the republic's occupied territory.

Mr Rolandhis explained to Mr Rhodes the reasons why the government of the republic considers the High Commission's act unacceptable and handed him a relevant document.

The foreign minister had made verbal demarches on the same matter to the British high commissioner as soon as the authorities of the republic learned that the letter had been sent.

ROLANDHIS STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF DIALOGUE

NC152155 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis has stated that, although the dialogue for a fair Cyprus solution has not yet been fruitful, it continues to be an essential course in the field of our political offensive. He stressed: We must keep on trying and. moreover, we must safeguard this method because if fair concepts about Cyprus are ever to prevail in Ankara, dialogue would be the vehicle to the final solution.

Speaking this evening in Limassol during a dinner given by the Famagusta Lions Club, Mr Rolandhis added that the dialogue procedure could be helped by the committee which the UN General Assembly president must appoint on the basis of the recent UN General Assembly resolution on Cyprus. The presence of independent representatives from other countries during crucial discussions would give vigor to the talks and help them. It would also provide a new lever for the UN secretary general in his role as negotiator. An unfortunate rejection of the committee by the Turkish side, Mr Rolandhis added, would limit the activity of the committee--when it is set up--to the field of internationalization.

Mr Rolandhis said that almost 6 years of hard and arduous efforts, both in the international field and in the Cyprus political arena, for progress in or a solution to our problem have not produced any result because the Turkish position for a divisive solution basically remains unchanged. He also said that, despite the repeated approaches in the last 2 years toward all those who could be of help, there have been no results. Mr Rolandhis remarked: Therefore, is the Cyprus problem a question of good or bad handling or is it a matter of a change in the Turkish attitude and position?

Mr Rolandhis referred to the serious crisis on our domestic front, stressing that when tension is added to a problem which is in itself difficult then the problem becomes insoluble. The foreign minister stressed: I firmly believe that in order to preserve some possibilities for resolving our problem we must free it from political and party influences. We must view the Cyprus problem as a national question and not as a political or party bastion. He added: We are entering a period of partisan tension because of the 1981 parliamentary elections. If the Cyprus problem becomes the subject of speeches at political gatherings we ourselves will be killing every possibility for its solution.

In conclusion he said that representatives of all parties must participate in the National Council and attend the council or private meetings with the president of the republic with the goal of drawing up--despite all the difficulties--a national policy on the Cyprus problem.

RALLIS, PAPANDREOU TRADE STATEMENTS ON NATO, FIR VIOLATION

AT151248 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 15 May 80 p 1

[Text] The first skirmish between the majority opposition party and the new government took place yesterday over the NATO issue and even before the government appears before the chamber of deputies to make its policy statement. The skirmish started with four questions addressed to the prime minister by the chairman of PASOK. Late last night Rallis replied to A. Papandreou, providing the necessary answers.

A. Papandreou

In his statement A. Papandreou mentioned the following:

Significant revelations and developments in the sector of our national issues force us to address certain questions to Prime Minister Rallis even before his government policy statement is read.

1. According to a statement by the chairman of NATO's military planning committee, Greece took an "active" role in the committee meeting. This statement directly contradicts a government statement according to which Greece did not take part in the Brussels meeting. We call upon the prime minister to provide an explanation. In addition, we call upon him to inform us of the level that the decision for the "active" participation of Vice Admiral Psallidhas was taken.

2. An afternoon newspaper reported that at Montreaux (1977) Greece and Turkey agreed to prohibit oil prospecting in the Aegean--with the exception of the territorial waters belonging to the two countries--pending a solution to the Greek-Turkish "dispute." The prime minister has a duty to inform us as to whether such an agreement does exist and, if it does, how can Greece and Turkey be placed on an equal footing with respect to rights in the Aegean?

3. During NATO's "Dawn Patrol" air and naval maneuvers Turkish aircraft violated Greek airspace and refused to submit their flight plans thus violating the Athens FIR [Flight Information Region]. It is suprising that the Greek Government considered it to be its duty to supply explanations to NATO over the "interference" against Turkish aircraft by aircraft of the Greek Air Force. It is also surprising that the Greek Government did not demand explanations from both Turkey as well as from NATO over the flagrant violation of Greek frontiers.

4. Huge military aid--which approximates the astronomical figure of $2 billion--is due to be supplied by NATO--primarily by Germany--to Turkey for the purpose of allegedly strengthening its position toward the Soviet Union, with which Turkey maintains excellent relations. It is absolutely certain that this overarming of Turkey will decisively overthrow the balance of power in the Aegean at the expense of our country. Naturally the government is aware of all this. Despite this the prime minister--according to his first press conference--places our country's return to the military wing of the Atlantic Alliance as one of the first goals of his government. This is an allaince which openly encourages and strengthens Turkey in its aggressive aspirations at the expense of the territorial integrity of our country.

Rallis

Answering A. Papandreou, Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis made the following statement:

There is no such committee of military planning to which the chairman of PASOK refers. If he means NATO's supreme committee, this is the Defense Planning Committee and Admiral Psallidhas never attended it. Greece's diplomatic representative, Ambassador N. Athanasiou, however, did attend as he has also attended other NATO committees by invitation.

In contrast, Admiral Psallidhas--and earlier, General Korkas--has never ceased attending the military committee sessions with the exception of meetings in which questions were discussed which did not concern Greece.

In reference to Papandreou's second question, it is denied that such an agreement exists. The third question has already received an answer from an appropriate source of the Ministry of National Defense. In reference to the fourth question, it is essential to explain that there is absolutely no official announcement on the granting of $2 billion military aid to Turkey.

I KATHIMERINI Report

AT151249 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 15 May 80 p 1

[Excerpts] Diplomatic protest notes were once again exchanged between Greece and Turkey when Turkish aircraft recently attempted to violate Greek airspace and were prevented from doing so by Greek aircraft. The incident--which occurred during NATO maneuvers--had possible repercussions upon Greek-NATO relations as well.

In reference to this the Ministry of National Defense stressed yesterday that all air maneuvers in the Aegean--whether NATO or Turkish--will be under surveillance and attempts to violate national airspace will be dealt with under the proper procedure.

No Agreement on Oil Prospecting

The government spokesman yesterday described as unfounded certain afternoon press reports on a Greek-Turkish agreement on limitation of oil prospecting to territorial waters pending solution of Aegean differences. A similar denial was made by former Turkish Prime Minister Ecevit.

At the same time, the Public Oil Corporation, DEP, described these press reports as inaccurate and unfounded and emphatically denied receiving any government instructions to limit its prospecting to preferred areas and stressed that its prospecting program is based only upon scientific data.

TSATSOS MAKES STATEMENT TO PRESS ON LEAVING OFFICE

AT151147 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 15 May 80

[Tsatsos statement to press after swearing in of Karamanlis]

[Text] Ending my 5-year term in the presidency of the republic I wish to thank all those who, through their encouragement or criticism, helped me fulfill my duties as best as it was possible for me to do. I am happy because succession to my office, the best possible that could exist, is an additional guarantee for the stability of our democratic regime and for the security and progress of our fatherland. I know that even as a private citizen I will have duties toward the country. I will fulfill them with all the strength at my disposal.

RIZOSPASTIS SCORES TSATSOS' STATEMENT TO LONDON TIMES

AT151414 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 15 May 80 p 1

[Excerpt] Karamanlis is due to be sworn in today as the president of the republic at a special meeting of the chamber's plenum. The resignation of Tsatsos from the office of president is already in force as of midnight last night as announced by chamber of deputies Chairman Papaspirou who read Tsatsos' letter of resignation to the chamber.

Tsatsos accompanied his resignation with cold war declarations. Specifically, in a statement he made to the Athens correspondent of the London TIMES he hinted at the possibilities of "subversive" actions by a "foreign power" for the purpose of establishing "a dictatorship from the left."

Tsatsos also mentioned, "I can see nobody who could divert the Greek people from their democratic course. The army has no desire to throw the country into a new adventure in dictatorship." He continued that Greece belongs to the Western world which rejects "all forms" of totalitarianism and "aspires for change through developments and not through revolutions." He added that "only application of force from the outside could force Greece to deviate from this position." According to the TIMES, Tsatsos rejects any possibility of a "fascist dictatorship, which is impossible due to Greece's accession to the EEC" as well as the possibility of "a dictatorship from the left because it presupposes force through a general war which will come from the outside and not from within."

The newspaper adds that President Tsatsos believes that Greece "is secure due to its ties with the political wing of NATO and the EEC."

Harmful Views

Political observers commenting on the allegations of the late president of the republic stressed that although very carefully couched they express an extremely harmful view on the relations between Greece and the socialist countries, to which he obviously refers. The same observers stressed that what Tsatsos expounded from his position as president creates a serious political issue for the government which is responsible for the country's official foreign policy. Naturally it is the government's duty to make amends and correct these unacceptable allegations. Any possible government silence on the matter may be interpreted as an acceptance of such views.

TSATSOS, PAPANDREOU EXCHANGE LETTERS ON RETIREMENT

AT151158 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] Majority opposition leader and PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou sent the following letter to Konstandinos Tsatsos, the retiring president of the republic: Dear Mr President, I wish to congratulate you for your work in the presidency of the republic. With your presence you gave the true meaning of the office to the presidency of the republic. This in truth is an historic contribution. I also wish to thank you for the opportunities you gave me for exchanging thoughts on the critical issues which the country faced and continues to face.

Tsatsos replied to Papandreou with the following letter: Dear chairman, during the five years of my term of office I tried to create a climate of calm, civilized and good faith contacts with all for the institution of the presidency. I believed this is the imperative prerequisite for strengthening democracy and our parliamentary regime. I warmly thank you for recognizing this effort to which I gave all the strength at my disposal.

I AVTI NOTES POSSIBLE OPPOSITION TO KARAMANLIS FROM RIGHT

AT151338 Athens I AVYI in Greek 15 May 80 p 6

[From the "I AVYI" column: "Today's Swearing-in Ceremony"]

[Text] Karamanlis will be sworn in today as the president of the republic. This ceremony officially inaugurates a new period in the country's post-dictatorial course.

Since the change in the political regime in 1974 the personality of Karamanlis has dominated our political affairs. It was the unquestionable core of unity for the main bulk of the country's conservative forces. It also contributed decisively toward not only the unity of "New Democracy" and to the development of its character but also to the weight brought to bear by the party upon the political developments of the past 5 1/2 years. This is an objective fact which supplied a strong personal character to the government and to political authority in general.

The occupation of the presidency of the republic by Karamanlis will for the first time provide the opportunity to test certain basic provisions of the 1975 Constitution which have remained atrophied until now. This has to do with the extensive authority given by the Constitution to the president of the republic. We do not wish to make any hasty forecasts. It is not difficult, however, for one to establish that the 5-year term of Karamanlis' presidency which starts today will be very difficult. This is because the problems which have developed and the already obvious need for a radical change could overthrow the balance of political power as it has been maintained until now. We state that Karamanlis' presidency will be difficult because during its term--and perhaps very soon--some of his own political dogmas, as he has expressed them to date and from which he will have to separate his positions in time, will be severely put to the test. This specifically affects the monocracy of the rightwing, the enforcement of which he personally and decisively contributed.

The prospect of a democratic majority within the chamber of deputies after the next election is the most probable development because this is in accordance with the desires which steadily develop among the masses. This prospect will place the president of the republic face to face with the problem of respecting the people's will in a way which is very different from the one which dominated the thinking of those who wrote the 1975 Constitution.

In essence, Karamanlis takes over the presidency of the republic during a time when the deeper meaning is to be found in the fundamental bankruptcy of the monocracy of the right, in the amassing of prerequisites for a different form of authority--for a government of the broadest possible democratic cooperation which will be able to correctly express the unifying democratic will of the masses and to give a decisive anwwer to imperialist pressures against our national interests. This is the true state of affairs. The new president of the republic will be able to exercise his duties in a positive way only to the degree that he realizes that no "super-authority" will be able to have any substantial effect in our times if it is attempted at the expense of the peoples' will. We believe, without any desire to be unjust, that this reminder is both unavoidable and useful to Karamanlis as he assumes his new duties.

KKE (INTERIOR) SCORES RALLIS REMARKS ON ELECTORAL SYSTEM

AT131335 Athens I AVYI in Greek 13 May 80 p 1

[Statement issued on 12 May in Athens by the KKE (Interior) Press Office]

[Text] The KKE (Interior) will wait to hear the new prime minister's policy statements in order to evaluate the policy that will be announced, although reference to the general guidelines of New Democracy as the guideline for the new government and the composition of the new government show that it will act within the framework of generally the same policy of the right which is responsible for the great deadlocks in the basic sectors of our national life. However, we cannot keep silent over that point in Rallis statement to the press which refers to the proportional electoral system. The rejection of the proportional system without even a discussion, obviously to maintain party cohesion in New Democracy--a cohesion that proved fragile--constitutes a serious mistake that leaves even President Karamanlis exposed. For many years the right has used the theory of a lack of government in such a way that the minority ruled thanks to the tricks of the electoral law and the plunder of the votes of smaller parties.

However, instead of stability the country was led to a deep crisis because the policy that was followed had neither the approval nor the support of the popular majority. The implementation of the simple and pure proportional system is not merely a demand for democratic equality; above all it is a political necessity because it can contribute to the creation of prerequisites for the election of governments of very broad democratic cooperation which will lead to a democratic way out of the current crisis.

The simple proportional system does not run contrary to the interests of any party because each of them will be elected with as much power as the people give it. The only opponents of the simple proportional system may be those parties which want to increase their strength by plundering votes which do not belong to them and obviously the people will have one more reason to condemn those parties.

EUROSOCIALIST GLYNN COMMENTS ON PASOK'S FUTURE EEC POLICIES

AT091558 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 9 May 80 p 3

[Text] "The essence of the matter is that, in January 1981, Greece will officially become the 10th member of the European Community. Whether PASOK [Panhellenic Socialist Movement] wants to call upon the Greek people to vote for or against accession is a matter of interest to the Greek Socialists." This was stated in answer to a question for the leader of the delegation of the Eurosocialist group in the European Parliament, Ernest Glynn, at yesterday's press conference at an Athens hotel. Glynn added that today we cannot discuss hypothetically what PASOK intends to do if and when it becomes a government. What we can state with certainty is that Greece will join the Community as an equal member in early 1981 and it is well known that, once a country does join, it is difficult for it to leave, as provided for under the Treaty of Rome. He then referred to the meeting which members of the delegation had with the chairman of PASOK, A. Papandreou, and the discussions which were held on the various political, economic and social problems that will be created by our country's accession to the "Nine" and on the participation of Greek deputies in the European Parliament as of 1 January 1981. Other issues discussed included the international situation and its effect on the member states as a result of the increasing threat of a third world war.

From his contacts here Glynn has concluded that they agree on many points with the Greek Socialists and that there is room for close cooperation. In conclusion he said European socialists are willing to help Greece--as an equal member of the Community--to solve any future problem and specifically on improving the economic, industrial and agricultural structure of the country.

ECEVIT CALLS FOR EXAMINATION OF AFGHAN PROPOSALS

TA151705 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1630 GMT 15 May 80

[Exceprt] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit said that developments in Afghanistan should be assessed with good will and contributions should be made toward the solution of this problem. In a news conference in Ankara today, Ecevit recalled the British proposal made some time ago for a plan that would insure Afghanistan's neutrality. Ecevit added that the Afghan government had now made a proposition in the same vein. Recalling the Afghan Government's announcement that if enough security is provided it would ask for the withdrawal of Soviet troops, Ecevit said that there were indications that the statement was being supported by the Soviet Union. In light of this, Ecevit called for the examination of this problem at meetings to be held in Vienna between the U.S. and European foreign ministers and the Islamic countries foreign ministers in Islamabad.

Ecevit continued: Since Turkey is a country that attaches great importance to the reinforcement of regional peace and global detente, the Turkish foreign minister should make concrete contributions at the Islamabad meeting toward a solution to the Afghan issue that will revive international detente and should assess new developments and opportunities for new developments, taking this view into consideration. Ecevit then replied to questions of domestic issues.

DEMIREL STATES DETERMINATION TO CONFRONT ALL FOREIGN THREATS

TA151627 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1610 GMT 15 May 80

[Excerpt] After his statement on the Council of Ministers meeting held today, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel replied to questions by journalists. To a journalist who recalled a remark by NATO officials that the Soviet Union was reinforcing its border with Turkey, Demirel said: I believe that this is not new information. There is nothing to comment on. Within its national potential, Turkey is determined to confront threats whatever their source. Moreover, Turkey is a member of an alliance, threats might be developed or created. However, I do not believe that we will be confronted with such a situation without cause if such a situation, nevertheless, develops. Whoever covets Turkey's soil will receive the necessary reply. This is all there is to it. Another journalist asked a question on presidential elections.

FRENCH ECONOMY MINISTER ARRIVES IN ANKARA, SIGNS LOAN AGREEMENT

TA151155 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] French Minister of Economy Rene Monory, who is charged with coordinating the postponement of Turkey's foreign debts, arrived in Ankara at 1130. In a statement at the airport, Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin said that Turkey wishes to strengthen the economic and social aspects of its traditional ties of friendship with France.

Sezgin recalled that an agreement envisaging the postponement of Turkey's debt to France of some $65 million, which was due in 1979, and a loan agreement of some $100 million, which France is to extend to Turkey within the framework of the OECD, will be signed in Ankara today. He added that the issue of developing the social and economic relations between the two countries will also be taken up at the talks. Monory said that the aim is to revive the Turkish-French relations which have become stagnant in recent years. Monory said the fact that France is coordinating the debt deferral program within the OECD program reflects the political importance attached to Turkey. Monory will be received by Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel this afternoon. He will later meet with Sezgin and sign the agreements. Monory, who will hold a news conference after the agreement signing ceremony, will leave Turkey this evening. The French Treasury director, who is heading the technical work regarding the postponement of Turkey's debts, arrived in Ankara together with Monory.

Signing Ceremony

TA151950 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 15 May 80

[Text] Agreements were signed in Ankara today regarding a $100 million loan to be extended by France within the framework of the OECD and the deferral of Turkey's $65 million debt to France which was due in 1979. Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin signed the agreements on behalf of Turkey and French Minister of Economy Rene Monory on the behalf of France. Monory, who arrived in Ankara this morning, was received by Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel this afternoon. Turkey's requests for the postponement of its debts, the general economic situation as well as bilateral relations were discussed during the meeting. Monory left the prime ministry to meet with Sezgin and other officials. Sezgin's talks with the visiting minister lasted about 1 hour. After the meeting a ceremony was held for the signing of the agreements on loans to Turkey and the deferral of Turkey's debts to France. France had promised a loan of fr420 million to Turkey in 1980 within the framework of the OECD. The second agreement provides for the deferral of Turkey's $65 million state and guaranteed trade debts.

In a statement during the signing ceremony, Sezgin said that the $100 million loan to be extended by France would be used to finance 1980 imports. Recalling that an agreement was signed in Paris yesterday for the postponement of Turkey's $63 million debt, Sezgin said that as a result, Turkey's $128 million debt was deferred in only 2 days. Sezgin added that an agreement was also reached during his talks with the visiting finance minister on the deferral of Turkey's foreign debts within the framework of the OECD. Speaking after Sezgin, the French finance minister said that he would invite all OECD countries to a meeting as soon as possible to discuss the deferral of Turkey's debts. He added that he would make efforts to gain the deferral of Turkey's debts in accordance with Turkish requests. Monory said that his country would assist Turkey in solving its economic problems. Replying to questions by journalists, Monory said that Turkey requested the long-term deferral of its debts. He added that he was convinced that this problem would be solved in accordance with Turkey's requests.

OPPOSITION LEADER ECEVIT COMMENTS ON ACTING PRESIDENT

TA151631 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 15 May 80

[Excerpt] In a news conference at 1200 today, RPP leader Bulent Ecevit expressed his views on various subjects. Referring to the latest developments in Afghanistan, Ecevit said that the Turkish Government could make constructive contributions to the solution of this issue.

In reply to questions by journalists, Ecevit said that it was imperative to reach a result in the presidential elections and added:

[Begin Ecevit recording] Only the early election of a president can solve this problem. Solutions should be sought through other means such as amending the constitution or early elections. It is impossible to have secure elections at a time when a person--though we do not question his personality--who cannot fulfill the constitutional requirement of impartiality, holds the post of president under the present circumstances in Turkey.

I hope that the issue of electing a president will be solved by the end of this month. If this problem is not solved by then and continues into next month, this might create a new and concrete problem. Namely, the appointment of new senators from the Presidential Quota Group by the acting president. We are convinced that the acting president definitely has no such authority, because he does not have the constitutional authority required of a president.

Again I am not questioning him personally but his administrative position: He has not gained this post through elections. In the Turkish Grand National Assembly, he is only the elected president of the Senate. He has not resigned from his party or from his membership in the parliament as required of a president by the Constitution. He has not taken an oath as a president. Though the contributions of such a person might be acceptable for the running of the daily, urgent work, he cannot be authorized to elect anyone on his behalf or his party's behalf to the senate from the Presidential Quota Group. [end recording]

AMSTERDAM TRIBUNAL BRANDS SHCHARANSKIY SENTENCE 'ILLEGAL'

LD151031 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 May 80 p 8

[Rene ter Steege dispatch: "Shcharanskiy's Sentence Unjust and Illegal"]

[Text] Amsterdam--"Anatoliy Shcharanskiy was prosecuted and sentenced for having tried to exercise his right to emigration and free speech. His trial furnished no evidence that he had committed acts justifying an extremely harsh sentence and verdict."

This is one of the conclusions of the "Shcharanskiy tribunal" which was held in Amsterdam Monday and Tuesday, 12-13 May, and was attended by large number of leading political and legal figures who took care not to "indulge in anticommunism," as had been requested by the Dutch organizers in order to be able to continue a dialogue with the Kremlin leaders.

It was with this aim that an international Anatoliy Shcharanskiy committee has been set up in Amsterdam led by lawyer Robert Badinter and Mr Young, former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, who will try to establish contact with the Soviet leaders on human rights issues. Those taking part in the tribunal, including two Frenchmen [Socialist Party National Secretary] Michel Rocard and Andre Lwoff, did not want to annoy the Soviets any further since the latter, through APN dispatches, had already described the conference as "flagrant interference in the Soviet Union's internal affairs and a spectacle in the worst cold war traditions."

The final communique stipulates that "every country should have the freedom to choose its own political and social system and to protect the interests which it deems vital for its national security," immediately maintaining that "there are human rights issues on which the world community has the moral obligation to express itself."

In Amsterdam the tribunal participants tried to prove that it was in violation of Soviet laws and international treaties ratified by Moscow that Mr Shcharanskiy was sentenced in 1978 to 3 years' imprisonment and 10 years' hard labor for high treason and espionage for the CIA. In a message addressed to this "tribunal" Shcharanskiy urges the participants "never to stop helping those who have paid dearly for their aspiration to freedom."

TURKISH ENVOY NOTES MINISTERS' DISCUSSION OF AFGHANISTAN

TA141538 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 14 May 80

[Excerpts] A two-stage plan to strengthen the NATO defense system following the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan was discussed during the NATO Defense Planning Committee meeting in Brussels today. Defense and foreign ministers of member countries participated in the meeting. National Defense Minister Ahmet Ihsan Birincioglu reported the following information on the meeting by phone:

[Begin Birincioglu recording] It was stressed during today's meeting that, despite the new situation created by the invasion of Afghanistan, the actual responsibility of all the Allies is the defense of the NATO area. It was also emphasized that, in light of the above-mentioned new situation, the existing shortcomings in NATO's European defense should be eliminated. I would like to note that NATO's sphere of responsibility will not be widened within this framework.

We stated that strengthening Turkey's defense possibilities comprises the most important measure to be taken following the Afghanistan situation. This was acknowledged by most of the other ministers as well. It was also stressed that the interests of the countries in the region, their sensitivities and their just grievances should be taken into account and cooperation should be established with these countries in a bid to secure stability in Southwest Asia. Our view on this subject was also generally approved.

Turkey's views and attitude on this subject are received with understanding by our Allies because it borders on the region and has close and special relations with the countries of the region. This is also manifested in the points expressed in the joint communique. [end recording]

USSR SAID TO BACK PALME-LED 'COMMISSION ON DETENTE'

[TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA report: "Palme: Moscow Gave an Answer"]

[Text] [Swedish Social Democratic Party Chairman] Olof Palme has returned from Moscow, satisfied to have been given an answer to an important question. "It concerns the plans for a commission on international detente and disarmament," he said.

"The Soviets showed positive interest. Now we will have to keep working and secure further assurances from the United States and other countries. The new organization could probably be set up in September," Palme told TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA.

The most important person with whom Palme had talks was the Soviet Communist Party's International Secretary Boris Ponomarev. "We discussed a number of topics such as Iran and Afghanistan. But I do not want to say any more about what was said."

Olof Palme has been mentioned as the likely chairman of the new organization which will establish a headquarters in Vienna. The money will come from "independent" foundations. Which foundations?

"I do not want to discuss that," Palme said. "But there is no problem. We have already been given some money."

FINNISH-U.S. AIR AGREEMENT--Finland and the United States have signed an agreement aiming at the development of the air traffic between the two countries. Finland is to start flights from Finland via Seattle to a Californian city, probably Los Angeles. After the agreement has come into effect, U.S. airlines can open connections between the United States and any Finnish town with an international airport. The supplementary protocol of the air traffic agreement was signed in Washington this afternoon for Finland by Minister of Foreign Trade Esko Rekola. According to the current air traffic agreement, Finnair flies from Helsinki to New York and Americans can fly across the North Atlantic to Helsinki at their convenience. The amended agreement becomes valid after having been confirmed in both countries. The aviation board thinks that the agreement will come into force next fall. Finnair has plans to open a route to the West Coast of the United States within a year or so. [Text] [Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1400 GMT 12 May 80 LD]

DECISION TAKEN TO APPLY SANCTIONS AGAINST IRAN 22 MAY

[Text] Naples, May 18 (AFP)--Foreign ministers from the European Economic Community (EEC) today decided to apply new economic sanctions against Iran from next Thursday (May 22). The sanctions concern mainly the suspension of all contracts concluded with Iran after last November 4--the date on which the U.S. hostages in Iran were first detained. The ministers decided to apply the sanctions after noting that no decisive progress had been made towards release of the hostages since the ministers last met in Luxembourg on April 22.

The sanctions are in line with those proposed by the United Nations Security Council on January 10 but vetoed by the Soviet Union. The sanctions were aimed only at "speeding the release of the hostages," a communique said. It added that the ministers expressed great satisfaction with the decision by United Nations Secretary General Kurt Waldheim to send a member of the U.N. inquiry commission, Ajib Daoudy, to Tehran in the hope of resuming the commission's work towards a settlement of the crisis. The communique said the ministers will remain in constant touch to know if the U.N. mission advances in a way that would enable the early suspension of measures against Iran.

The ministers also expressed their desire to respect Iran's independence and the right of the Iranian people to determine their own future.

French Foreign Minister Comments

LD161814 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] The great diplomatic ballet continues in Naples, Italy, tomorrow. The ministers of foreign affairs of the Common Market will meet to decide on new sanctions against Iran. Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet confirmed this with France-Inter:

[Begin Francois-Poncet recording] You are talking about imposing sanctions. I want to remind you that a European procedure is in progress. It was set in motion 1 month ago. A certain number of decisions on immediate implementation were taken then and I can confirm that, as far as France is concerned, these have been carried out. For example, the reintroduction of visas, the reduction of embassy staff numbers, the nondelivery of military supplies. All these are being implemented. It was agreed that at our meeting in Naples on the 17th we would introduce a certain number of measures of an economic character if significant progress for the liberation of the hostages was not recorded before that date. Well, we shall see in Naples, among the Nine, if significant progress has been made. If not, the reply appears to me to be foreseeable, but I would not prejudge what the Nine will decide. It will be what we envisaged and decided to do. [end recording]

SALE OF BUTTER TO USSR REFUSED BY COMMISSION

LD161556 Brussels in French to Africa 1500 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] It has been disclosed in Brussels that the European Commission has just refused the sale of 25,000 tons of butter to the USSR, butter from the EEC's community stock. The commission has in fact rejected all offers made this week by European exporters wishing to sell old European butter to the USSR. This is the commission's response to the embargo campaign launched by President Carter.

STATE TREATY CELEBRATION MARKED BY SPEECHES, MEETINGS

AU161005 [Editorial Report] Vienna Domestic Service in German at 1000 GMT, 16 May, in its news headlines, announces that Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko arrived in Vienna "a few minutes ago" and is scheduled to have talks with Secretary of State Muskie "this afternoon."

Hofburg Palace Ceremony

[AZ report: "Solemn Official Ceremony at Hofburg Palace; Kirchschlaeger Praises Cooperation"]

[Summary] Vienna (AZ)--At the official State Treaty anniversary ceremony held at Hofburg Palace on 15 May, President Kirchschlaeger described the Austrian State Treaty as a joint success of all Austrians who contributed to it. He stressed the country's achievements since 1955 that have made Austria more prosperous than ever before, attributing them to the efforts of all Austrians and to the continued cooperation of the politically relevant forces even after the end of the grand coalition. "The presence of the foreign ministers of the neighbor countries at the anniversary ceremonies shows that Austria's permanent neutrality serves the interests of these states and, moreover, also the interest of some non-European countries, he declared. It is our duty to contribute again to the process of detente, the president said, and combined his greetings to all peoples of the world with the hope that peace be preserved everywhere, and that it be achieved wherever it does not yet exist."

The official ceremony was opened by Chancellor Kreisky, who greeted the prominent guests, including the former British and French foreign ministers McMillan and Pinay who had signed the treaty 25 years ago. Former Vice Chancellor Bock gave an extensive outline of the developments that led to the conclusion of the State Treaty and expressed appreciation for the U.S. economic aid to Austria after the war without which, he said, it would have been vastly more difficult for the Austrian economy to get back on its feet. A historical review covering the period from the Allied declaration on Austria in 1943 to the signing of the State Treaty was presented by historian Professor Stourzh. He noted that while the day of the actual signing of the State Treaty was with good reason a day of joy for all Austrians, the originally envisaged terms of the treaty up to 1949 were so hard that the then President Renner wanted to proclaim the day of the treaty conclusion as a day of national mourning.

16 May Anniversary Ceremony

AU161355 [Editorial Report] Vienna Domestic Television Service in German at 1030 GMT on 16 May begins a live color relay of the Austrian State Treaty anniversary celebration from Vienna's Belvedere Palace. The relay opens with a picture of the palace, then the camera sweeps the hall where the celebration is about to open, showing a rostrum with microphones, the Austrian flag and the historic table at which the foreign ministers signed the State Treaty in 1955. The current foreign ministers of the four powers can be seen sitting at the front of the audience with Chancellor Kreisky: Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, French Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet, British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington and U.S. Secretary of State Muskie.

At 1031 GMT Chancellor Kreisky takes the floor. In his address Kreisky greets the guests, mentioning the more prominent ones individually by name, and then traces the history and stresses the importance of the Austrian State Treaty as the first major sign of detente in the world.

Kreisky expresses his anxiety over the present increased frictions in the world and stresses his hope that a relaxation of tension will soon return in the world, inviting the foreign ministers to take advantage of their presence in Vienna to establish renewed contacts with a view to promoting detente. At 1045 Gromyko takes the rostrum. Gromyko's speech ends at 1055 GMT.

Francois-Poncet speaks from 1056-1100 GMT. He is followed by Lord Carrington, who speaks from 1107-1116 GMT.

Following the speeches by the foreign ministers of the four powers, Austrian Science Minister Hertha Firnberg takes the floor and, after a few words, she unveils the memorial plaque commemorating the 25th anniversary of the Austrian State Treaty.

Following the Austrian national anthem at 1121 GMT, the audience is seen filing out of the hall, while the leading dignitaries move onto the balcony of the Belvedere Palace to greet the crowd below. Flashback pictures of the corre ponding scene in 1955 appear on the screen at this point, after which the live relay ends at 1127 GMT.

Francois-Poncet Cites Lessons From Treaty

AU161545 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1101 GMT 16 May 80

[Speech by French Foreign Minister Francois Poncet at the Austrian State Treaty anniversary celebration at Vienna's Belvedere Palace on 16 May--live, in French with German translation superimposed]

[Text] Mr President of the republic, Mr Federal Chancellor, mesdames and messrs ministers, Mr Secretary General of the United Nations, ladies and gentlemen: The event we are commemorating today does not only belong to history, it is an example for the future, an example of what the wisdom of the powers can achieve--as well as the desire of a people to exist--if these meet in the service of justice and peace.

As a representative of one of the four states to whom we owe this meeting, I think with pride of the hour when justice was done to an ancient nation, a courageous and worthy nation. On behalf of France I welcome the State Treaty and the renaissance of a sovereign people. I welcome the victory of freedom and the law over the violence inflicted on Austria 17 years earlier.

Austria's pleasure with the events of 15 May 1955 has erased the years of grief and has marked the desire for life of a proud and free people. Under the authority of enlightened statesmen to whom great honor is being shown today, Austria has again found its destination and its role. From the statute it has given itself it has derived a strength and power that enables it to conduct an active diplomacy.

It has made itself the herald of new and generous ideas which serve the progress and peace of the international community. It lets resound its original voice for the defense of this cause and ever since that time its name has been linked with dialogue, development and conciliation.

But the State Treaty has not only restored Austria's sovereignty. In the present world and at a moment when the worried peoples are asking questions it also constitutes a lesson and reason for further hope. The nations aspire to a world that is safer, more in solidarity and more responsible. The message that the State Treaty conveys to us is clear: By putting an end to a military occupation that was no longer justified, by choosing to come to an understanding instead of opposing each other, by restoring rights to a nation which has a deep sense of identity, the four powers made a decision from which all of Europe has benefited and of which they themselves cannot but speak with pride.

The festivities organized by the Austrian Government is eloquent proof of this. This lesson was given in Europe 25 years ago. The events we are witnessing today show that it has lost nothing of its topicality and value. More than ever, it is by understanding and not by force, by respect for rights and for national independence, by the shared awareness of the fact that peace is in the interest of all nations, to begin with the superpowers, that the dangers will be warded off, that security will be maintained and that the progress of man will be assured.

These principles are simple. They are rooted in universal consciousness. By reaffirming them today we are conveying full significance to the event that unites us today not only as the commemoration of a great anniversary but also as an act of hope and faith in the future. [applause]

Lord Carrington Address

AU161520 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1101 GMT 16 May 80

[Speech by British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Lord Carrington at the Austrian State Treaty anniversary celebration at Belvedere Palace in Vienna on 16 May--live, in English with German translation superimposed]

[Text] Mr President, Mr Chancellor, your excellencies, ladies and gentlemen: I was honored to be able to accept the Austrian Government's invitation to represent Britain at this celebration of the signing of the Austrian State Treaty 25 years ago. And I think it is also a pleasure for his Austrian hosts as well as for me to have with me today Mr Harold McMillan, whose prestige and achievements grow larger as the years go by [applause] and who signed the treaty on behalf of Britain in 1955. There are those of us, perhaps alas a decreasing number, who remember only too well the 6 years of the Second World War, the devastation in Europe, the refugees, the economic chaos, the human misery and the poverty that arose out of that conflict.

I would have been astonished 35 years ago as a soldier had I been told of the success of Europe in rehabilitating herself, of the way in which the countries most cruelly ravaged by the war, damaged politically, economically and socially, survived and increased their prosperity and well-being. And perhaps the best example of that is Austria. It emerges as one of the great success stories of modern history. Nobody who has been in this country and has seen what has been achieved over the last 25 years can but admire the spirit and dedication of the Austrian people.

The State Treaty signatory countries look back today in satisfaction on their part in the creation of an Austrian state which is numbered among the most stable and prosperous countries in Europe today.

The period between 1945 and 1955, when the State Treaty negotiations were taking place, was a time of tensions in Europe. In 1980 we are living in dangerous times. The continuation of tension between East and West and the buildup of armaments continue to dominate modern Europe. The concern of the British Government, which I know we share with our Austrian colleagues, is to create a Europe in which we can all achieve social and economic advance in the spirit of peace and genuine cooperation for the benefit of our peoples collectively and individually.

The anniversary of the signing of the State Treaty is a timely reminder of the fruits that firm and purposeful negotiations can bring and there are lessons for us to be drawn for the present and for the future. The four powers which occupied the lands of the Third Reich after the last war, despite all their differences, after years of negotiations left behind a free Austria that has stood the test of time and that has played an important part in modern Europe. Austria's very position as a neutral country in the heart of Central Europe gives it significance and importance. Vienna's history as one of the major administrative and diplomatic focal points of Central Europe has enabled Austrian diplomacy to seek to promote the relaxation of tensions at the barriers which so unhappily divide Europe. The traditions inherited from the Congress of Vienna have been updated to facilitate and safeguard international relations in the increasingly complex world of modern diplomacy.

Austria exerts an influence far beyond its frontiers in all aspects of international relations, and it is no accident that Vienna has become the third United Nations city of the world. It is no accident that the secretary of the United Nations, Dr Waldheim, and also the secretary general of the Council of Europe, Dr Karasek, are both highly distinguished Austrians in the field of international diplomacy.

We shall also not forget Austria's willingness to help in practical terms when possible. This has been amply demonstrated by the contribution of the Austrian Armed Forces toward peacekeeping in Cyprus and in the Middle East. All these contributions did not go unnoticed, and the world at large is grateful for the efforts and commitments of Austria today.

Therefore, Austria's postwar history shows what benefits can be derived from a successful well-negotiated settlement if the circumstances are right. When the new independent Austria was born 25 years ago, many Austrians must have wondered, remembering the problems of the First Republic between the two world wars, whether their country could avoid again following the same road. But even the shortest visit to Austria makes clear that her people have worked for the prosperity and stability of their new state with a rare will--this together with moderate and farsighted governments which have led Austria safely into its silver jubilee year.

Much has been achieved in that eventful quarter of a century, and on behalf of the British Government and whole of the British people I wish Austria and her president, her government and her people continuing peace, progress and prosperity in the years that are ahead. [applause]

Genscher-Gromyko Meeting

LD161900 Hamburg DPA in German 1837 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] Vienna--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher is meeting his Soviet counterpart, Andrey Gromyko, at the USSR's Vienna Embassy for an exchange of views. Earlier, Gromyko had held a 3-hour talk with U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie at the Hofburg Palace. The Genscher-Gromyko talk is scheduled to last 90 minutes. Subsequently, the Soviet foreign minister is to meet U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim.

The German aide has said that subjects to be discussed by Genscher and Gromyko will be East-West detente, Afghanistan and the whole area concerning arms. Genscher would be putting forward Bonn's position clearly on all these points and would be expecting certain new impulses. It is expected that the two ministers will also discuss the planned Moscow trip by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

Genscher Comment

LD162214 Hamburg DPA in German 2119 GMT 16 May 80

[Excerpt] Vienna--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Soviet opposite number Andrey Gromyko discussed international problems for 2 hours on Friday evening in Vienna. Genscher emphasized subsequently to journalists that the talk had been "unservedly useful" and that both sides had tried to be "constructive." Naturally, there were still differing positions. Genscher mentioned arms limitation and the situation in Iran and Afghanistan as the main subjects. A date for the trips by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to Moscow had not yet been set. The federal foreign minister indicated that dates would be proposed to the Soviet side only after the EC summit in Venice at the end of June. The resolution of the FRG's National Olympic Committee to boycott the Olympic games was, according to Genscher, accepted by Gromyko "calmly" and would have no bearing on the chancellor's invitation to visit Moscow.

Genscher returned to the Federal Republic by air tonight.

Interview With Genscher

DW190918 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2030 GMT 16 May 80

[Reporter Pelletier interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Vienna--recorded]

[Text] [Question] You talked to your colleague Gromyko for 1 1/2 hours. Is that time sufficient, minus what the interpreter needs, to discuss all the problems that are in the air between Bonn and Moscow?

[Answer] I would like to say primarily that we had a useful talk--as both sides stated--which was held very constructively, but which naturally also demonstrated that different opinions exist on important problems. But the will existed to develop mutual relations in a good way. We have pointed out our position on the need to find a political solution to international problems. There will be an opportunity on the occasion of our visit to Moscow to discuss all problems more thoroughly and more broadly. This meeting in Vienna on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the conclusion of the Austrian State Treaty has most certainly demonstrated the will of the West and the East not to have the dialogue disrupted. This explains the great number of talks that have been held here.

[Question] You supplied the key phrase "visit to Moscow." Has a date been discussed? Have preparations been made?

[Answer] Naturally the visit was discussed and also the issues which will probably be discussed in the course of the visit. We will still have to decide on the date of the visit.

[Question] Do you have the impression that it might produce something for the German side?

[Answer] I think that in the present situation one must consider the value of every meeting by the will to exchange opinions on the difficult international developments and relations. One should not burden meetings and visits with expectations which might be exaggerated.

[Question] Did the Soviet side touch on the German Olympic Committee's refusal to take part in the Olympics?

[Answer] We discussed that also.

[Question] And what was the reaction?

[Answer] We discussed it and we have outlined our opinions.

[Question] Was the signal from Kabul discussed at length today?

[Answer] We discussed the suggestions made around the world with regard to a solution of the difficult Afghanistan crisis. The Soviet foreign minister pointed out his opinions, I pointed out our opinions which are based--as is known--on the suggestions made by the European Community's foreign ministers on 19 February 1980 in Rome.

[Question] In short: some rapprochement?

[Answer] That would have been an exaggerated expectation with regard to such a talk. I believe that the exchange of opinion was not merely an exchange of opinion between the German foreign minister and the Soviet foreign minister, but that many talks have their value and will certainly contribute to a clarification of positions, which is always a prerequisite for political solutions.

Gromyko-Muskie Talks Concluded

AU161923 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1900 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] The foreign ministers of the Soviet Union and of the United States, Gromyko and Muskie, concluded their talks in Vienna's Hofburg Castle scarcely 1 hour ago. Muskie made a short statement to the representatives of the press in which he termed the conversation a long, serious discussion. The U.S. minister gave no details but said that he first must report to President Carter. Gromyko will still meet tonight with UN Secretary Waldheim at the Soviet Embassy.

Colombo, Gromyko Exchange Views

AU171556 Rome ANSA in English 1520 GMT 17 May 80

[Excerpt] Vienna, May 17 (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, duty chairman of the European Economic Community Council of Ministers, met this morning in Vienna with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko for a one-hour discussion of bilateral and international issues, including Afghanistan. At the end of the encounter, which took place in the Soviet Embassy here, Colombo declared that, "As regards the Soviets, there was a reiteration of the ideas which we already know". The Italian diplomatic chief disclosed that Gromyko appeared absolutely intransigent in the face of the criticism voiced by the West against Soviet policy on the international front. The two foreign ministers also undertook an assessment of bilateral relations and agreed on the need to strengthen these ties. Colombo noted, however, that "the fact that these relations are influenced by the international situation, which compromises detente and jeopardizes world stability and peace, must not be underestimated".

Immediately after the encounter, the Italian foreign minister departed for Naples to chair today's EEC foreign ministers' informal meeting scheduled to discuss the application of sanctions against Iran drafted in April and the problem of Great Britain's contribution to the Community budget.

SFRY's Vrhovec on Minority Problem

AU1616719 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 16 May 80 p 2

[Unattributed report: "Vrhovec Appreciates Minority Dialogue"]

[Excerpt] On the periphery of the State Treaty anniversary celebrations, Yugoslavia's Foreign Minister Vrhovec has seized the opportunity to promote the "important dialogue" about the minority issue. He declared after his arrival on 14 May that his country was particularly interested in article seven [of the Austrian State Treaty, stipulating the rights of the Slovene and Croatian minorities in Austria]. "We are strongly interested in the Slovene and Croatian minorities--your citizens, who are living in your country--being a solid bridge between our peoples." Belgrade, he said, appreciates the Vienna government's readiness to fulfill all its obligations vis-a-vis the minorities on the basis of the State Treaty. In this context the minister stressed "with satisfaction" that the bilateral relations are "in a remarkable upswing." Through these relations the nonaligned Yugoslavia and neutral Austria are making a "substantial contribution to the implementation of the Helsinki Final Act," he said.

PAHR ADDRESSES NATIONALRAT ON FOREIGN POLICY ISSUES

[Unattributed report on Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr statements at a Nationalrat Foreign Policy Committee session on 15 May]

[Excerpts] In reply to an opposition question, Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr declared in the Nationalrat Foreign Policy Committee session that the FRG chancellor's recent reference to Austria as a "nonaligned country" was a slip of the tongue. Pahr again rejected the charge of the opposition that the three parties represented in the Nationalrat were not timely informed about Austria's recognition of the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO). Pahr declared that this topic was discussed at the Foreign Policy Council session on 6 September 1979. The minister reiterated the government's position that the PLO was not recognized as a state but as a representative of the Palestinian people. Regarding the occupation of the Libyan Embassy in Vienna Pahr declared that as far as the Austrian Government is concerned, the mission chief accredited in Vienna continues to be Libya's representative. If a new representative is nominated, this must be done in accordance with the Vienna diplomatic convention, he said. In reply to another question by the opposition, Pahr declared that the Austrian Government is not going to make any proposals for meetings among the guests at the State Treaty celebrations. "We are providing the opportunity for meetings and hope that it will be used, but we will not take any initiatives regarding such contacts," Pahr declared.

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES MOSCOW TRIP, EAST-WEST RELATIONS

On Timing of Moscow Visit

LD171440 Hamburg DPA in German 1338 GMT 17 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher may decide about proposals for a date for their forthcoming visit to the Soviet Union as early as next week. Genscher said in an interview for Radio Free Berlin today that he does not rule out the possibility that decisions will be taken next week about the date for a visit by Foreign Ministry State Secretary Guenter van Well to Moscow to prepare for the visit. Genscher said that thay can naturally discuss only proposals about dates put forward by the German side. He announced that he will discuss his recent meetings with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko and Western foreign ministers with the federal chancellor next week.

According to Genscher his and the chancellor's visit to Moscow can certainly not take place before the world economic summit conference in Venice nor before the meeting of the NATO Council of Ministers in Ankara at the end of June. He said that it is possible that the visit to Moscow could take place before the start of the Olympic games.

Genscher said he has the "firm impression" that the Soviet side is still interested in a visit to Moscow by Schmidt and Genscher even after the decision of the German National Olympic Committee not to take part in the Moscow games.

On Need for East-West Talks

LD181318 Hamburg DPA in German 1246 GMT 18 May 80

[Text] Bonn--In an interview on Second German Television Foreign Minister Genscher said on Sunday evening that it became quite plain in Vienna that not only the West but also the East is not seeking to disrupt the dialogue. The objective now is for talks such as were held in Vienna to be followed by substantial negotiations.

The NATO countries once more expressed in Brussels last Wednesday that the Western defense alliance stands by its disarmament and arms control proposals of last December. The EC foreign ministers have made proposals for solving the Afghanistan crisis. Resolutions by the Warsaw Pact have also been put forth. Now one has to carefully analyze where points of contact concerning the various positions exist and where approaches can be made, Genscher said.

He also advocated seeking talks in a difficult international situation even at the risk of not achieving substantial results. To refuse the possibility of talks is irreconcilable with the responsibility "which we share for safeguarding peace in Europe and the world," the minister said.

BOELLING ON RELATIONS WITH USSR AFTER NOC DECISION

LD161730 Hamburg DPA in German 1700 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] Bonn--According to Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling and following the decision not to take part in the summer Olympic games in Moscow, FRG-Soviet relations will remain an "important element of European cooperation" and one of "the most important elements of the policy of detente."

This view was emphasized by Boelling in an interview with tomorrow's edition of HAMBURGER ABENDBLATT when he was asked whether the Federal Government, after the decision not to take part in the summer games, was expecting a deterioration in relations with Moscow.

Boelling added that it was important "not to lose sight of the right dimensions." Bonn would honor contracts agreed with the Soviet Union. In intra-German relations, too, there existed the need for the two German governments to work for a lessening of tension in the acute international situation.

Regarding the planned Moscow trip by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Boelling said that its purpose was to revive the willingness and the ability to hold a dialogue between the two great powers and the two alliance systems.

The text of the interview was prereleased by the Federal Press Office to DPA.

TELEVISION SERVICE TO CARRY 'ALTERNATIVE' SPORTS PROGRAM

ID161116 Hamburg DPA in German 1005 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] Mainz--The Second German Television Service (ZDF) will not cover the Moscow Olympics in the manner originally planned together with the First Television Program (ARD). ZDF Director von Hase said here today that, following the boycott decision by the German National Olympic Committee, a "fully adequate alternative program" taking account of sports events within the framework of current features would be presented. If necessary, sports events from Moscow could be added to the program.

The final decision concerning the format and extent of the alternative program within the overall framework would be taken, Hase said, when it was certain what the form and size of the Moscow games would be, probably at the beginning of June. As a matter of principle, broadcasts of purely ceremonial events from Moscow were not envisaged.

PAPERS VIEW EC BOYCOTT MEASURES AGAINST IRAN

DW190930 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 19 May 80

[Press review]

[Text] In Naples yesterday the nine EC foreign ministers agreed that the Community's sanctions against Iran as a reply to the hostage affair will take effect next Thursday. The exception to this embargo, however are all contracts concluded prior to 4 November last year, the date when the hostages were taken.

In this connection the Bielefeld WESTFALENBLATT writes: The trumpet sound from Naples that the European Community will impose sanctions against Iran without delay, came unanimously. At long last a demonstration of cohesion and solidarity with the United States? Far from it. The very next passage of the communique already abounds with preconditions, restrictions, margins of free judgment for the individual EC countries so that it will remain entirely useless. Not only was the timing for the sanctions much too late; the excessively careful formulations were also wrapped up in thick cotton. The laboriously patched-up compromises and the kid-glove policy through which the potential lifting of these decisions is indicated are bound to elicit but a strained smile from the puppets of Khomeyni.

The MAINZ ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG stresses this point: The decisions of the European Community adopted in Naples will not cause a man like Ayatollah Khomeyni any sleepless nights. More out of obedience to the urging by big brother United States than by its own volition the EC, which is not at all agreed on the expediency of sanctions, mustered the strength for half-hearted action. Meanwhile, the fate of the U.S. hostages is more uncertain than ever.

Discussing the sanctions against Iran BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG arrives at the following consideration: Their most important objective, though not expressly mentioned, is to prevent an escalation of the conflict or, more specifically, a military clash. Since the patience so far shown by the United States has been to no avail, the United States, in the event of an absence of any support or of any other pressure, sooner or later would be urged into a military operation which would then probably assume a greater dimension than the fatal commando venture and whose consequences would be unpredictable, also for us Europeans.

COMMENTATOR CRITICIZES AFGHANISTAN SUGGESTIONS

DW161122 Bonn DIE WELT in German 16 May 80 p 6

[Article signed Kie: "Maneuvers in Kabul"]

[Text] The suggestions of the Kabul puppet regime for solving the Afghanistan crisis contain a remarkable portion of the comic element of obvious propaganda maneuvers. It says, with an innocent look in its eye, that first of all the states of Iran, Pakistan and Afghanistan which border each other "should stop all hostile actions among themselves." Among themselves? The Soviet suppression of the Islamic rebels in Afghanistan is also a one-sided frontal attack on the world of Muslim states; it has been recognized as such by the Islamic countries and was clearly condemned in February. Considering political "hostility" vis-a-vis the Soviet aggression as something similar to that aggression itself is thus an act of singular mendacity. The same pertains to the second part of the Kabul suggestion: a guarantee of independence for Afghanistan by the big powers. The United States is first supposed to commit itself to stop all "undermining activities" of third countries.

Again the same trick: The attack on Afghanistan is put on the same level as the defensive reactions. U.S. Secretary of State Muskie did not need long to see through all this. Upon his arrival in Vienna he termed the suggestions "illusory, ambiguous and meaningless." The event also demonstrates what the real chances are for settling the Afghanistan problem.

WEINSTEIN CRITICIZES NATO 'INACTIVITY' AT BRUSSELS SESSION

[Adelbert Weinstein editorial: "Sleeping NATO"]

[Text] NATO stands still. Nothing has acutally happened at the spring conference in Brussels. There was assurance that what has been announced three times by the alliance will be undertaken: an increase of expenditures for security amounting to 3 percent annually in real terms. The decision was originally made at the Washington NATO conference. Since then it has been on the agenda of every Atlantic session as an important point. The Allies have always acknowledged that commitment. But these were words. At this conference in May there was pathetic agreement. Nothing has happened, however.

The Allies seem to have become so dulled that nothing excites them any more. Neither the assessment of the Soviet military strength, outlined by the retiring chairman of NATO's Military Commission (MC), General Gundersen, nor the pressure of the American partner to achieve the aims of the armed forces faster because the situation demands it seem to impress the alliance. Gundersen summarized the conclusions of Western intelligence services with regard to the Soviet arms increase. He pointed out the connection between the military concentration of power and the foreign political aggressiveness of the Soviets. But the extent of Soviet military strength seems to be asking too much of the imagination.

The pressure by the Americans in the direction of quick implementation of effective countermeasures was therefore a stab in the air. The U.S. secretary of defense entered this conference with great plans. The Allies were supposed to state their preparedness to free those forces from their NATO commitment which need to be kept back in the United States as a strategic reserve for the hotbed of crises in the Middle East. The European partners were supposed to make their own reserve units and the corresponding materiel available. They agreed to the first demand as if it were the most natural thing in the world. However, the agreement will have decisive consequences for the Atlantic strategy. America is now setting up the "second front." In order to do that it needs troops. The required decisions will necessarily cause one to deviate from the policy pursued so far. The concentration of American naval units in the Indian Ocean demands that units of the U.S. 2nd Fleet in Norfolk and ships of the 6th Fleet in the Mediterranean be moved to the new strategic zone. NATO's renunciation of strategic reserves of U.S. ground forces means, however, that in case of a crisis the Europeans will find that a whole American corps is missing.

What can Europe offer as a replacement? Granted, there are all kinds of defense plans. But they are only facades. At every NATO conference an alliance national defense minister sells as an additional service what he had termed at an earlier session a special achievement. Also he inclination to view defense policy from fiscal and not strategic aspects is on the increase. The Federal Republic is no exception here. We are neither prepared to step up our armament, nor do we want to add burdens to the military budget. What has been planned is supposed to take place in an inflexible way, regardless of whether the situation has changed due to Afghanistan.

The Hardhoehe [FRG Defense Ministry] formula says that the money can be spent just once. The "second front" of the Americans cannot overthrow such dogmas either. The Bundeswehr may be in a position to set up three reserve brigades by 1985 which could be incorporated into NATO. Among the others there is an absolute military ebb tide. The casualness with which those responsible in Brussels have accepted this development is baffling.

The fact that the issue of modernizing the tactical nuclear arsenal did not matter at all is also surprising with regard to this NATO conference. In the December session the alliance threatened to fall apart because numerous smaller partners objected to introducing those arms into NATO which would face the danger of the Russian SS-20 missiles. The strategic situation has not changed in the meantime. The resistance of the small partners remained. The situation has even aggravated because the Soviets continue to build the SS-20 at a regular pace. In addition, they are not removing the antiquated arms systems. The West has nothing comparable to match it. But a continuation of the modernization debate did not take place.

Then there are the verbose statements addressed to Tehran and Moscow. Why should the Iranians take NATO's reminder seriously that the hostages should be set free immediately? What common will stands behind this formula? The Soviets cannot be impressed by the categorical demand of NATO that the Russian troops should leave Afghanistan. The political temporizing attitude of the alliance gives the Soviets the strategic opportunity to use time as an element of policy. Highly armed and continuing to arm unconditionally, and therefore politically flexible, the Russians can wait. The Atlantic inactivity in Brussels was a poor beginning for Vienna.

COMMENTATOR SEES NEED FOR CREDIBLE NATO ACTION

DW161222 Bonn DIE WELT in German 16 May 80 p 6

[Wolfram von Raven editorial: "When the Warning Evaporates"]

[Text] Can the West expect the East to react positively in due time to the varied NATO suggestions with regard to arms limitation? Isn't it more likely that the entreating appeal by NATO's foreign and defense ministers voiced in the communique of the Brussels conference to the Kremlin will have been preached to deaf ears again?

He who views the state of East-West relations in the arms race soberly will not be able to foster hope. Reality, at any rate, contradicts the wish to join the threat of East-West relations again at exactly the spot where it was disrupted by the Afghanistan crisis. That with this aggression the Soviet adversary has gone beyond the limits of his current imperium entails not merely a threat for European and American oil supplies; it is generally a very striking evidence of the expansionist character of the communist world power.

Only from such a realization stems a logical answer to the question of why the Warsaw Pact, particularly in the last decade, has stepped up armament although the North Atlantic pact tended toward disarmament. The report demonstrates, on the basis of carefully collected data and figures--presented by Gen Herman Zeiner Gundersen to the Allies--the contrasting Eastern program to the Western policy pursued in the past decade. Instead of arming only for static defense--as the West assumed with dogged benevolence--the East increased its military abilities in line with the political concept of dynamic offensive. Negotiations and agreements were not able to slow down developments which threatened the balance. The effects of these negotiations and agreements are even partly responsible for advance concessions by NATO powers which the adversary naturally did not respond to with concessions on his part, but which--as for instance in the cases of neutron arms and the B-1 bomber--he cashed in as mere gifts.

Under these conditions what chances do the arms limitation projects have which have been discussed for years between West and East?

The SALT II agreement, which is supposed to curtail the growth of the long-range arms potential of both world powers, has become stuck in the process of ratification. It is doubtful whether it will ever get going again. Washington has taken it temporarily out of circulation, but just because of Moscow's current action but also because of the agreement's own shortcomings since the administration was worried it might not pass in the Senate. It must be considered rather uncertain as to whether the American-Soviet agreement can be reactivated in a year's time--after a new president, or the old president, has taken over.

The vague possibility of negotiations on a third SALT agreement, which is supposed to turn the West-East disparity in the field of medium-range arms into parity, therefore disappears into the fog of remoteness. The Soviet Union obviously does not have the freezing of its armament in this field in mind because it continues to assume that NATO will not manage to implement its decision to close the arms gap in 3 years. It should therefore be taken into consideration that the USSR will use its arms lead as a tool of pressure and threat to separate the alliance from the United States. The inclination of the alliance to dodge real or alleged risks with neutralist maneuvers seems to open up possibilities in this respect.

The plan to achieve parity in numerical strength of army units of both blocs has created some complications for the East in the meantime which it has overcome with some dodging--although with quite some effort. The refusal of the Eastern side to join in the so-called data discussion with the seriousness of the West, also with regard to troop reductions nobody can control, demonstrates sufficiently that the Kremlin tries to wear down the position of NATO with a mixture of unyielding intransigence and placative propaganda. The stable patience of a power that hardly has to take into consideration the influence of public opinion is being aimed at the unstable impatience of states which believe they owe their people quick results in efforts aimed at achieving detente.

This does not mean saying anything against the permanent campaigning with the help of which the Western alliance wants to reactivate talks with the East. This striving, however, can only be damaging if it mobilizes domestic political resistance against closing the arms gap.

It is therefore predictable that the strong words of the Brussels NATO conference communique promising acceleration and maybe even expansion of the 1978 arms programs will be followed by only weak action. But it is not enough for the Europeans to comply only with words to the pressure of the Americans while trying to dodge the actual fulfillment of their promises. In the interest of the security of all its members the alliance needs to close the arms gap in the conventional, naval and nuclear fields which will effectively offset the arms lead of the East. Chances for disarmament exist only if the West credibly demonstrates the alternative of increased armament.

BREZHNEV-GISCARD MEETING IN POLAND ANNOUNCED

Initial Refusal To Comment

LD161956 Hamburg DPA in German 1939 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] Paris--The French Government refused to comment on Friday on reports that Soviet head of state and party Leonid Brezhnev and France's President Valery Giscard d'Estaing will meet in Poland on Sunday. An Elysee Palace spokesman merely told DPA tonight that he knew of such reports. NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG had reported from Warsaw that Giscard and Brezhnev would be meeting at the invitation of Polish party leader Edward Gierek. Moscow journalists accompanying the Soviet head of state had booked their lodgings until Tuesday. The summit conference of the Warsaw Pact ended on Thursday.

[Text] The European partners of France were informed this morning at their meeting in Naples that President Valery Giscard d'Estaing will be meeting Leonid Brezhnev in Warsaw tomorrow morning. The news was given by our Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet to his fellow ministers just before he left Naples to return to Paris. Officially there have been no European reactions to the news. It is believed that President Giscard d'Estaing has personally notified President Carter, Chancellor Schmidt and Mrs Thatcher of his proposed meeting.

Francois-Poncet Leaves Naples Early

LD180929 Paris Domestic Service in French 0900 GMT 18 May 80

[Text] Minister of Foreign Affairs Jean Francois-Poncet has just left the European conference in Naples earlier than planned, in order to return to Paris this morning. His plans were to lunch with his colleagues of the nine European countries. It is believed that the minister's return to Paris may be connected with the Valery Giscard d'Estaing-Leonid Brezhnev meeting in Poland tomorrow. The meeting has still not been announced officially, but it is believed that the president of the republic could leave Paris for Warsaw by the end of the day.

[Text] The meeting between Valery Giscard d'Estaing, Leonid Brezhnev and Polish number one Edward Gierek is due to begin tonight at Wilanow Palace near Warsaw.

This was just confirmed at any rate by the Polish INTERPRESS agency. There is still no account in Paris--there is no official confirmation of the news. The president of the republic will stay at Wilanow Palace and a final communique--according to the Polish source--will be published at the close of the meeting.

Paris Radio Confirms Meeting

LD181630 Paris Domestic Service in French 1600 GMT 18 May 80

[Text] Here is an item of late news. It is now official: Presidents Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Leonid Brezhnev are both awaited this evening in Warsaw, on the invitation of the Polish leader, Edward Gierek. Official confirmation had already come from the Polish side and in Moscow it is stated that Leonid Brezhnev is already en route for Poland. In Paris it has just been confirmed that President Giscard d'Estaing is going to Poland this evening at the invitation of Edward Gierek in order to have talks with Leonid Brezhnev.

The POLISH PRESS AGENCY explains that this three-way summit will begin tomorrow morning near Warsaw. The talks are to be held in the Wilanow Palace and may be preceded by private talks this evening between Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Leonid Brezhnev. The president of France is expected to be back in Paris tomorrow evening in order to visit Lorraine to celebrate the sixth anniversary of his election to the Elysee.

In Warsaw it is thought that this Giscard-Brezhnev summit--this surprise summit--might be capable of breaking the impasse in East-West relations by making use of France's moderate position and Poland's mediation. The news of this summit meeting has been well received in Federal Germany. It is considered in Bonn that this initiative is favorable in the quest for East-West dialogue, a dialogue which the West Germans have always sought.

Giscard Departure

NC181614 Paris AFP in English 1610 GMT 18 May 80

[Text] Paris, May 18 (AFP)--French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing left Paris today for Poland where he will meet with Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev and Polish communist party chief Edward Gierek tomorrow, the Elysee Palace announced.

(At just about the same time, the Soviet news agency TASS also confirmed that a summit would be held among the French, Soviet and Polish leaders. But TASS did not announce the departure of Mr Brezhnev for Warsaw.)

Jacques Blot, Elysee Palace spokesman, said the talks (?would be) held at the Wilanow Palace south of Warsaw. Also participating in the talks will be French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet and his Soviet counterpart, Andrey Gromyko.

The talks will begin tomorrow morning and will be followed by a working lunch at the palace. The French president, who arrived in Warsaw at 6 p.m. local time (1600 GMT) aboard a Mystere-50 jet, will leave Warsaw tomorrow afternoon to attend a dinner tomorrow night at Saxon-Sion, northeastern France. The town's inhabitants are offering the dinner on the sixth anniversary of Mr Giscard d'Estaing's election as president.

The Elysee spokesman said in his announcement that before his departure for Poland, Mr Giscard d'Estaing sent messages to U.S. President Jimmy Carter and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. He also spoke with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt by telephone.

Summit Goals Viewed

LD181828 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 18 May 80

[Excerpts] It was learned officially only at 1800 that the Giscard-Brezhnev meeting will indeed take place. The French president arrived in Warsaw a short time ago, while Leonid Brezhnev and Andrey Gromyko are still expected in the Polish capital. An attempt to save detente, which is in peril, is seemingly the first objective of this summit meeting regardless of any reservations or serious differences between Paris and Moscow. Paris believes that the serious international crisis created by the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan will only be solved if the dialogue is kept open although with firmness being displayed in condemnation of the Soviet intervention.

In Warsaw our special correspondent Ralph Pinto comments: Valery Giscard d'Estaing went directly from the steps of the presidential Mystere aircraft into his limousine and drove off. The plane landed at the Warsaw military airfield at exactly 1800. Polish and French flags were flying. The arrival of Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev is now awaited but there will also be contacts with the Polish leader, Edward Gierek, who after all organized the Franco-Soviet meeting. There is pride in Warsaw at Gierek's role in the meeting. Regarding the Giscard-Brezhnev talks it is said that they will be informal because in these times of tension there is a need to talk, to maintain contacts, and it is in this that one sees again the main theme of French diplomacy: Namely, that at the most difficult times one must not cut bridges and resort to cold war tactics, or in other words, one must avoid the current policy of the United States.

[By Michel Leleu, chief diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Paris, May 18 (AFP)--The meeting between French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev is intended, an Elysee Palace presidential source said here today, to renew the dialogue between the two countries through a better understanding of their respective points of view.

The Elysee source said the meeting would be an informal session and not the usual summit conference preceded by intensive diplomatic preparations and followed by a communique.

According to the source, Poland took the initiative for the meeting. He said Polish leaders [word indistinct] that it was important that in the present situation the principal Soviet leaders should hold conversations with one of the top Western leaders. The Elysee source added that it was clear there is now no proper communication between East and West and the Warsaw talks are intended to remedy that situation.

The French president had become convinced, the source said, that there was no possibility of making progress in solving major world problems unless the views of both (?sides were) better known. The Soviet leaders do not appear to understand fully Western positions, the source added, and the West is not always completely aware of basic Soviet motives.

Mr Giscard d'Estaing will explain the French point of view, especially on the Afghanistan issue, the source said, and he will point out to the Soviet leader that the French position on those issues is firm. He will also give Mr Brezhnev a clear view of Western unity.

According to the source, France is only playing its proper role in seeking peace. Its political independence is justified when the liberty that position gives the country is used to lessen the menances that threaten the world, the source added. Progress toward peace, the Elysee Palace source said, cannot be made by seeking to divide the respective alliances. But as far as France is concerned, he said, that point is perfectly clear and will remain so. But, he added, it is useful to know better the mutual positions on the various issues. The source said that in going to Warsaw President Giscard d'Estaing was hopeful that his conversations there would help the search for peace.

MEXICAN PRESIDENT ARRIVES FOR 3-DAY VISIT

LD161132 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 16 May 80

[Excerpts] Jose Lopez Portillo, president of Mexico, arrived in Paris from Lisbon at the end of the morning. Mr Lopez Portillo will stay 3 days in France, before going to Germany, Sweden and Canada. On his arrival at Orly, Mr Lopez Portillo was received by Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

[Begin Giscard recording] In the present period of uncertainty and tension the states which are able to safeguard their national identity, while affirming their will for dialogue and cooperation, guarantee for themselves the best chance for the future. This is the case for Mexico as it is for France. I am glad, Mr President, to be able to pursue with you the reflections and the dialogue which we undertook in Mexico, convinced that the dangers of the present hour make them all the more useful. Inspired by the same principles, strengthened by the experience of a past which did not lack in trials, Mexico and France are natural partners in the struggle for peace, freedom and justice. It is to this task, Mr President, that we have devoted the resources of the fraternal friendship which links us and which unites our two peoples. [end recording]

'Private' Meetings With Giscard

LD161910 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] President Jose Lopez Portillo is ending his first day of his visit to France.

The Mexican president has already had two private meetings with Valery Giscard d'Estaing, lasting 2 and 1/2 hours in all. The first was the occasion for an expose by Jose Lopez Portillo on three important subjects: the situation in the Middle East, the situation in Central America, and energy questions. These three subjects were studied again at the second private meeting, at which the North-South dialogue, the problem of East-West relations and the eventual contributions of Mexico and France in the current context were also discussed.

The ministers accompanying the Mexican president have held their own meetings with their French counterparts.

Tonight, the French president is giving a dinner in honor of the Mexican head of state. Tomorrow, after a working breakfast with representatives of French business circles, Jose Lopez Portillo will receive an honorary doctor's diploma at the Sorbonne, will deliver a speech at the French National Institute, and will then have a third private meeting with Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

A press conference is scheduled for tomorrow at about 1900.

WALDHEIM, GISCARD DISCUSS IRAN, AFGHANISTAN

LD161417 Paris LE MONDE in French 16 May 80 p 3

[M.D. report: "UN Secretary General Could Take Initiative To Break Hostage Deadlock"]

[Text] Iran, Afghanistan, the Middle East, Chad and the revival of North-South dialogue were the main subjects raised during the talks which Waldheim had with Giscard d'Estaing Wednesday, 14 May.

The French Government and the secretary general will stay in contact on these various problems in relation to forthcoming events.

On the subject of Iran Mr Waldheim indicated when he left the Elysee that the talks had related to an "examination of the possibilities for overcoming the present difficulties." He also recalled that he had had talks with Iranian Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh at Tito's funeral in Belgrade.

These remarks seem to confirm reports from reliable sources that the secretary general could take a political initiative to break the deadlock. The main agent behind this initiative is apparently Adib ad-Dawudi, Syrian President al-Asad's political adviser. Mr ad-Dawudi was a member of the commission of inquiry formed in February under UN auspices to examine "the Iranian people's grievances" and which suspended its work because it could not carry it out as it had intended. Some people had hoped that this commission's conclusions could provide some currency to use in exchange for the hostages' release.

An initiative would certainly be welcomed by the Europeans who are preparing to decide on sanctions against Iran in Naples Saturday and want to "balance" the gesture. The main new measure would consist of suspending contracts which are less than two-thirds fulfilled.

In London Wednesday the Commons adopted the enabling legislation for sanctions; it passed by a big majority but many members of Parliament stayed away, thereby showing their disapproval.

In Brussels the foreign and defense minister of NATO integrated countries published a declaration in which they "appeal to the Iranian authorities for the immediate release of the U.S. hostages unharmed."

LE MONDE SKEPTICAL ON WORTH OF 'TACTICAL' AFGHAN PROPOSAL

LD161059 Paris LE MONDE in French 16 May 80 p 1

[Editorial: "A Tactical Move"]

[Text] On the eve of the U.S.-Soviet meeting in Vienna and the Islamic ministerial conference, the Kabul government, reported by Moscow, is again proposing the opening of preliminary negotiations with Iran and Pakistan with a view to a regional political settlement of the Afghan crisis.

This initiative contains two innovations compared with previous initiatives. First, the United States and the USSR would "take part" in the settlement, which they would have to guarantee; second, and most importantly, the proposal mentions for the first time "the problem of withdrawing the limited contingent" of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. In all the talks they have had so far both with the Western powers and nonaligned representatives, the Soviets have refused to provide any assurance as to a possible withdrawal of their forces. Although the question of a "timetable" was mentioned by Kabul radio, it does not feature expressly in the new proposal.

This proposal--and it is here where the shoe pinches--implies the recognition of the Karmal government installed violently in Kabul at the end of December by the Red Army. It is difficult to see how the Iranians, Pakistanis and Americans could make this gesture in present circumstances. Tehran and Islamabad have not only hitherto refused to do so but supported the resolutions adopted by the extraordinary Islamic conference which in January expelled communist Afghanistan from its ranks and at the same time uttered an extremely strong condemnation of the Soviet invasion.

It is probably to take some of the sting out of new criticisms from the Islamic countries that Kabul--which is requesting reintegration into the Islamic family--and Moscow have taken the initiative. Their proposals are in keeping with the Soviet argument that the USSR's troops are only in Afghanistan as a result of "foreign interference" and not because of a widespread Islamic people's insurrection against a communist regime.

The Soviet-Afghan proposal, which is largely tactical, also reflects growing Soviet anxiety at the spread of the rebellion, the fact that they are becoming bogged down in Afghanistan and the international consequences, especially in the Third World, of their military expedition. Moscow is taking another step toward a political settlement in order to more easily place responsibility for the crisis on Afghanistan's neighbors and the United States. However, the Kabul document still contains many unclear points. It only gives a very imprecise outline of the guarantees Washington and Moscow could provide. Of course, the question on which the Soviets place most emphasis is that of "noninterference" on which Mr Brezhnev made the withdrawal of Soviet forces dependent back in February. It is also not very probable that the Soviet Army might withdraw without Moscow having the assurance that no regime hostile to it will be installed in Kabul.

Following the logic of the Soviet-Afghan argument, the proposal makes no mention of the protagonists in the Kabul tragedy. How can any attempt at a settlement be initiated without those who have taken up arms being invited to the conference table?

As long as the Islamic liberation movements and the nationalists fighting inside the country are not regarded as valid interlocutors, is not any diplomatic initiative likely to be wasted effort?

MINISTER CHARRETIER REVIEWS VISIT TO ISRAEL

LD160855 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 May 80 p 6

[Unattributed report: "Mr Charretier Emphasizes the Israeli Government's 'Desire for Understanding and Dialogue'"]

[Text] Trade and Crafts Minister Charretier has stated that the visit which he paid to Jerusalem from 10 through 12 May "could only have positive consequences" for Franco-Israeli relations.

Mr Charretier, who was not entrusted with "any diplomatic mission," explained his optimism by the "cordial and friendly welcome" extended to him especially by Mr Begin, with whom he had a 45-minute "frank, in-depth" talk on 12 May. "This," he stated, "was an indication of a desire for understanding and for continuing dialogue despite any ups and downs."

The minister "clarified" the French Government's attitude to the Israeli-Arab conflict--which has been severely criticized in Israel, especially since the recognition of the Palestinians' right to self-determination--first to Mr Begin and later to Mr Peres during a meeting with the Labor opposition leader. He stated that he was impressed by his interlocutors' desire "to be heard and understood," adding that nonetheless no "request for a change in French policy" was made.

This visit--an "instance of France's friendship and solidarity" as emphasized in a verbal message from Mr Giscard d'Estaing--gave Mr Charretier an opportunity for discussing with his Israeli opposite number, Trade and Tourism Minister Pat, ways to increase cooperation between their ministries, especially in the crafts sphere.

Mr Charretier visited Israel to give a young Israeli artist, who restores ancient jewelry on the basis of archaeological excavations, a scholarship granted by Mr Bleustein-Blanchet's vocational foundation.

COSSIGA, SCHMIDT DISCUSS AFGHANISTAN, SALT, OTHER ISSUES

'Productive' Talks Cited by Spokesman

AU162003 Rome ANSA in English 1903 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 16 (ANSA)--The talks held last night and this morning by Italian Premier Francesco Cossiga and the visiting West German chancellor, Helmut Schmidt, were "productive, useful and satisfactory", according to a statement released this afternoon by an official spokesman. It was disclosed that the consultations between the two heads of government, held in the context of regularly-scheduled Italian-West German talks, ranged over bilateral issues and the current state of affairs within the European Economic Community to international issues, including the December Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

In connection with the movement underway to boycott the summer Olympic games in Moscow in response to the Soviet move into the neighboring state, Schmidt spoke of the West German Olympic Committee's decision reached yesterday to stay away from the event. The Bonn government recommendation to boycott the games was made on April 23. The stance of the Rome government on the issue is expected to be made public at the end of the Monday cabinet meeting. The Italian committee meeting is scheduled for May 20. After his meeting today with the Italian premier, the West German chancellor was the guest of honor at a dinner hosted by head of state Sandro Pertini at the presidential palace.

'Full Agreement' Noted by Schmidt

LD161652 Hamburg DPA in German 1540 GMT 16 May 80

[Excerpts] Rome--In his talks with Italian Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga in Rome yesterday and today, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt met with full agreement concerning his political course of Atlantic solidarity and endeavors at detente. "We have noted full agreement in all questions of principle," the chancellor said at a press conference at the end of the meeting. The meeting was also attended by the federal ministers for economics and finance, Otto Count Lambsdorff and Hans Matthoefer, who held talks with their opposite numbers.

The agreement applies also to two especially important questions of arms limitation--Schmidt and Cossiga deem it necessary for the SALT II agreement to come into effect soon. They are of the opinion that the NATO resolutions on modernizing nuclear medium-range missiles must be respected, but that West-East negotiations on the mutual limitation of medium-range missiles are just as necessary. Two future steps are necessary. The first is the need for a military balance in Europe, the second is cooperation between West and East as well as the continuation of the policy of detente between West and East. "One must talk to each other, not only within the two alliance systems, but also between the two alliance systems", Schimdt said. It was important that these talks also considered fully the views of the countries of the Third World, above all the nonaligned states.

Cossiga said that in the spirit the Afghanistan and Iran problems had been discussed. In the former case the Soviet military intervention had again been condemned, while in the latter, hope for an early solution to the hostage problem had been expressed. Schmidt and Cossiga also discussed the impending June summit meeting in Venice. It was learned from conference circles that the prospect of overcoming the EC internal squabble with Great Britain was not very good "at present." Cossiga and Schmidt also discussed the latest proposal by the Warsaw Pact states concerning a world peace conference. However, they declined to comment on the proposals before having examined them in detail.

LAGORIO STRESSES NEED FOR PRIOR KNOWLEDGE OF U.S. PLANS BY NATO

LD191029 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 13 May 80 p 16

[Arturo Barioli dispatch: "NATO Split Under Pressure of U.S. Demands"]

[Excerpt] Brussels--No Italian ships will be sent to the Indian Ocean: Our flag is where it should be. This was said yesterday by Defense Minister Lagorio, in answer to requests addressed to him in Rome by U.S. Defense Secretary Brown who wants ships from NATO countries to back the U.S. presence in the world's nerve center. In a conversation with Italian journalists following the meeting of the Eurogroup (defense ministers of the European NATO countries) Lagorio stressed that the Atlantic Alliance has a geographically well-defined area of obligation outside which it cannot intervene militarily. He also stressed the need for the NATO countries to have prior knowledge of U.S. plans: "In the absence not only of prior knowledge but also its own national independence." [sentence as published]

L'UNITA CALLS FOR CLARIFICATION OF MILITARY 'INITIATIVES'

[Unattributed commentary: "Secret Italian Commitments to United States?"]

[Text] Insistent hypotheses and inferences have been circulating concerning political and military undertakings which the Italian Government has allegedly made secretly to the United States. Ambiguous remarks and unclear references made by Prime Minister Cossiga and Christian Democratic Party [DC] representatives have once again raised some worrying questions in recent weeks. Furthermore, U.S. Defense Secretary Brown yesterday spoke in an interview granted to a Rome daily, in which he expressed U.S. appreciation for "several recent initiatives" on the Italian Government's part. Remarks made by NATO Secretary Luns seem to confirm that specific undertakings--outside NATO--have been made by certain countries, including Italy.

Has the time not come to throw light on this? What is happening? Such emphatic remarks from Washington's defense secretary, according to whom "Italy has proved to be among our strongest allies," cannot be explained solely by the Cossiga government's favorable attitude last December to the approval of the plan for the new Pershing-2 and cruise missiles. Is there something else? In which direction is Italy being led? In what operations is it being involved?

It is not a challenge to the Atlantic Alliance that is at issue here. It is the choice, within NATO, between an option for dialogue, observance of the alliance's geographical and political limits, the quest for negotiation in the current crises--and therefore a reassessment of Europe's role in this direction--and, on the other hand, the prospect of another blind arms race, and the acceptance of dangerous types of logic such as the continuous quest for positions of strength. The choice is between an active role, such as the one chosen by other European governments, and a subordinate position. This is no small matter at a time such as this, when mankind is walking on the brink of the abyss. This is why there must be a clarification. Is there an "American party" which has made undertakings and is ashamed to make them public? If so, let it be known that there is a "party of dialogue and of Europe" which is opposed to it, which is determined not to follow the path of stubborn confrontation in international relations. We are pleased to note [Italian Socialist Party Secretary] Craxi's statement supporting Schmidt's recent proposal to freeze a decision on the "Euromissiles." But we do not see these stances being given enough heed and consideration in the government's foreign policy line.

The voters have been warned. Under such conditions, it is not wise to vote for the DC.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE REPORTS DECISION TO GOVERNMENT

LD162128 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1830 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] The Portuguese Olympic Committee has already conveyed to Prime Minister Sa Carneiro its decision, made by a majority vote, to ignore the government's call for a boycott of the Moscow Olympic games. In a letter to the prime minister the the committee emphasizes that participation in any Olympic games does not mean acceptance of any specific ideology or political behavior, whatever it might be. The chairman of the Portuguese Olympic Committee has also forwarded to the minister of education and scientific investigation the text of the motion approved by the committee in which it is stated "that the safeguarding of the future of world sport necessarily requires support for the holding of all scheduled Olympic games." The Portuguese Olympic Committee further stresses its respect for the government's stand on this matter, a stand which, the document says, was adopted within the sphere of its own jurisdiction [words indistinct] the country's policies.

Approached by the PORTUGUESE NEWS AGENCY, ANOP, the minister of education and scientific investigation said that the government respects, on its part, the Olympic committee's decision to participate in the Moscow games although it should be noted, he said, that one could not now expect the government, which advised against the Portuguese athletes' presence in Moscow, to adopt an attitude different from the stand adopted vis-a-vis this matter on 7 May. He added that the implications of the Portuguese Olympic Committee's decision are going to be examined by the government, and that a reply is expected early next week. Minister Vitor Crespo refused to admit the possibility of the committee's stand being a political one, although he believed that only after a detailed study of the approved motion will he perhaps be in a better position to have a clearer idea of the reasons behind the committee's decision. Although Minister Crespo said that the government's reply is only expected to be known early next week, a well-informed source guaranteed that the government will not provide any kind of support for our athletes' trip to Moscow, which will entail refusing to grant any subsidies, no facilities on the part of their respective employers and none of the other arrangements customary in events of this nature. The government will pledge, on the other hand, to support for 2 years those athletes, including those belonging to the sporting federations in favor of our presence in Moscow, who state that they do not wish to take part in the Moscow Olympic games. This support basically will be translated into granting facilities necessary for their participation in games for their own categories to be held at the international level during the aforementioned 2-year period. DA COSTA ON NATO SESSION, REENTRY INTO NUCLEAR PLANNING GROUP

LD181432 Lisbon in Portuguese to Angola, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe 1200 GMT 18 May 80

[Text] Speaking upon his return from Brussels where he took part in the meeting of NATO defense ministers, Portuguese Defense Minister Amaro da Costa said that the government will not give up its efforts for defense to be viewed as a national, rather than just a strictly military problem. Among the decisions taken at the NATO meeting directly concerning Portugal, Amaro da Costa highlighted the acceptance of a project to reequip the Portuguese Navy with three antisubmarine frigates. This project, he said, falls within a wider framework of modernization of the Portuguese Navy and will enjoy the assistance of other NATO countries. Two of the three frigates are to be built in Portuguese shipyards. Minister Amaro da Costa announced, on the other hand, that Portugal will, from the next NATO meeting onward, be taking part in the NATO Nuclear Planning Group.

NORWAY, ICELAND CONCLUDE DRAFT AGREEMENT ON JAN MAYEN

LD160945 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 12 May 80 p 4

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report: "Norway Yields on Jan Mayen: Accepts Iceland's Zone Demands"]

[Excerpts] Norway gives its tacit acceptance to a full 200-mile Icelandic zone in the direction of Jan Mayen. Iceland will thus have control over the disputed area where the two countries' fishing zones overlap. This means, in practice, that Norwegian vessels will have to keep out of the area. Iceland gives its acceptance to a 200-mile zone round Jan Mayen apart from this. If the two nations cannot reach agreement on the total permitted capelin catch in the area, Iceland will alone be able to determine the size of the catch. But if the determined quota is considered completely unacceptable, Norway does not have to consider itself under any obligation to respect the quota. The Norwegian share of the total quota in the first 4 years, including 1980, will be 15 percent.

These are the main points in a draft agreement which Norway and Iceland reached as a solution to the problems over fishing and seabed resources around Jan Mayen. The draft was drawn up on Saturday afternoon after 3 days of talks in Oslo.

The draft agreement also proposes the establishment of a Norwegian-Icelandic fishery commission to be responsible for control of fishing. A three-man arbitration commission will also be appointed to work out proposals for a solution to the question of a demarcation line for the continental shelf around Jan Mayen as soon as possible. The draft also includes regulations which cover the enforcement of safety regulations designed to prevent pollution of the marine environment in connection with activities on the seabed.

The draft must now be presented to the Storting and the Althing. It is expected to be accepted in both countries. At a press conference after the last negotiating session, both Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund, Fisheries Minister Eivind Bolle and Icelandic Foreign Minister Olafur Johannesson admitted that they expected the draft to cause controversy in the fishermen's organizations in the two countries, but all three would now fight for the acceptance of the draft agreement.

"Both sides have gone as far as possible to reach this draft. We expect the Norwegian attitude to the draft to be clear in a few days," Foreign Minister Frydenlund said at the press conference on Saturday. He said that he realized that the draft would be criticized in Norway.

"The Norwegian Fishermen's Association and the Norwegian Seamen's Union have expressed reservations over the fishing arrangements, but as foreign minister I must consider the alternatives. I can see no alternative to the fact that it is in the interests of Norwegian fishermen to bring about cooperation rather than conflict with Iceland," Frydenlund said.

"Norway is no longer claiming the 25,000 square km area where the two countries' 200-mile fishing zones overlap. This means that Norwegian ships will have to keep out of the fishing grounds. The alternative would be to send Norwegian warships to the area, and it would be impossible to persuade any Norwegian Government to do this," Frydenlund stated.

He added that the solution proposed for the Jan Mayen region has no bearing on the solution to the question of a demarcation line in the Barents Sea. Frydenlund stressed that Iceland is in a special position as regards dependence on marine resources.

Both Frydenlund and Bolle stressed that foreign policy considerations played a large part in the evaluation of the draft agreement. But Frydenlund added that he did not think that the interests of Norwegian fishermen would be served by a conflict with Iceland. Bolle said that the main cause of complaint for those who criticize the draft are the fishing arrangements. Here it is the opinion of the fishermen's representatives that Norway has broken with its principles on fisheries policy by leaving the determination of the total permitted catch to Iceland alone.

Frydenlund said that the text that the two sides had reached through negotiation represents what is possible at present, when both have gone as far as they can.

Olafur Johannesson agreed with the judgments expressed by Frydenlund and Bolle. Together with Icelandic Fisheries Minister Steingrimut Hermansson, he would work to have the agreement accepted by the Icelandic Althing in the near future. It is of vital importance to the two sides. "We must bear in mind what the alternatives would be: Without an agreement, without controls the capelin stocks would be seriously endangered," he said.

Foreign Minister Frydenlund said that Norway would, to begin with, set up a fishing zone around Jan Mayen before 1 June. When a more detailed procedure has been worked out, there will be negotiations on a demarcation line between the two countries' continental shelves. It is intended that the Norwegian Government will send a letter to the Icelandic Government stating that Norway has no plans to set up an economic zone round Jan Mayen before the end of this year.

Frydenlund said that he had a general mandate from the Storting bodies to reach an agreement with Iceland and that Norway will take Iceland's vital interests into consideration.

Bolle said that, even if the fishermen are dissatisfied with the arrangements, both Norwegian and Icelandic fishermen have learned from their own experience what happens when the exploitation of resources is not controlled.

Frydenlund made it clear that negotiations on individual points in the draft are out of the question. "When I put it before the Storting bodies and the government, it is as a package." Johannesson said that the draft must be accepted or rejected in its entirety. He informed us that a member of the Icelandic delegation had expressed his reservations on the draft, but Icelandic sources have told NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA that the Althing is expected to accept the draft.

Fishermen's Association Opposition

LD161127 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 14 May 80 p 8

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report: "Jan Mayen Agreement Cannot Be Accepted"]

[Excerpt] The national committee of the Norwegian Fishermen's Association has requested in a unanimous resolution that Norwegian authorities do not accept the draft agreement with Iceland on the fisheries zone around Jan Mayen. In the opinion of the national committee Norway must instead establish a Norwegian zone around Jan Mayen and, once such a zone is established, enter into negotiations with Iceland and Denmark.

The Norwegian Fishermen's Association resolution claims that the draft agreement contravenes the principles which have been the basis for Norwegian dealings with other nations in similar matters, as regards both the equality of the parties concerned in border and zone questions and the basic criteria for the exploitation of fishery resources in the waters in question.

"The interpretation of the draft agreement must be that Norway is giving away part of the legitimate rights that the law on economic zones establishes for coastal states," the resolution asserts.

In the opinion of the Norwegian Fishermen's Association, the one-sidedness of the draft agreement has a wide-ranging effect on fishing interests and also weakens Norway's ability to protect its interests to a reasonable degree in the situation which will arise when Denmark sets up an economic zone off the coast of eastern Greenland.

Frydenlund Briefs Storting

LD161139 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 14 May 80 p 4

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA (NTB) report: "Storting Briefed"]

[Text] Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund gave a briefing on Tuesday to the Storting's foreign affairs bodies on the negotiations with Iceland that led to agreement between Norway and Iceland on a draft treaty.

According to information given to NTB there was almost unanimous support for the results that the foreign minister achieved during the negotiations, and there should therefore be no obstacles to Norway's signing an agreement with Iceland.

AFTENPOSTEN Editorial

LD160953 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 12 May 80 p 2

[Editorial: "The Jan Mayen Agreement"]

[Text] By the normal standards of diplomatic activity, with its demands for balance and mutual good sense, the weekend's new Norwegian-Icelandic Jan Mayen agreement seems to be one of diplomacy's monstrosities--a "sea monster," you might say. But when dealing with Iceland we must evidently accept the fact that the "normal" is no longer valid, and this mere fact means that, despite all reservations, we would recommend Norwegian acceptance of the agreement. The Icelanders have made use of their size, with great cleverness and excellent results, as a tool with which to blackmail Norway, since they have known all along that the alternative of "deploying Norwegian warships" was a political impossibility--a fact that Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund also stressed over the weekend.

Norway has accepted that Iceland's dependence on fishing is great--even if it is not as great as the Icelanders like to claim--and that Jan Mayen's significance for Norway is of a completely different order of magnitude. Norway has therefore granted the Icelanders nearly all the practical advantages to be gained from the treaty, at the same time as we have stretched a number of principles of international law, without abandoning them entirely. For this reason it is our opinion that the special agreement between Norway and Iceland cannot serve as a model for other countries--either Denmark and the EEC for the Greenland fishing zone, or for the Soviet Union for a possible demarcation line in the Barents Sea.

One prerequisite for Norway's ability to live with the new agreement is, however, that Iceland will be reasonable when putting into practice the clauses in the agreement which are open to varying interpretation: There ought to be, for instance, no question of Iceland's granting access to third-country ships to fish in that part of the gray zone between Iceland and Jan Mayen that Norway has now in practice given to the Icelanders.

The course of the Jan Mayen negotiations has given rise to growing doubts about the Icelanders' ability or willingness to see or take into consideration the internationalist political situation which events in Scandinavia affect: Every independent state must attach special importance to international political considerations, yet here the Icelanders have in practice said no and left Norway to look after these considerations. Foreign Minister Frydenlund has made no secret of the fact that foreign policy was the decisive factor in Norway's approach. The Norwegian Government could not afford a conflict with Iceland--must in an area where international tension is so great and where Norway--and Iceland ensure certain security interests.

Such considerations must also be the decisive factor when Norway's fishermen come to evaluate the agreement. It is not difficult to understand their objections from the exclusive viewpoint of fishing, but the fishermen--like other groups in the population --must subordinate their special interests to considerations of the national interest. The fishermen's spokesmen have a tendency to perform with a vociferousness which grows at the same rate as the fishing industry's economic importance for the nation withers --this branch of industry today represents a solitary 1 percent of Norwegian GNP.

The proposed agreement is better than no agreement, and it is an agreement with which Norway can live as long as our Icelandic neighbors show restraint in the practical implementation of the agreement's provisions.

Opposition Noted

LD160955 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 13 May 80 p 6

[Olav Tryggve Storvik report: "Mixed Reception for Jan Mayen Draft"]

[Text] There is opposition in both Norway and Iceland to the draft agreement on the fishing zone round Jan Mayen on which the negotiating delegations reached agreement over the weekend. In Norway, fishing organizations advise against ratification of the agreement, while reactions in Reykjavik have been more mixed.

The Association of Fishing Boat Owners and the Trawlermen's Association discussed the agreement in detail at a meeting on Monday, and, in a joint statement after the meeting, advised against Norwegian acceptance of the draft. The two organizations are groups within the Norwegian Fishermen's Association and comprise most of the fishing boat owners who fish for capelin of Jan Mayen. The Norwegian Fishermen's Association also discussed the agreement at a meeting on Monday, but will not complete their discussions until Tuesday, Editor Martin Dahle of the Norwegian Fishermen's Association told AFTENPOSTEN.

Iceland's biggest evening paper, DAGBLADID, describes the draft agreement as a complete fraud. The paper claims that the Icelandic delegation was tricked in Oslo. It was given a text that is quite good in many respects, but on closer examination it becomes obvious that nothing in the text holds water, the paper wrote, and describes Norwegian tactics in the negotiations as dirty tricks.

The leftwing People's Alliance is the only political party to oppose the proposal. Icelandic fishing boat owners are not satisfied but say that the proposal is better than no agreement at all.

The draft agreement on the fishing zone round Jan Mayen will be discussed by the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Icelandic Althing on Tuesday, and a debate on the matter is expected in the Althing later in the day.

The most influential paper in Iceland, MORGUNINBLADID, gives its support to the draft in an editorial in its Tuesday issue but expresses dissatisfaction on two points: It writes that Norway has been given too large a quota--15 percent of the total quota--and it is dissatisfied that Norway can refuse to accept the total quota which Iceland determines if it considers it unreasonable.

DENMARK EXTENDS GREENLAND LIMITS, DEFIES NORWAY, ICELAND

[Unattributed report: "Fishing Zones Extended on 1 June"]

[Text] The Danish Government will extend the fishing limits around the whole of Greenland to 200 nautical miles next week in defiance of the Norwegian and Icelandic governments. The new fishing limits will come into force on 1 June.

Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen briefed the Folketing Foreign Affairs Committee on the matter yesterday. The government decision means that Denmark will not recognize a small skerry north of Iceland or the Norwegian island of Jan Mayen respectively as bases for negotiations on demarcation lines between the fishing zones. The boundaries of extended fishing limits will be drawn according to the median line principle between Canada and Iceland and toward Jan Mayen along a line drawn 200 nautical miles from the Greenland coast.

It is not, however, Denmark's intention to enter into actual confrontation with Norwegian and Icelandic vessels that do not respect the new boundaries immediately. It is probable that the government decision will lead to official talks between Denmark and its two Scandinavian neighbors. More unofficial contacts have been broached in the past.

Denmark has extended fishing zones around Greenland in the past, but only to 75 degrees and 67 degrees north on the west and east coasts respectively. The new extension around the whole of Greenland is intended, among other things, to ensure the opportunity for Greenland's fishermen to make significant catches along the east coast, which until now has not been exploited to any great extent.

Further Talks Expected

LD151615 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 12 May 80 p 4

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA (NTB) report: Norway-Greenland: "Norway Sticks to Median Line Solution"]

[Text] Norway will dismiss Danish demands that Greenland be shown the same fishery consideration as Iceland when the boundary area between Greenland and Jan Mayen is drawn. Norway will stick to the median line as a solution to the boundary problem, sources in the Norwegian delegation told NTB after the negotiations with Iceland, which were completed on Saturday evening. "We cannot see that we will have to give in to arguments such as that because Norway did not insist on the median line as the boundary in the area between Iceland and Jan Mayen; it cannot do so between Jan Mayen and east Greenland out of consideration for the important role that fishing plays for the Greenland population," it was said.

The next phase in the Jan Mayen affair will begin when Denmark, as has been announced, sets up a 200-mile zone off east Greenland on 1 June. Shortly before this date Norway will set up a 200-mile zone around Jan Mayen, and this will give rise to a much bigger disputed zone than was the case in the demarcation dispute between Iceland and Jan Mayen.

In an approximate estimate, an east Greenland zone of 200 miles would take 85 percent of the total sea area in the direction of Jan Mayen and thus considerable fishery resources.

As the coastal state Denmark has the responsibility for finding a solution to boundary problems that arise with other countries, but it is an EC commission that is responsible for the exploitation of resources within the boundaries, including boundaries at sea. Norway will therefore have to negotiate twice: first with Denmark--and negotiations here are expected to be tough--and later with the EC commission in Brussels. Iceland will also have to take part.

This means that the questions of the size and division of fishing quotas which were the main problem during negotiations between Iceland and Norway will have to be renegotiated.

SCANDINAVIAN LEADERS DISCUSS ARCTIC DEVELOPMENT, OTHER ISSUES

LD160847 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 13 May 80 p 64

[Eivind G. Karlsen report: "Oil in the North Leading to Scandinavian Cooperation?"]

[Text] Hamar, 12 May--Petroleum finds off the north Norway coast could bring about economic cooperation in the North Calotte [transarctic Scandinavia]. Prime Minister Odvar Nordli pointed this out to his Scandinavian opposite numbers at the Staur Experimental Station today. Sweden, Finland and Norway in particular ought to make use of the time that they still have to map out possible joint projects, in case profitable finds are made in the Norwegian Sea, the prime minister said. He made this appeal more or less at the same time as the first Norwegian drilling rig, the "Treasure Seeker," [in English] crossed the "magic" 62nd parallel on its way to the first exploratory drilling in the north.

According to AFTENPOSTEN's information the appeal was received with the greatest interest by Sweden's Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin and Finland's Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto. Nordli is said to have pointed out once again that he sees these possibilities of cooperation in terms of the next 10-15 years: If viable finds are made, the Scandinavian countries ought to be ready to implement joint energy projects when the time comes. In the Norwegian prime minister's opinion there is no time to lose.

Apart from those already mentioned, Iceland's Gunnar Thoroddsen and Denmark's Anker Jorgensen are also taking part in the meeting. According to AFTENPOSTEN's information the Danish prime minister brought up again the subject of the individual countries' participation in the Olympic games. There was, however, no new exchange of views on the subject, but merely a summary of the situation in the individual countries.

The Scandinavian prime ministers also discussed the tense international situation. They all expressed their concern over what is happening, informed sources say, and they all stressed the importance of the resumption of work toward negotiations on disarmament as soon as possible. The prime ministers informed each other of their respective countries' relations with and steps taken with regard to Iran.

Prime Minister Nordli brought up the question of prospects in the North Calotte during reciprocal briefings on the economic and political situations in the individual Scandinavian countries. The Norwegian prime minister is said to have pointed out here that exploratory drilling for oil and gas in the north will begin at the end of this month, when the Storting has once again discussed the question. Both Koivisto and Falldin expressed strong interest in one or more North Calotte projects based on finds that might be made.

The possibility of industrial cooperation was also touched on, informed sources say. Prime Minister Falldin is said to have referred to the dismal fate of the Volvo agreement in this context pointing out that it can be difficult to realize large industrial projects even if they are both sound and fully negotiated, since it is not always possible to know how the majority of members in the national assemblies or in shareholders' groups will react.

Possible 25-Nation Meeting Discussed

[Eivind G. Karlsen report: "Nordli on Possible 25-Nation Meeting in Oslo: If Norway Is Asked, We Will Say Yes!"]

[Text] The answer will be yes if Norway is asked to host a summit for state and government heads from 25 developing and industrial nations to discuss the relationship between poor and rich nations. Prime Minister Nordli made this statement at the Scandinavian prime ministers' press conference in Oslo yesterday. The government chiefs said that the aim of such a conference would be to seek to arrive at a timetable for concrete negotiations between developing and industrial nations.

The Scandinavian prime ministers, who have thus given their support in principle to the Brandt commission's proposal, discussed the international situation during their meeting at the Staur experimental station in Stange. They share a deep concern over the increase in international tension and, according to Prime Minister Nordli, it is in the common interest of the Scandinavian countries that the tense situation is relaxed, so that it is once again possible to enter a phase of negotiations on disarmament. Regarding FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's hint some weeks ago that the deployment of new missiles in Europe could be delayed if it would have any influence on the situation in Afghanistan after the Soviet invasion there. Prime Minister Nordli commented as follows: "The initiative is welcomed." Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen agreed. Nordli added that Schmidt's idea is not so different from Norway's attitude throughout this time.

When asked if Denmark would not budge on the announced 200-mile zone off eastern Greenland, Prime Minister Jorgensen said that this would be the subject of discussions with Norway.

The prospects of cooperation in the North Calotte if oil finds are made there have kept the Scandinavian prime ministers very busy this time. The Norwegian government head once again stressed the importance of starting to analyze and prepare in advance possible joint project between Finland, Sweden and Norway as soon as possible. Nordli justified his views by pointing out that at present some 1 million people lived in the North Calotte area, which otherwise suffers from problems of underdevelopment and extreme sensitivity to environmental influences. He therefore warned against projects which were set up at a moment's notice and as a result could lead to unintentional harmful effects.

Concrete plans for industrial cooperation were not discussed by the prime ministers, on either a multinational or a bilteral basis, it was stated. Swedish Energy Minister Carl Axel Petri announced, however, that such talks will be held between Norway and Sweden in June. According to Petri, proposals will also be put forward soon on the establishment of a joint Scandinavian coal port.

This was mentioned in connection with the joint energy program which the prime ministers adopted yesterday. "It will give direction to future Scandinavian collaboration in this field," they announced in a statement.

According to the program, energy cooperation will be intensified in the following seven areas: energy conservation (including limitation of consumption in the individual countries); the introduction of new, durable sources of energy; oil; natural gas; coal; Scandinavian cooperation on electricity; and the coordination of efforts in respect of world energy problems.

FINLAND

KOIVISTO CABINET FACES 'THREAT OF DISSOLUTION'

LD160909 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 13 May 80 p 6

[Jan-Anders Ekstrom report: "New Crisis Threatens Finland's Government"]

[Text] Helsinki--Mauno Koivisto's four-party Cabinet once again faces the threat--to all appearances more serious now than before--of crisis and dissolution. Developments in the next few weeks will be critical for the government's chances of survival.

At the moment things look black for this government which, according to an opinion poll last winter, is the most popular that Finland has had in the last 10 years. The left is already saying that it will probably "take a miracle" to prevent the government from finally running aground.

The Koivisto Cabinet was already rocking at the end of the winter, when it barely managed to put together an agreement on agricultural prices which was acceptable to all parties. Since then the government parties have tried in vain to find a common approach in the struggle against inflation, which is showing ominous signs of speeding up again. After a good year in 1979, when inflation stayed at 7.5 percent, it looks as if inflation this year will rise to at least 14-15 percent.

The parties of the left have demanded measures for a possible revaluation of the Finnish markka and for making legislation on economic matters more effective. The Center Party refuses to agree to anything that could be interpreted as preparation for a further revaluation of the markka.

In addition, the parties disagree on how the important reform of state pensions is to be carried out.

The atmosphere within the government has become more and more inflamed in time with the Center Party's ever more frequent public claims that the nonsocialist majority within the government (Center Party plus Swedish People's Party) should have the final say. Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto has initiated discussions with the different parties within the government and with individual ministers on the possibilities of restoring confidence within the Cabinet but, it would seem, without results so far.

The situation has been greatly influenced by the latest public opinion poll which shows that the largest opposition party, the National Coalition Party, has continued to grow, so that it is now almost as big as the Social Democratic Party. The Coalition Party is now said to have 24.2 percent of the voters behind it, as against 24.4 percent supporting the Social Democrats. At the same time, the Center Party has lost half a percentage point since the parliamentary election last spring and now commands only 16.8 percent of voters. Within the Center Party, which is also facing an internal chairmanship struggle in preparation for the party congress in Turku in June, there has been a tacit reaction to this loss of support which has led to more pronounced efforts to hold the line against the left within the government.

The Social Democrats have been "lying low" for a time since they are aware that the collapse of the government now could lead to long-term changes in Finnish Government groupings. It could be extremely difficult, perhaps totally impossible, to reestablish a "popular front government" of the present type after the local elections in the fall if the Coalition Party becomes the biggest party in the country and the Center Party continues to lose ground.

Nevertheless, the Social Democratic Party leadership has decided to sharpen its tone against the Center Party despite the risk of a government crisis. The Social Democratic Party has made the condition that its views and requirements are given reasonable consideration and has been given cautious support by the People's Democrats and Communists. If the center groups do not meet the left halfway on the issues in question within the next 2 weeks, then the Social Democrats will draw the conclusion that cooperation in government cannot continue.

The Social Democratic Party cannot, however, be expected to do anything that could admit of the interpretation that the party itself was out to "topple" the extremely popular Mauno Koivisto. The intention is therefore that Koivisto himself shall be seen to draw the conclusions if it turns out that cooperation within the government cannot be made to work. As things look now, he will perhaps be forced to draw that conclusion in a few weeks time, after further attempts to reach agreement on resolute measures to deal with inflation. A great deal depends on how the Center Party reacts to the Social Democrats' new hard line.

UNION SEEKS TO KEEP SEAMEN OUT OF IRAN

LD151545 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 8 May 80 p 4

[Rolf L. Larsen report: "Seamen's Union Fears for Seamen's Safety: No Norwegian Ships to Iran During Boycott"]

[Excerpts] The Norwegian Seamen's Union has asked the authorities to ban Norwegian ships from entering Iranian ports or waters when the trade boycott of Iran takes effect on 17 May. In a letter to the Foreign Ministry the union writes that it fears reprisals against Norwegian ships in the area when the boycott begins.

"Against the background of the Norwegian authorities' support for the trade boycott against Iran, we must hold the authorities responsible for the lives and safety of seamen," the letter states. If the request is not complied with, the union is considering recommending that its members sign off from ships bound for the area.

Norwegian Seamen's Union Deputy Chairman Kare Kristoffersen confirmed to AFTENPOSTEN that the letter had been sent to the Foreign Ministry.

"We consider the seamen's position to be extremely vulnerable once the boycott begins and we fear that the tension will be so great that it will lead to reprisals against Norwegian ships," Kristoffersen told AFTENPOSTEN.

TO VIMA CITES PLANNED U.S. MESSAGE TO RALLIS ON NATO

AT181709 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 18 May 80 p 6

[Article by TO VIMA Washington correspondent St. Evstathiadhis: "A Personal Carter Message Will Be Handed to Rallis by the U.S. Ambassador on the Question of Bases and the Greek-U.S. Defense Agreement"]

[Text] Washington, 17 May, by our correspondent--The United States is very interested in quickly ending the uncertainty over the future of U.S. bases in Greece and the Greek-U.S. defense agreement. This will be officially made known to Prime Minister Rallis at the first opportunity.

At the same time the United States sees difficulties in forcing the question of Greece's return to NATO's military wing and, at least for the time being, it does not intend to submit its own "draft proposal," as it has originally decided and informed the Karamanlis government that it would do, nor does Washington intend to play an active role in the whole issue, as it had originally agreed in accordance with request.

The U.S. views on the question of bases in Greece, on the bipartite defense agreement and Greece's return [to NATO] will be "explained" to Prime Minister Rallis in all probability during his meeting with U.S. Ambassador to Athens McCloskey during the next few days. It is also probable--and in Washington this is considered very likely--that these views will be included in a totally personal message from President Carter to Rallis or even to President Karamanlis. Such a message will not have the character of a formal greeting. The general lines of the relevant White House views were already been passed on to the U.S. ambassador in Athens last week so that he could handle the issue accordingly.

More specifically well informed sources in Washington explained to TO VIMA:

1--The Greek Government "was informed" last week that the White House considers as unjustified the "protracted delay" on the question of finalizing and signing the bipartite defense agreement and the related issue of U.S. bases in Greece. No recommendation is made for a revision of the draft agreement which has been already initialed nor is there any mention of a time limit for completion of the revision although it is stressed that this is "of urgency."

It was also stressed to Athens (in a way which could not create misunderstandings, it is stated in Washington) that the U.S. administration views the issue as "urgent" and, although it recognizes the political difficulties created in Greece around the issue, it believes that the international situation does not permit further delays in view of the fact that Greece "recently and repeatedly also demonstrated that it recognizes this necessity," that is the termination of the uncertainty.

At the same time, the U.S. administration presented to the Greek Government a copy of the U.S.-Turkish military agreement signed in Ankara on 29 March. Washington "understands" the interest of Greece in revising its own agreement in accordance with the model of the agreement with Ankara. In reference to this Washington stressed to Greece that it is interested in receiving Greek reaction "as soon as possible."

2--In reference to Greece's return to NATO's military wing, at this moment Washington is abandoning the idea of submitting "draft proposals" in the form of an ultimatum such as "either you accept or else."

Informed sources stated that this "was rather likely at the beginning of April," when presidential adviser Brzezinski formed the idea and decided on such a method. They say, however, that today's international conditions do not allow such inflexibility and that at the same time "political fluidity" in Greece cannot be ignored by Washington.

Washington, however, always accepts Greece's recommendation that it should play a more active role by directly intervening and forcing the issue of its return [to NATO] but it considers that "particular international conditions in the area"--in other words, Ankara's refusal--do not allow it to play such a role today "to the degree that it would like to and it had promised to Athens." It is exactly for this reason, according to the same sources, that Washington "was strongly disturbed" over the recent Greek-Turkish incident during NATO maneuvers in the Aegean and the protests which followed. According to Washington's "explanation," the incident was created by "tension in Ankara" and that the exploitation of this situation by Turkey does not permit the United States to exercize its influence there over the issue of Greece's return to NATO.

In reference to this, a congressional source which closely follows Greek developments, stressed the following in a conversation with TO VIMA: "The position of the U.S. administration appears to be weakened at this time toward both Ankara and Athens. In Congress, where this is already becoming obvious, it is feared that Athens in particular could misinterpret Washington's position and might view it as a favor toward Ankara on the question of the incident. Greece may think it is being forced not to protest Turkish violations if it wants American intervention on the question of its return to NATO. Such an interpretation in Athens would be unjust," it was stated in Congress.

U.S. sources, in conclusion, stressed that Washington would in no way want to create any sort of problems for the Rallis government, recognizing "the pressure which it is subjected to by the opposition." However, the U.S. administration can neither limit its interest on the speedy solution of the bipartite defense agreement nor can it offer additional assistance on the question of the return to NATO at present.

PAPERS CITE REACTION TO VIOLATION OF AEGEAN AIRSPACE

Praise From I VRADHINI

AT161318 Athens I VRADHINI in Greek 16 May 80 p 2

[From the "Evening" column: "The Foreign Flights in the Aegean"]

[Text] The National Defense Ministry statement, in connection with Ankara's complaints about the interception of Turkish planes which violated Greek airspace, has caused general satisfaction. No wavering should be allowed on the issue of national sovereignty. Greece has withdrawn from the NATO military wing for very well-known reasons. A complete return is always desirable but with the prerequisite that the guarantee of national sovereignty would also be complete.

Under these circumstances, international laws should apply in territorial waters and airspace. Air exercises may be held in the Aegean and in international airspace but any violation of the national airspace by anyone will be dealt with as required for national defense.

Consequently, the interception of the Turkish planes on Tuesday constituted a natural and automatic Greek reaction. Let others also respect international laws and let them know that all movements in the Aegean are watched day and night with attention and prudence.

I KATHIMERINI Report

AT181614 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 18 May 80 pp 1, 3

[Text] Turkey actively questions the 10-mile Greek airspace and attempts to create a new status in the Aegean through repeated violations. At the same time, Turkish violations are covered by the Turkish Government to the degree that Greek sovereign rights are provocatively being questioned.

In his statements, a spokesman of the Turkish Foreign Ministry specifically described as unfounded Greek allegations on the violation of is airspace by Turkish aircraft during NATO's "Dawn Patrol" maneuvers.

According to the Turkish spokesman, the Turkish aircraft, which were repeatedly intercepted by the Greek Air Force, "did not approach Greek territory to a distance less than 6 miles during the maneuvers."

However, it is internationally accepted that Greek airspace extends for 10 miles.

It must be noted that with respect to the interception of Turkish aircraft Ankara submitted a verbal protest and then resorted to a written demarche which will receive a Greek reply within the next few days.

The Turkish provocations during NATO's maneuvers involved at least three flagrant violations of Greek airspace and 10 other violations or attempts on a smaller scale. They are the second provocative action undertaken within 2 months by the Turkish side, during which time Turkish aircraft violated Greek airspace at least 60 times.

At the same time this is the second time within the same period of time that Turkey refuses to submit flight plans in accordance with international ICAO regulations which have given Greece the responsibility for the security of the Athens FIR.

Ankara's Views

Turkish demarches were revealed by Ankara radio, which reported the other day that Turkey handed Greece a written protest as a result "of interceptions" by Greek aircraft during NATO maneuvers in the Aegean.

The report was accompanied by a statement by the Foreign Ministry Spokesman Sadet Aktug in answer to relevant questions submitted by the ANATOLIA News Agency. In these statements he:

--Described Greek interceptions as provocative and dangerous;

--Argued that the Turkish side had warned Greece that such actions in the future would be reciprocated;

--Argued there is no question of violation of Greek airspace because the Turkish aircraft did not approach Greek territory to a distance of less than 6 miles.

The Greek Position

An official of the Greek Foreign Ministry who was informed of the position of the Turkish Foreign Ministry made the following statement:

"It is a fact the Turkish Government submitted a verbal protest on 9 May and a written protest on 15 May. An answer has already been given to the oral protest and, at the same time, a Greek protest was lodged against the violation of Greek airspace. A reply to the written protest will be given in a few days.

"The Greek position is clear and firm:

"Greece is responsible for security within the Athens FIR, both within both the national or international territory of the FIR, whether within or outside the air corridors. Consequently, Greece has the right, in accordance with ICAO regulations and national regulations to which ICAO refers, as well as the obligation to know of every flight or air activity within this area of its responsibility. This is neither a highhanded nor a new Greek demand. This is in accordance with international regulations and was, until recently, international practice. It is, therefore, natural that when we notice an entry of aircraft into the Athens FIR area without their prior submission of flight plans--which means they are unknown to us--as a result we establish their identity. Naturally this establishment of identity is never undertaken in a way which endangers the security of either the interceptor or the aircraft whose identity is being established as the Turkish side alleges."

ALLEGED OIL PROSPECTING AGREEMENT WITH TURKEY DEPLORED

AT171416 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 17 May 80 p 4

[From the "Views" column: "The Price"]

[Text] This "gentlemen's agreement" between Greece and Turkey in Montreaux regarding oil in the Aegean continental shelf revealed by ELEVTHEROTIPIA with the result that it has overshadowed every other political event does not seem to be far from the truth despite all panic-stricken denials.

Indeed, the price Greeks paid this time to Turkey to again achieve a temporary suspension of threats and vulgar annoyances on the Aegean issue is very high. So that the notorious Hora [Turkish research ship Sismik], which roamed the Aegean without accounting to anyone, could be restrained, prospecting for oil in Greek seas had to cease with the result that our economy has been burdened with the billions required for us to obtain fuel from the foreigners.

It is a common secret among experts on prospecting underground and undersea that the Greek territory possesses so much oil that by pumping it out the country can cover not only its own energy needs but it can also export.

In the past, the entire issue involved the interests of the monopolies and the large multinational oil companies which made the plans for prospecting and which kept the oilfields secret so that they could sell the commodity rationally and in their own interest, and whose shadow fell nightmarishly over Greece.

Now has come the science of oil prospecting to confirm that in the areas where oilfields had been spotted in the past intensive prospecting should take place. In the past, prospecting had been foiled by the foreign oil monopolists on various pretexts.

The principle pretext was that exploration was unprofitable and when Greek technicians and workers ascertained that drillings found plentiful oil, as in the Olimbia area 45 years ago, the foreigners went as far as to commit crimes in order to preserve the secret of the oilfield and killed a worker who had spoken about it. Older people remember that crime which was never solved....

Greek oil is the golden sword with which the nation will gain its independence and some day will finally shed foreign domination, as is currently with the Arab people. For this reason, all those who wish the Greek people to remain slaves procrastinate by every means and, as has been revealed, the Turks, God knows on whose orders, imposed the "oil truce" to confine our economy within a suffocating framework so that without much effort their pressure in the Aegean can achieve results. All these things are being kept secret from the sovereign Greek people....

PRINOS FIELD EXPECTED TO YEILD 10 MILLION TONS OF OIL

AT171300 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 17 May 80 p 1

[Excerpt] The Prinos oilfield will produce 25,000 barrels of oil daily, but only for about 3 years.

From then on the production of oil will fall gradually to 12, 10 and 8 thousand barrels per day--as international experience shows--and the oil will be exhausted about 10 years after pumping begins. It is estimated that the Prinos oilfield will produce a total of 10 million tons of oil, that is, as much as the country's current annual needs.

To this quantity must be added the well-known natural gas field in South Kavala which will produce gas equal to about 200 tons of oil per day. Most probably this gas will be used to supply the state fertilizer unit in New Karvali of Kavala given the fact that it cannot and should not be stored.

WRITTEN PROTEST LODGED AGAINST GREECE REGARDING AEGEAN FLIGHTS

TA161653 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] The Turkish Government has lodged a written protest against Greece for the interference by Greek planes during the NATO Dawn Patrol-80 exercises. In a statement to the ANATOLIA News Agency, Foreign Ministry Spokesman Ambassador Sedet Aktug said the Turkish Government told the Greek Government that if such acts were repeated, Turkey would respond in kind.

Replying to another question on the issue, Ambassador Aktug said: The Greek planes interfered on 8, 9, 12 and 13 May with flights in international airspace over the Aegean that were conducted within the framework of the NATO Dawn Patrol-80 exercises. These exercises began on 5 May and will end on 17 May 1980. After the first interference, we verbally called this to the attention of the Greek Government through our embassy in Athens. However, the interference exceeded regular reconnaissance flights and took on destructive and very dangerous dimensions; therefore, our government sent a written protest to the Greek Government through our embassy in Athens on 15 May. At the same time, the Greek Government was informed that if such acts were repeated they would be reciprocated.

The Foreign Ministry spokesman added: Against international rules Greece wants to be informed of flight plans. As is known, it is not necessary to announce flight plans before military flights in international airspace. Furthermore, Greece has alleged that Greek airspace was violated during the exercises. This allegation is unfounded. During the exercises our planes did not come any closer to Greece than 6 miles. Consequently, there was no question of violating Greek airspace.

DEMIREL CONGRATULATES AS-SADAT ON ASSUMING PREMIERSHIP

OUR RADIO COMMENTS ON DEMIREL STATEMENT ON SOVIET THREAT

TA170917 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 17 May 80

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] Based on unfounded allegations by chairman of NATO's military committee General Gundersen, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel is trying to hide the real dangers facing our people. Speaking with journalists during a recess at the Council of Ministers meeting on Thursday, Demirel replied to a question by a journalist on this subject with regard to allegations which the NATO official claim to be true--that the Soviet Union is reinforcing its borders with Turkey.

For months now we have been witnessing unfounded allegations by the leaders of NATO as well as the American Carter administration. According to his lie, the Soviet Union was massing its troops on its borders with Iran. However, all lies are short-lived and in no time the real danger hidden behind this lie was revealed.

The Carter administration undertook a military intervention in Iran which was prepared for months, hidden behind this lie. However, this U.S. aggression ended with a big fiasco. If the chief liars of NATO, like Gundersen and his ilk, resume their false allegations to the effect that the Soviet Union was reinforcing its borders with Iran, no one in his senses will believe that. Now the NATO chiefs have resumed and once more intensified their talk of Soviet threat, this time in connection with Turkey because--though it might be for a short period--they have lost their hope in Iran. They are planning to intensify this in the expectation of (?gaining a strategic) and military advantage. In fact, they have used the bases in Turkey in the aggression against Iran. It is the Demirel government which has provided them with this possibility. Currently, the Demirel government is dealing with these false allegations as if they were true, though it knows better. It is speaking about defending our soil against a threat which does not exist in a bid to hide the real danger from the public.

Dear listeners, let us take a look at the past and let us stress this point: The Soviet troops have been stationed along the Soviet borders--including, naturally, its borders with Turkey--for the last 60 years. Not one instance of aggression or provocation has occurred along these borders during this time. During a visit to the Turkish-Soviet border, Koruturk, who has just withdrawn from his post of president, said that these borders were borders of peace. RPP leader Bulent Ecevit also has stated that he does not believe in the existence of a Soviet threat. It follows that for Demirel the statements by a Turkish president and the leader of another party in the same country carry no weight. Because lies are [words indistinct], what Demirel needs is lies. The saying goes that the witness of a liar is also a liar. Moreover, time and time again the Soviet Union has declared its intention of signing a nonbelligerence pact with all countries. However, Demirel and his government have turned a deaf ear to that because they know that if such a pact was signed their lies would be revealed and [words indistinct] they would not be able to hide the real danger, namely the U.S. imperialism which is on our soil with its bases and weapons with nuclear warheads. Despite all lies, our people are aware of the Demirel government's policies which contradict national interests and which threaten our national security. As a result, the cries of "Remove the U.S. and NATO bases, tear up the bilateral slavery agreements, withdraw from NATO" are being heard in the country at large. Those fabricating these lies will not be able to withstand these cries.

DEMIREL ISSUES MESSAGE ON OCCASION OF YOUTH DAY

AT181151 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 18 May 80

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that the Turkish nation's determination to protect the republic is part of its national consciousness. He said: Our republic, whose foundations are our territorial and national integrity, our nationalist faith and unconditional national sovereignty, is the most cherished and immortal expression of the great virtues, sacrifices and struggle power of our nation. In a message he issued on occasion of 19 May Youth and Sports Day, Prime Minister Demirel stressed that adventurers who try to confuse the Turkish nation concerning its problems and to make it confuse its aims and become unable to distinguish its friends from its enemies should remember that the state never leaves unpunished attempts to destroy its territorial and national unity.

Demirel added: Those who are trying to hinder the struggle for developing Turkey, those who are trying to prevent our nation from regaining peace and tranquillity, those who want to destroy the Turkish Republic which is the legacy of our martyrs and replace it with a communist system will never achieve their aims. Those who try to override the state and the nation will certainly be crushed and made to regret their deeds. The prime minister said that the Turkish nation expected its youth to make the republic and the state live forever, to enhance the struggle to develop Turkey, to advance along the path of reason in the search for what is good and correct. He added that the Turkish youth deserved this hope and trust.

STATE MINISTER URGES CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT FOR ELECTIONS

TA181120 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 18 May 80

[Text] State Minister Koksal Toptan has said they [not further identified] are in favor of constitutional changes in the presidential elections. In a written statement, Toptan pointed out that certain circles were trying to turn the delay in the presidential elections into an argument about the present political system. He added that this was the work of persons trying to create a crisis, but that it would not succeed. Toptan stressed that an attitude of "let somebody be elected president, it does not matter who," was wrong and that such an attitude could lead to insurmountable problems in the future. He added: It is obvious that there are no procedures in the Constitution on the failure of the legislature to elect a state president within a certain period of time. We are open to the idea of making an immediate amendment to the Constitution whereby the assembly is abolished if it fails to elect a president in three rounds--as is the practice in certain other countries--and early elections must be held. State Minister Toptan also added that the allegation that the acting president could not appoint senators to replace those whose term ended in the Presidential Quota Group lacked legal foundations.

TERRORISTS KILL BAR OFFICIAL IN TRABZON; LAWYERS RESPOND

TA121107 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 12 May 80

[Text] The general secretary of the Trabzon bar, advocate Temel Aydinoglu, was killed by terrorists this morning. According to information received from Trabzon Governor Ali Riza Yaradanakul, the incident occured in front of Aydinoglu's house in the Esentepe quarter around 0800. The murderers, who are believed to be two in number, fired at Aydinoglu as he was entering his car. The lawyer, who was seriously wounded, died in hospital. Yaradanakul said that the security forces launched an extensive search operation after the incident and that a suspect matching the description given by eyewitnesses has been captured. A statement issued by the Trabzon bar following the murder of Aydinoglu noted that attacks will not intimidate lawyers. The statement said that through attacks on lawyers--valuable members of the defense institution--the murder gangs are actually attacking the law.

Statement by Leading Lawyer

TA171052 Ankara Domestic Serivce in Turkish 1000 GMT 17 May 80

[Text] Recalling that lawyers respect the principles of the pluralistic democratic system as stipulated in the Constitution, Turkish Bar Association leader Atilla Sav denounced the latest attempts directed against the lawyers and their right to defense. In a news conference in Ankara, Sav said that 14 of the lawyers attacked during the last 8 months were killed. Pointing out that this was an attempt against the right and liberty to plead and to defend, Sav asked for new measures to be taken to protect the lawyers and for permission for lawyers to carry a gun. Referring to recent allegations of torture during questioning by security forces, Sav said that torturing was completely illegal and uncivilized.

OPINION POLL ON REFERENDUM SHOWS 'NO' VOTES AHEAD

LD170801 Montreal in English to Europe 2100 GMT 18 May 80

[Excerpts] The latest opinion poll on the Quebec referendum released today shows the pro-federalist side ahead by a substantial margin. The survey was conducted by McGill University sociologists (Maurice Guinard) and Richard Hamilton. It gives the "no" side 49 percent, the "yes" option 37 percent and the undecided 14 percent. The poll also shows distinct gap between English- and French-speaking voters. Ninety percent of the English-speaking voters go with the "no", while the French vote is split 40 percent for the "no" and 45 percent for the "yes." The leader of the "no" campaign, Mr Rayan, says the poll reflects what his people have been hearing in the field, while the leader of the "yes" side, Mr Levesque, says today's survey completely contradicts another poll done at the same time. Mr Levesque says the polls are mixed up because Quebeckers are mixed up. Patrick Brown reports from Mcontreal:

[Begin Brown recording] Today's poll is bad news for Rene Levesque and the "yes" forces. They have known for some time from their own door-to-door canvassing that the "no" side is leading, but a lead of 12 percentage points is all but impossible to overcome, and the conventional wisdom is that the "don't" and the "won't tells" will tend to lean more towards the "no" than the "yes," which leaves Mr Levesque hovering probably in the low forties or worse on Tuesday night.

All week Mr Levesque has been appealing to the undecided voters and what he calls the sincere "no's" to think carefully. If Quebeckers vote "yes," he says, they will have stood up for the first time. If it's "no," they will be on their knees and can expect to stay there, he says, for a damn long time. Mr Levesque is casting himself in a role of underdog, fighting against an unholy alliance of provincial liberals, federal liberals and big business--the same coalition that tried to block the expropriation of the power utilities in 1962 and more recently tried to block no-fault automobile insurance.

Mr Levesque also talks a lot about the non-French-speaking vote which is expected to go massively to the "no" camp. He said the English-speaking Quebeckers have the democratic right to vote "no" and they shouldn't be blamed. But like many people, he is concerned what will happen if French-speaking voters support the "yes" side in a majority but are held back from an absolute win by the non-French bloc. That's what will happen if the "yes" side ends up with anything between 42 and 50 percent. If Mr Levesque loses, he plans to make his concession speech early, so he can appeal for calm and send his supporters home early. If he wins, on the other hand, Mr Levesque will speak later, as Quebec's independentists wind up the biggest party they've ever held. [end recording]

CHRETIEN COMMENTS ON UPCOMING REFERENDUM

LD171800 Montreal in English to Europe 2100 GMT 16 May 80

[Excerpt] Quebec City will be watching the result of the Quebec referendum closely on Tuesday night, but no more clearly than Ottawa. The prime minister has promised to begin constitutional reform immediately if the "no" side wins. Today, in Ottawa, the head of the federal forces on the "no" committee, the minister of justice, says the federal government has a clear idea of what renewed federalism should mean. But Mr Chretien says it would have been a mistake to spell out the package during the referendum campaign. Brian Gallagher has the details:

Mr Chretien says if there is one thing that's now clear is that Quebec votes "no" to sovereignty-association, then the Constitution has to be changed and changed quickly. Assuming the "no" side wins and Prime Minister Trudeau calls a constitutional conference for July, Mr Chretien says it is pretty clear from past statements what the federal government would want is a renewed federalism. It wants the two official languages enshrined in the Constitution along with civil rights. It also wants the Constitution to guarantee that English-speaking people in Quebec and French-speaking people outside Quebec have the right to education in their mother tongue. And, Mr Chretien says, the federal government must be strong enough to be able to equalize the rich and poor parts of the country. In other words, it needs a bigger cut of the taxpie to do its job.

To the suggestions that federal leaders haven't campaigned enough on what renewed federalism does mean, Mr Chretien says that to have done so would have been a mistake. It would have shifted attention from the referendum question itself. [begin Chretien recording] The question has been put by Mr Levesque, not by us. If some day we'll want to put the question, we'll put it. Mr Levesque is asking the Quebeckers for sovereignty-association. He is trying now to hide that it is his question. The debate is on sovereignty-association, and sovereignty-association, we said, is not acceptable. And we are asking the Quebeckers to reject it, and they are rejecting it. [end recording]

Mr Chretien insists again that if Mr Levesque wins his referendum Ottawa will never negotiate sovereignty-association. But what does Mr Levesque do, just go away? [begin Chretien recording] Ask him. I think what he wants is quite evident. He wants to go back to the Quebeckers. He will say: I cannot negotiate sovereignty-association, so now let's vote for strict independence. And he will say: We have been humiliated. But if he is humiliated, it is his own doing. He is the one who has put all his eggs in one basket, not me. [end recording]

AFTENPOSTEN NOTES 'SOLIDARITY' AT BRUSSELS SESSION

LD151611 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 13 May 80 p 8

[Per Nordum report: "European Sympathy With United States"]

[Text] Brussels, 12 May--The European NATO nations stressed on Monday the need for solidarity and unity between the alliance's member countries in today's international situation. In a direct reference to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan the defense ministers expressed their deep concern over current trends.

The 11 ministers who met in Brussels on Monday also made it clear that they are fully prepared to assume their share of the defense burden, especially in light of the increased U.S. commitment due to current trends in the wider international arena.

The NATO Eurogroup began 3 hectic days of meetings which will be wound up with a joint meeting of foreign and defense ministers from all NATO countries, with the exception of France and Greece. The United States is seeking solidarity from its European partners--something that Monday's discussions clearly showed that Washington could count on.

France is not taking part in the discussions this week since it has not been part of the alliance's military cooperation since 1967. New U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie will, however, meet his French counterpart Jean Francois-Poncet in Vienna at the end of the week, and France is also expected to declare in some way or other its solidarity with the United States and its NATO allies within the next few days.

It is necessary to maintain strong deterrent and defense capacity and to modernize forces when it is seen how the Soviet Union and the other Warsaw Pact countries are rearming, the Eurogroup's communique states. The defense ministers favored continued efforts to bring about arms control and disarmament. At the same time they stressed that stable and peaceful relations with the Soviet Union must continue within the framework of a unified, mutual process of global detente. It has become more difficult to continue this process because of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the communique states.

On Tuesday West German Defense Minister Hans Apel will present the Eurogroup's views in the Defense Planning Committee. His American counterpart, Harold Brown, will then ask the Europeans to increase their investment in defense by speeding up the implementation of the long-term program on which the countries agreed 2 years ago.

In NATO circles definite decisions are not expected this time since complicated, wide-ranging problems are involved. The intention has always been that the defense ministers would in all probability make decisions about changes in the defense programs at the meeting in December.

"The most important aspect of the meetings this time is psychological: that NATO stands together in agreement and expresses solidarity with the United States," it was said in top circles at the meeting on Monday afternoon.

Greece, Turkey and Italy presented a joint collective evaluation of the situation on NATO's southern flank. It is the first time that the Greeks and Turks have both taken part in such a presentation since Greece withdrew its forces from the NATO joint command in 1974 because of the Turkish invasion of Cyprus.

"The tone of the relationship between the two countries was encouraging and conciliatory," Norwegian Defense Minister Torvald Stoltenberg said after the meeting.

The aggravated international situation has made Greece and Turkey think twice, so the general assumption is in delegation circles at NATO headquarters.

The European NATO countries will once again make an effort to inform most Americans of the contribution to defense which the Europeans are making. The move will take the edge of the Americans' view that it is the United States which bears the heaviest burden within NATO defenses.

CHAIRMAN GUNDERSEN ON USSR TURKISH BORDER BUILDUP

LD161529 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 14 May 80 p 8

[Per Nordrum report: "Kremlin Buildup Close to Turkey"]

[Text] Brussels, 13 May--In the last few weeks the Soviet Union has increased its land forces in the areas along its border with Turkey. By all accounts the buildup covers all types of land forces. This was made clear in announcements made by the chairman of NATO's Military Committee, General Herman Fredrik Zeiner Gundersen, at a press conference in Brussels on Tuesday.

General Zeiner Gundersen did not want to say anything about the size of the forces in question. He assumed--on the basis of present information--that they probably come from parts of the Soviet Union not far from the Turkish border.

High-ranking American sources later attempted to sidestep the question of the Soviet troop buildup. However, it has been confirmed that some of the Soviet troops in the Caucasus have been put on alert in the last few weeks. The information comes by all accounts from recent intelligence reports. Turkish sources in Brussels, which are usually well informed, knew nothing about the affair until Zeiner Gundersen made his announcement at the press conference.

Turkey forms NATO's eastern outpost against the Soviet Union. At the same time the country borders on Iran and the unstable Arab states. The invasion of Afghanistan and the Iranian crisis have made the whole of Southwest Asia a destablized area, and it is therefore important to help the economically hardhit Turkey with its defense spending. This was the subject of detailed discussions among the defense ministers on Tuesday.

Worries about NATO's southeast flank were also reflected in the fact that the old archenemies, Greece and Turkey, together with Italy presented a joint evaluation on Monday of the whole NATO southern flank.

"It is important that Turkey be given both economic and military support," General Zeiner Gundersen said at the press conference on Tuesday.

The defense ministers' meeting also discussed the possibilities of Norway giving Turkey some of its old fighter planes when the Norwegian Air Force gets its new F-16s. Other countries are already giving some of their old fighters to Turkey's defense forces in 1981 and 1982.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE VOTES TO PARTICIPATE IN MOSCOW GAMES

WA191811 London REUTER in English 1759 GMT 19 May 80

[Text] Vienna, May 19, REUTER--Austria's Olympic Committee decided today to send a national team to the Olympic games in Moscow this summer. Austria's neutral government said earlier that it was discussing the Olympic situation with sports organizations but would leave the Olympic committee free to make its own decision.

[Summary] Vienna (AZ)--The plenary session of the Austrian Olympic Committee decided yesterday [19 May] in Vienna to send an Austrian athletic team to the Olympic summer games in Moscow. The vote was 37 for, and 9 against Austria's participation, with 12 abstentions. It was decided that the Austrian team will wear sport shirts without the logo "Austria," merely showing the Olympic emblem, and that Austria will not participate in the international youth camp. The Austrian team will also possibly to to Moscow without the national flag, and will not have the Austrian national anthem played. "Moreover, it will be left to every individual sportsman whether or not he wants to participate in the games. A nonparticipation of qualified and nominated athletes will not entail any negative consequences whatsoever."

INTERNATIONAL CRISES DOMINATE TALKS AT TREATY CELEBRATION

Gromyko Activities Reviewed

AU191257 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 18 May 80 p 1

[Unattributed report: "The State Treaty Anniversary Has Confirmed It: Vienna Is a Time-Tested Meeting Place"]

[Excerpts] Following the State Treaty anniversary celebrations, which lasted for about 1 week and reached their high point in the official ceremonies in the Hofburg Palace on Thursday and the Belvedere Palace on Friday, life is gradually returning to normal in Austria. The foreign statesmen who came to Austria to attend the celebrations--insofar as they had not already left on Friday night [16 May]--held their last talks yesterday morning [17 May], and then left the capital.

The busiest of them yesterday was undoubtedly Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, who by Friday evening had already had talks with his American opposite number Edmund Muskie, with FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and with UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim.

Early in the morning Italy's Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo met with Gromyko. As Colombo declared afterwards, in his talk with the Soviet foreign minister he had emphasized that the concept of detente could not be confined to one region only, but that conflicts in individual parts of the world endanger peace as a whole. In Colombo's opinion, the East-West talks will be continued though quietly through diplomatic channels rather than in the form of big public statements.

The talks between Gromyko and British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington--as the lord declared prior to his departure by air from Vienna--dealt almost exclusively with the Afghanistan issue. The head of the Foreign Office found words of high praise for Austria: "We have all talked with one another, and Austria has proved her useful role for international relations," he said.

At 1030 Gromyko was received by Chancellor Kreisky. On this occasion, he made a brief statement pointing out that he had had a very substantial talk with the chancellor. The first part of this talk dealt with bilateral relations, which actually are developing well, he said, but both sides are determined to seek ways and means of further enriching them. The second part of the talks dealt with the international questions which are at present in the focus of world interest, he said. He had convinced himself that Austria, like the USSR, was a supporter of detente and of the endeavors of peace, he said, adding that he had also outlined this Soviet position in his talks with U.S. Secretary of State Muskie and the other foreign ministers. "I am highly satisfied with my talk with the chancellor. And now I am in a hurry," Gromyko said in conclusion, and rushed off.

The chancellor also declared that he was satisfied with the talk because it was substantial. Actually, he said, there are no unresolved bilateral questions but the Austrian side feels that trade with the Soviet Union could do with a fresh impetus. Regarding the part of the talk dealing with the policy of detente and the problems burdening it, Kreisky said he believed the USSR's position was not such that there was not such that there was no basis for talks even on the most complicated problems. Kreisky added that he was assuming this, among other things, because Gromyko--whom he had known for a long time--is a man who rather tends to make understatements.

Kreisky Comments on Talks With Gromyko

AU191258 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 19 May 80 p 4

[APA report: "Kreisky on Foreign Ministers Meeting in Vienna: 'The Door Has Not Been Closed'"]

[Excerpt] Vienna (APA)--"I have the impression that Gromyko's talks with the other foreign ministers have not caused the door to be closed," Chancellor Kreisky declared on Saturday after his talk with the Soviet foreign minister, which lasted nearly 1 hour. "Rather, the impression was created that there is a point in following up the unresolved questions. The USSR's position was not such that there would be no basis for talks even on the most complicated problems." What has happened in Vienna and what will have a continuing effect beyond Vienna is that at least temporarily a world political concert has been restored. In Vienna powers have appeared which were not present at the SALT negotiations. Suddenly the Allies have reappeared, and--together with the FRG--they have spoken with Gromyko.

Quite informally Vienna has presented an optimally utilized opportunity for meetings which might otherwise have taken a year to prepare, Kreisky said. Gromyko had certainly also realized how great the Europeans' solidarity with America is. After his talk with Gromyko, Kreisky was also asked by journalists about various other international problems, among other things how his attitude toward the Middle East problem was being judged in the United States. In reply to this question he said: "The United States knows my Middle East proposals very well, and I enjoy there a great measure of tolerance."

Gromyko, KPOe Chairman Muhri Meeting

AU191321 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 18 May 80 p 1

[Text] Vienna--Austrian Communist Party [KPOe] Chairman Franz Muhri and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, had a friendly meeting in Vienna on Saturday, 17 May. During their talk the Soviet foreign minister again confirmed the Soviet Union's determination to adhere to a foreign policy aimed at international detente, disarmament and peace.

Party Chairman Franz Muhri stressed among other things the development of the state, political, economic and cultural relations between the Soviet Union and Austria, a development that is positive in many respects. He said that the KPOe has always supported the development of these relations and regards last but not least the maintenance and further development of the economic relations to mutual advantage as an important factor for safeguarding jobs in Austria. The meeting, which passed in a cordial atmosphere, was also attended by USSR Ambassador to Austria M.T. Yefremov, and Hans Steiner, head of the KPOe Central Committee's Foreign Relations Department.

Francois-Poncet on Olympics, Muskie Talks

LD161225 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] The West German athletes, or more correctly the West German Olympic movement, has said "now" to the Moscow Olympic games. In Vienna, Jean Francois-Poncet commented on the current stand of the Western countries and in particular that taken by the Germans in relation to that of other countries and, of course, the French stand. Robert Dennis interviewed the French foreign affairs minister: [begin Francois-Poncet recording] I had the opportunity to tell Mr Muskie that as regards the business of participation in the Olympic games, the French Government has ruled--moreover in accordance with article 36 of the Olympic Charter--that the matter is the responsibility of our National Olympic Committee. It is up to it to make a decision and it has done so. It remains to be seen whether, in the light of decisions that other countries will make--decisions that will enable it to be determined if the games are genuinely representative or not, if they are indeed Olympic or not--our committee will then reexamine the matter before sending our athletes to Moscow. In any case, it is up to it to decide. This is what I explained to Mr Muskie. [end recording]

French, Austrian Mideast Views Similar

[Georg Hoffmann-Ostenhof report on interview with French Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet in Vienna--no date given, presumably 15 or 16 May 1980]

[Text] "Our analyses of the political situation in the Middle East are very similar," said French Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet in an interview with ARBEITER-ZEITUNG at the French [ambassador's] residence after having talked with Chancellor Kreisky for about 1 hour at the Vienna State Opera. The French career diplomat seemed impressed by Kreisky's being so well informed about the situation in the Middle East.

He declared that the PLO was a representative partner for talks with the French Government, too, and that it takes the position that the PLO should participate in negotiations. Moreover, Paris recognizes the Palestinian people's right to self-determination. However, formal recognition of the PLO is not anticipated as long as it has not been confirmed by elections, for which of course the prerequisites would still have to be created. Francois-Poncet added that he and Kreisky also held similar views on the Iranian problem.

Its "solid relations with the Soviet Union" over a period of 15 years make France, according to Francois-Poncet, a country that "has stood at the cradle of the policy of detente." Francois-Poncet regretted the grave blow dealt to the policy of detente by the intervention in Afghanistan, but said: "France cannot resign on account of a relapse into the climate of cold war. That is why we have kept up the dialogue with the USSR leadership." Francois-Poncet does not regard Kabul's initiative for solving the Afghanistan crisis as a "new element," noting particularly that it has failed to broach the questions of the right to self-determination and of troop withdrawals.

And, in conclusion, a compliment for Austria: "Austria is playing a useful role in the controversy between East and West, in the Middle East and in the North-South conflict."

KREISKY VIEWS MIDEAST PROBLEMS, SOLUTIONS

JN170950 Amman AD-DUSTUR in Arabic 17 May 80 pp 1, 14

[Interview given by Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky to AD-DUSTUR correspondent in Vienna (Judith Keiber)--date not given]

[Excerpts] Question: Your Excellency: Why has the Palestinian issue started to polarize the attention of global public opinion in a world abounding with other problems and crises that seem more important to some people?

Answer: The Palestinian issue must be viewed from an ethical angle. We oppose the Soviet actions in Afghanistan. What is applied to Afghanistan must be applied to the Palestinian issue. How could we remain silent over Israel's occupation of the West Bank if we are opposing the occupation of Afghanistan by foreign troops? How could we oppose the hegemony imposed by a superpower on a weak people if we accept such a status quo imposed by Israel? When I say this to the Israelis, they get annoyed because they think that they have the highest political ethics, whereas they do not.

Question: The Israelis always reply to the calls for recognition of the PLO by saying that they cannot deal with a group which is dedicated to wiping them out. On what bases do you believe Israel would agree to negotiate with the PLO?

Answer: First I have to point out that we recently saw the peaceful ending of a bloody conflict in Africa. This conflict was full of terrorism and various forms of violence. What happened is that the leadership in Zimbabwe was changed overnight. A solution was reached among a people who are of a lower cultural and educational standard than that of the Middle East peoples.

Secondly, I would also like to say that so long as the present Israeli Government remains in power there will not be a chance of achieving a solution. The political philosophy of Begin's government opposes any peaceful solution with the Arabs if it does not accept Israel's hegemony. Such a philosophy cannot constitute a basis for peace. Therefore, I believe that there must be a political change in Israel. This change will be in line with the feelings of the Israelis who want peace now.

Question: There is a lot of talk these days about a European initiative to replace Camp David. What are the steps that you have already taken and how serious is this European initiative, and is it actually the fruit of coordinated action?

Answer: I have no knowledge whatsoever about this European initiative. I cannot see how this initiative could succeed because the European countries were quite late in defining their stands on the Middle East.

Question: Do you believe that an historical settlement which is necessary for achieving coexistence between Israel and the Arabs could, at the same time, achieve Israel's security demands and the national aspirations of the Palestinian people?

Answer: Of course both can be achieved. I am not asking for the disarmament of the Israeli Army. Israel still has one of the strongest armies in the world.

Question: Some people believe that stability in the Middle East lies in preserving the current situation at a time when the area is passing through rapid political, social and economic transformations. Should the West preserve the status quo or should it cope with the changes?

Answer: I do not believe that the West can control developments in the Middle East. This was very obvious in Iran when tens of thousands of U.S. experts and agents failed to control the events there. There was a huge U.S. military presence in Vietnam and look at the result.

Question: From your point of view, what is the required stand?

Answer: Not to intervene in others' affairs and to work to achieve a solution of the Middle East problem and others in the manner of the SALT II treaty. This is the only available way. In the absence of solutions, a serious cold war atmosphere would emerge; I couldn't predict how long this would last and in what directions its destructive impact would fall.

CPSU CENTRAL COMMITTEE DELEGATION VISITS KPOe

AU191837 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 16 May 80 p 4

[Statement on CPSU Central Committee delegations' visit to Austrian Communist Party [KPOe] 7-14 May 1980]

[Text] Vienna--At the invitation of the Austrian Communist Party, a delegation of the CPSU Central Committee visited Austria from 7-14 May 1980. It consisted of Comrade B.I. Stukalin, member of the CPSU Central Committee and chairman of the USSR State Committee for Publishing Houses, Printing Plants and Book Trade; Comrade I.P. Bykova, secretary of the CPSU Perm Oblast; and Comrade Yu. D. Koshelev, responsible staff worker of the CPSU Central Committee.

In addition to Vienna, the delegation visited the provinces of Upper Austria, Salzburg and Lower Austria. The delegates had talks with KPOe activists, acquainted themselves with the work of the party activists and attended a commemoration rally at the Mauthausen former concentration camp and a mourning ceremony for fallen soldiers and officers of the Soviet Army at the Linz-St. Martin Cemetary, where they laid wreaths. On 13 May the delegation also attended the KPOe Central Committee's festive meeting in Vienna on the occasion of the 35th anniversary of Austria's liberation from Hitlerite fascism and of the 25th anniversary of the signing of the State Treaty.

The delegation had talks at the KPOe Central Committee headquarters. On the Austrian side the talks were attended by Comrades Franz Muhri, chairman of the KPOe; Erwin Scharf, Politburo member and secretary of the Central Committee; Johann Steiner, member of the Central Committee Secretariat and head of the foreign relations department of the KPOe Central Committee; as well as Comrade Heinz Zaslawski, member of the Central Committee and director of the Globus Publishing House.

During this meeting, which passed in a friendly atmosphere, representatives of the CPSU reported on the self-sacrificing work of the Soviet people who successfully implement the decisions of the 25th CPSU Congress. They stressed that the unchangeable goal of the foreign policy of the CPSU and of the Soviet state is to safeguard and strengthen peace throughout the world, ease international tensions and prevent the danger of a new world war.

The Austrian comrades informed the CPSU delegation of the KPOe's struggle for the defense of the interests, of the political and social achievements of the workers class and of all working people of our country. They stressed their full support for the Leninist foreign policy of the USSR, which complies with the expectations of all peoples in the world. Both sides agreed that the struggle to consolidate European security, for peace and international cooperation and the efforts to further develop friendly relations between the Soviet and the Austrian people must be continued. [paragraph continues]

The representatives of the CPSU welcomed the struggle waged by the communists in Austria for compliance with the State Treaty stipulations and to strengthen their country's neutrality, the struggle waged against all manifestations of neo-fascism and to strengthen peace and security in Europe.

Before their departure from Austria the members of the delegation visited the graves of the fallen soldiers and officers of the Soviet Army in Vienna as well and the grave of Comrade Johann Koplnig, chairman of the KPOe, where they laid floral wreaths.

KIRCHSCHLAEGER REELECTED PRESIDENT WITH 79.9 PERCENT OF VOTE

[Special DIE PRESSE report]

[Summary] On 18 May Austrian President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger was reelected with 79.9 percent of the valid votes. The total number of eligible voters was 5,215,894; the turnout was 91.6 percent; the total of votes cast was 4,779,049; the total of valid votes 4,430,888; invalid votes 7.3 percent. Kirchschlaeger received 3,538,748 votes (79.9 percent), Gredler 751,399 votes (17.0 percent), and Burger 140,741 votes (3.2 percent).

In an initial comment after his reelection, President Kirchschlaeger declared that there would be virtually no change in his administration of office, and he praised the Austrian People's Party's [DeVP] decision not to nominate a candidate of its own as very democratic. Chancellor Kreisky termed the election outcome proof of the voters confidence in the president and attributed the votes cast for NDP [National Democratic Party] Chairman Burger partly to "old Nazis who simply did not go to the polls in the past." DeVP Chairman Mock described the outcome of the elections as proof that the party's decision not to nominate a candidate of its own had been right. He added, however, that this decision was made only because of the special circumstances, and would remain the exception to the rule.

BRIEFS

REPORTAGE ON OFFICIAL VISIT OF MEXICAN PRESIDENT LOPEZ PORTILLO

Received by Carstens

LD191232 Hamburg DPA in German 1106 GMT 19 May 80

[Excerpts] Bonn--Hammerschmidt--Federal President Karl Carstens received Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo in Bonn today for an exchange of views. Afterwards, Carstens gave a luncheon for Lopez Portillo.

The German section of Amnesty International has, in a message, called on the Mexican president to give his personal support to the release of political prisoners and for clarification of the fate of persons missing in his country. In a press statement published today, the section points to the "diverse and brutal violations of fundamental human rights in Mexico." It was "deeply concerned" about the fate of the missing persons who number at least 300.

Cultural, Economic Ties Discussed

LD191520 Hamburg DPA in German 1424 GMT 19 May 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--In Bonn today Federal President Karl Carstens and Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo underlined the common desire for a deepening of economic and cultural relations between the Federal Republic and Mexico. A spokesman for the president's office stated that, after a 45-minute exchange of views between the two heads of state, Lopez Portillo came out in favor not only of an increased exchange of goods but also of greater investment by West German businessmen in Mexico.

Carstens and his Mexican guest, who arrived this morning in Bonn on a 4-day state visit, also agreed that world peace must be safeguarded. Lopez Portillo feels that every attempt should be made to prevent a further confrontation between the two great powers, the United States and the Soviet Union. The federal president stressed that the Federal Republic--in view of the special situation of divided Germany--has a "vital interest" in the maintenance of peace.

Genscher and Mexican Foreign Minister Jorge Castaneda, who is accompanying his president, signed two agreements today on promoting economic and scientific-technological relations between the Federal Republic and Mexico. In the second agreement the two contracting partners undertake to host and give advanced training to up to 45 technicians and scientists. The costs incurred in each case will be covered by the host government. The preliminary selection of German applicants will be made by the Carl-Duisberg Society, that of the Mexican applicants by the National Council for Science and Technology (Conacyt). The agreement extends for a further 3 years an agreement which expired in 1980.

As regards the desire for closer cooperation between Mexico and the Federal Republic, Lopez Portillo is primarily interested in the areas of industrial ports and regional industrial centers, the steel industry, petrochemical and chemical industries. As far as Bonn is concerned, the oil-rich Latin American country is an important factor in securing energy and raw material imports.

During a dinner speech this evening Carstens said that Lopez Portillo, as president of one of the countries richest in oil, is pursuing a responsible oil policy and has put forward a far-sighted world energy plan. This is based on the joint responsibility carried by industrial, developing and raw material countries for the future of mankind. "All this fills us with respect and with hope," the federal president said. He expressed pleasure that Mexico is pursuing a stabilizing policy in Latin America. The Federal Republic is ready to support it both directly and through the European Community.

GENSCHER DISCUSSES SCHMIDT'S MOSCOW VISIT WITH SOVIET ENVOY

LD191653 Hamburg DPA in German 1543 GMT 19 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today received the Soviet ambassador in Bonn, Vladimir Semenov, for a discussion about Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's planned visit to Moscow. According to Foreign Office spokesman Juergen Sudhoff after the meeting, the discussion dealt essentially with questions regarding the date.

The spokesman said that Schmidt and Genscher already met over the weekend for an extensive discussion on the subject. It is presumed in Bonn that the chancellor and federal foreign minister will not make their joint trip to Moscow until after the world economic summit in Venice and the NATO conference in Ankara [words indistinct].

GISCARD-BREZHNEV TALKS WELCOMED; NO 'IRRITATION' FROM SCHMIDT

LD191426 Hamburg DPA in German 1319 GMT 19 May 80

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government today welcomed French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's meeting Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev in Warsaw as an initiative contributing toward restoring the disrupted dialogue between West and East.

Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling today stressed to the press that Bonn also positively assessed the initiative of Polish party chief Edward Gierek who arranged the meeting. In Belgrade, on the sidelines of Tito's funeral, Schmidt and Gierek had agreed on the need to speak with one another again. Boelling said that Giscard had informed the federal chancellor on Sunday morning of his plans to make the trip. Giscard had promised Schmidt to inform him "very speedily" on what was discussed in Warsaw by way of a competent member of the French Government.

Boelling confirmed that Schmidt and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher would visit Moscow. Boelling said "it is our political intention that this visit by Schmidt and Genscher and talks with the Soviet leadership contribute to overcoming the silence." Now that the process of talks has gotten underway, no time should be lost. Boelling again gave no definite date for the chancellor's trip to Moscow, but said that a date after the world economic summit, fixed for the end of June in Venice, was possible. According to information in Bonn, Guenther van Well, state secretary in the Foreign Office, will probably visit the Soviet capital immediately after Whitsun to prepare for Schmidt's visit.

Boelling was at pains to allay the impression that the chancellor was annoyed at Giscard's delay in informing him. "We have no (?reason) at all for complaint," assured the government spokesman. There was "not even a hint of irritation" on the part of the chancellor. Boelling said his understanding was that the French president's trip was prepared at such short notice that it was only on Sunday that Giscard had the necessary information available to brief the chancellor.

Dealing with Giscard's surprise visit to Warsaw, held even before the chancellor's planned visit to Moscow, the government spokesman said that on this issue it is not a matter of who "as it were, is first" in getting the East-West dialogue started again.

DIE WELT Report

DW200943 Bonn DIE WELT in German 20 May 80 pp 1, 4

[Bernt Conrad report from Bonn]

[Text] Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt was informed by French President Giscard d'Estaing unusually late--just a few hours prior to his departure--about the planned meeting with Brezhnev. Yet Schmidt had State Secretary Boelling say yesterday: "The chancellor is not irritated; we welcome and support the initiative of the French president."

When on Sunday complaints by other European Community members were heard from the Naples session of the foreign ministers about a lack of consultations with Paris, some people first assumed that the Federal Government, as a "privileged partner" of Giscard d'Estaing, had been secretly informed beforehand about the blitz visit to Warsaw. But that impression was wrong. Up to this weekend the chancellor and the federal foreign minister had seen only news agency reports but no direct indications from Paris.

On Friday morning at a 2-hour breakfast between State Secretary Muskie (United States), Foreign Ministers Francois-Poncet (France), Lord Carrington (Great Britain) and Genscher (FRG) in Vienna, the Frenchman had not hinted at the plans of his president. Genscher was the more baffled when a news agency report was passed to him by his aides during a talk with Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko with the headline "Giscard Will Meet Brezhnev in Warsaw." Neither Gromyko nor Genscher touched on that issue, but a remark by Gromyko that Brezhnev had just returned from Warsaw to Moscow created the impression with the federal foreign minister that the news agency report must have been wrong.

One day later Francois-Poncet informed his Foreign Ministry colleagues of the European Community in Naples. Chancellor Schmidt was let in on it Sunday morning by Giscard d'Estaing in a telephone call. Thereafter Schmidt gave him his political blessing.

Why did Giscard d'Estaing leave even his friend Schmidt in the dark for so long? Government Spokesman Boelling assumed yesterday that it was probably a visit planned on very short notice. "If the French Government had planned such a meeting a long time ago, we would have been informed in due time." Upon insistent questions at the federal press conference Boelling added: "One cannot view the issue of consultations schematically. We assess the visit positively. It is an important contribution to the revival of a relationship of dialogue between East and West."

Upon orders of the chancellor he thus indicated the tone with which almost all Bonn government and coalition politicians have reacted to the surprising initiative by Giscard d'Estaing. Only SPD Federal Manager Bahr regretted that this had shown communication difficulties between France and its Western partners. But he also termed the visit as useful on principle. Foreign Minister Genscher objected to the assumption that Giscard d'Estaing's independent action might steal some of the glamour from the chancellor's planned visit to Moscow. He pointed out that first, the French president was conducting the talk with Brezhnev on the basis of common Western positions so that this was therefore not an independent action; second, it is not a matter of developing glamour but of making a contribution to a peaceful solution of conflicts. "And I must frankly say in this connection that I would agree with everybody who acts according to the same principles and with the same aims in mind."

Bonn government politicians believe that the visit by Giscard d'Estaing has one advantage at any rate--that possible American objections to Schmidt's visit to Moscow could be softened this way. The same applies to critics in the Federal Republic.

According to a statement by Boelling, Giscard d'Estaing has agreed that the chancellor will be informed on the results of the Warsaw talks soon after their conclusion by a competent French Government politician.

PRESS ASSESSES GROMYKO-GISCARD MEETING IN WARSAW

DW191034 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0500 GMT 19 May 80

[Press review]

[Text] FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes about the summit meeting between Brezhnev and Giscard d'Estaing at Wilanow Castle near Warsaw: With regard to the meeting between Brezhnev and Giscard in Poland, only the secrecy of its preparation was surprising. The event itself was in the air because both persons involved were most interested in it. In these months of Afghanistan, Brezhnev can very well use pictures showing him shaking hands with a Western statesman. In this way he looks positive to the public; he looks interested in the welfare of the world while Carter stands there an an opponent of detente, as somebody who is obsessed by his reelection. On the other hand, Giscard d'Estaing introduces France as a big power in the game. Would Brezhnev accept a small power for talks among equals? In addition he has overtaken Schmidt who also definitely wants to talk to Brezhnev.

The Bonn daily DIE WELT notes: The Kremlin wants to cause divergence in the West and split it up. While Brezhnev or Gromyko in Vienna act as the natural spokesmen of the entire East bloc, the Americans are supposed to be limited to themselves only. On Friday in Vienna, while Genscher could not even name a date for Schmidt's visit to Moscow, the French had already caught up with the German federal chancellor like the hedgehog caught up with the rabbit in the well-known fairy tale. The Soviets gave Giscard d'Estaing first place, probably also to make Schmidt more prepared to grant concessions. That also belongs to the old Kremlin strategy: heating up a small rivalry between the two most important continental European powers.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG is of a similar opinion: The meeting in Wilanow is a slap in the face for the Federal Republic, which obviously is no longer considered in Moscow as the main partner of detente policy. Brezhnev has made it possible for Giscard d'Estaing to overtake Schmidt in resuming the East-West dialogue, and the consequences of this move will be seen soon. Bonn must think about whether the Moscow signal is "only" a shrill welcome for Schmidt or whether it is already an indirect rejection of his visit to the Kremlin. The Soviets have taken revenge for the Olympic boycott.

Bonn's GENERAL-ANZEIGER considers the following: It has been noted with relief everywhere in the world that the American-Soviet dialogue was resumed in Vienna. Although no progress in the matter was achieved between Muskie and Gromyko, as was to be expected, there is hope again--after the total disruption of communications between the superpowers because of Afghanistan--that the intentions of the other side will not be dangerously misinterpreted. He who considers contacts between West and East as particularly necessary in these difficult times will not, from the very beginning, term the mysterious blitz conference between Valery Giscard d'Estaing, Leonid Brezhnev and Edward Gierek near Warsaw as appropriate. And yet several reasons for irritation have been created by the independent French action.

In the opinion of KIELER NACHRICHTEN this first summit-level meeting between East and West since the Afghanistan crisis arouses hopes for a relaxation of the dangerously rigid positions, even if this relaxation is only gradual. People say that for this reason it would be nonsense for there to be an increase in those voices, which are already audible, that claim that Giscard d'Estaing probably wanted to steal Schmidt's show.

Election campaigning is out of place here. Under the spell of such a precarious world political situation it does not make any difference who of the influential political leaders is the first to talk with the other side.

The LUDWIGSHAFEN RHEINPFALZ states: It is obvious that Moscow's guiding line would like to blot out, would like everyone to forget the status quo, that is to say, the situation in Afghanistan. This is also what accounts for the qustion mark behind the talks which Giscard d'Estaing will have with Soviet head of party and state Brezhnev today. Nobody will be so foolish as to hope that Moscow will give up positions just to pleace Giscard d'Estaing. Bonn will have to judge its visiting plans for the chancellor, which it has been pursuing with abandon, by the results of the talks in Wilanow. And, if necessary, this might also result in a cancellation.

'Race to Moscow' Scored

DW200833 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 9 May 80 p 10

[Article signed g-n.: "Friend Valery"]

[Text] The chancellor has reason to feel fooled. For weeks Schmidt has made the greatest efforts to get a "dialogue" going with Moscow. Having painted the sinister backdrop with scenes from the prelude to World War I, he would have liked to appear on the scene as the one who "can talk to the Russians." And then he is beaten to it by friend Valery, without saying a word--until just a few hours prior to his departure. Had the Americans acted like that behind the back of the Allies what complaints there would have been about "a lack of consultations." But now the chancellor is bravely biting his lip. In the words of a Kissinger statement made some time ago, "a race by the Europeans to Msocow" has developed again. Everyone thinks he is the better crisis manager. The "dialogue with Moscow" must be held. But one also can exchange messages without words. The most urgent message in "the dialogue with Moscow" would be visible samples of European agreement with America, with the will to withstand Soviet expansion and to obtain the necessary but missing means for that as quickly as possible.

FORMER GDR CITIZEN ARRESTED FOR INTELLIGENCE ACTIVITIES

LD191356 Hamburg DPA in German 1207 GMT 19 May 80

[Text] Karlsruhe--The Federal Prosecutor's Office has brought an indictment against 44-year-old diplomat Gerhard Arnold at the highest regional court in Munich, accusing him of intelligence activities, Karlsruhe authorities announced today.

The Federal Prosecutor's Office said that Arnold had been arrested on the basis of statements made by Werner Stiller, former lieutenant at the GDR Ministry for State Security (MFS), who fled to the FRG in January 1979. The prosecution alleges that Arnold, following his resettlement from the GDR in the FRG in 1960, supplied electronic data intelligence and other information to the MFS between June 1960 and November 1978.

The accused is said to have had several meetings each year with MFS officers in the Federal Republic, in East Berlin as well as in East and West bloc countries. According to the prosecution, Arnold's activities for the MFS have meant "considerable developmental cost savings for the GDR's economy."

The Karlsruhe authorities said further that Arnold had been temporarily detained on 21 January 1979 and kept in custody until 19 October 1979 by virtue of an arrest warrant issued by the magistrate of the Federal High Court.

Arnold, who has confessed, has been released on bail.

GISCARD-BREZHNEV TALKS IN POLAND END

LD191802 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 19 May 80

[Excerpt] Today's French-Soviet summit in Warsaw was a very long one since, prolonged by a working lunch, it lasted for a total of 5 hours. As a matter of fact, Mr Giscard d'Estaing has proposed a summit of the main world powers in 1981, a great conference aimed at calming down international tension. With regard to Afghanistan, Mr Giscard d'Estaing could only note the fact that Paris and Moscow were not on the same wavelength. [Begin Giscard recording] In this connection, the talks have confirmed the face that there was the will to seek a political solution to this problem permitting the evacuation of the Soviet Armed Forces from Afghanistan. (?I say that this is) just an indication. The coming months will enable us to judge this indication. As for the way to examine the causes of international tension, I have indicated to Mr Brezhnev my being in favor of a summit of the main leaders. The political agenda for 1980 prevents holding such a summit before next year. In my opinion, it would be a summit of the main leaders. And if we want it to be held in conditions that would permit first effectively analyzing and then eliminating the main causes of tension in the world, then nothing and no initiative must, from now on and until then, come and increase existing tensions. [end recording]

Giscard on Talks

XX192021 Paris AFP in English 2020 GMT 19 May 80

[Text] Saxon-Sion, France, 10 May (AFP)--President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, who was the dinner guest today of the 96 inhabitants of this northeastern French village, described his summit meeting earlier in Warsaw with Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev as "useful" and "a necessity" because of the "gravity of the international situation."

Mr Giscard d'Estaing, who came here directly from Poland, said that "the absence of communications creates misunderstandings" and that for several months he had felt the need for contacts at a high level. He said that the Soviet leader "listened with close attention" to his statement of the reactions of the West and of France to recent events, especially the Kremlin's intervention in Afghanistan. The president said that he had not expected a major success but that he only sought to open up channels of communication. He indicated that a meeting of top world leaders, who are primarily responsible for the search for peace and international detente, might be held next year.

Mr Giscard d'Estaing was celebrating the sixth anniversary of his election to the presidency. In 1974, 81 per cent of the villagers voted for him.

The first "authorized" Soviet comment on the summit meeting was broadcast late today on the Second French Television channel. In an interview, Soviet television commentator Valentin Zorin said the meeting "was an historic event of such a nature that it will later appear in the history books." "It seems to me," Mr Zorin added, "that this meeting could mark the beginning of the very important process of restoring dialogue between East and West."

NATURAL GAS DEAL ALLEGEDLY NEGOTIATED WITH USSR

LD191307 Paris FRANCE-SOIR IN French 12 May 80 pp 1, 5

[Laurent Munnich report: "USSR Joins Gas Battle"]

[Excerpt] Is natural gas about to become a political and economic weapon in the same way as oil? One is tempted to believe so, judging from the subtle diplomatic games being played by producers and consumers of this valuable fuel and the use they are making of this new weapon.

Having ensured its oil supplies from the Arab emirates, France is now searching for gas. And this time, despite the "economic quarantine" which the West is trying to impose on it, we are turning to the USSR.

For several weeks now Gaz de France has been conducting talks with the Soviet body Soyuzgazeksport to negotiate the purchase of a very substantial quantity of natural gas.

It must be acknowledged that the Soviet proposals are very attractive. Now that Algeria has just suspended all supplies to France and has announced outright a 200-percent increase in its gas prices ($6.11) and the Netherlands is threatening to increase its gas prices 50 percent ($4.5), the Soviets would agree to supply their gas at a price close to the present Dutch price ($3).

Need for Currency

The Gaz de France management hopes, if it concludes this deal, that by 1985 our supplies will be guaranteed.

What is prompting the Soviets to sell off their gas? On the one hand, a chronic need for foreign currency dissuades them from being too demanding. On the other hand, at a time when the West is boycotting the Olympics and mobilizing to take economic reprisals against the USSR, Moscow cannot be unwilling to show the entire world that it is still a viable trade partner, even able to offer particularly attractive economic terms and that it is therefore necessary to come to an arrangement. If everything proceeds as Gaz de France and Moscow hope, by 1985 Moscow will therefore have increased its natural gas supplies to France some 70 percent.

LE FIGARO CALLS FOR GOVERNMENT REJECTION OF OLYMPICS

LD200755 Paris LE FIGARO in French 16 May 80 pp 1, 17

[Guy Lagorce article: "The Decisive Refusal"]

[Text] The FRG Olympic Committee yesterday decided not to send West German athletes to the Moscow games.

Without the United States, West Germany, Canada, China, and Japan (among some 40 other nations), it is clear that the games are now only a caricature of what they have been since 1896, when they were revived by Baron Pierre de Coubertin. It is clear that 60 percent of the medals which will be distributed in Moscow will no longer have any value. This is particularly true in the essential sports of track and field, swimming and gymnastics.

What will become of France in all this? Its sporting body, aside from equestrianism and marksmanship, has said yes to Moscow while refraining from sending the official acceptance to the organizers, and while taking the precaution of saying that "the vocation of the Olympic games is to assemble the world sporting elite." Clearly there is no question of going to Moscow to glean "chocolate medals"...as is the case at present.

On 12 May Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet said: "French diplomacy has indicated that the Olympic games are a sporting event on which the athletes have to take a decision, but it is true that their decision should now take account of certain facts which are the result of other countries' political decisions."

This should be compared to the statement which Youth and Sports Minister Jean-Pierre Soisson made to us in January: "Yes to Olympic games, no to a spartakiad."

Therefore all doors are still open on both the political and sporting planes to avoid the trap laid by Moscow and into which France, unlike Germany, has nearly fallen for lack of clear directives.

It seems that the French sporting body's provisional decision to go to Moscow is simply the decision of people whose vocation is to be elected spokesman for the athletes. The athletes--it is easy to understand them in view of the closed environment in which their self-discipline forces them to live--are not very inclined to enter into considerations foreign to their own technical concerns.

They are now brutally faced with an upheaval which is upsetting them--a world which is not theirs because they are systematically kept apart from anything which is not relevant to their own world.

For instance, they do not know that, right from the start, the Kremlin has considered that holding the Olympic games in Moscow was above all for the Soviets "the whole world's recognition of the soundness of our international policy in favor of detente and peace."

They do not know that they were political hostages right from the start and that, the more they struggled "to separate politics from sport," the more they objectively promoted the opposite by backing the Kremlin's policy, especially in the Third World's eyes.

What separates them from their German counterparts is not their fundamental virtue or lack of virtue but simply the way in which their government has acted. The Bonn government was not afraid of tackling the issue and placing the debate in its rightful place and level, in other words very high in the royal squares of the world chessboard--squares which we highlighted in these columns right from the start of the "Olympic affair." The time has come for us to face the question too. We are justified in expecting coherent decisions from the government in the next few days.

LE MONDE SEES EC 'ON SAME WAVELENGTH' OVER IRAN

LD191507 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 May 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Europe's Caution"]

[Text] Yes, but.... Diplomats abound in such formulas, which Mr Giscard d'Estaing once summed up in a famous epitome to conceal their contradictions. In times of crisis the Europeans need them: How can you go and yet not go to the Olympics? How can the Soviets be driven out of Afghanistan without risking a trial of strength? How can you balance patience against firmness in Iran?

Let us leave aside the Moscow Olympics, which will not leave the French Government to play Pontius Pilate forever. Their spectacular nature stimulates people's passions and conceals the fact that the essential issue lies elsewhere. The essential issue is the Afghan crisis, whose military implications are being considered by the foreign and defense ministers of the NATO countries (excluding France). But in this case also it is not what is discussed in Brussels that will determine the future. The future depends on the Afghans' capacity to resist the Soviets and the West's desire to supply them with the means to do so. It would be better for NATO to say nothing about this.

There remains the hostages affair, which complicates and exacerbates the tension in Central Asia and forces European backs against the wall. On 13 January at the Security Council meeting, Paris and London, with the Nine's blessing, approved the U.S. program of sanctions against Tehran. [paragraph continues]

On 22 April, following a call to order from Mr Carter, the Nine halted certain palliatives and decided to adopt real sanctions on 17 May "unless any decisive progress toward the hostages' release has been made by them." On that date they will meet again in Naples without any progress having been made--quite the contrary. Although Mr Carter has declared himself confident of their determination, it is by no means evident that they are preparing to adopt any drastic sanctions. Of course, the necessary legislation for an embargo has been passed, but some countries have still not implemented the April decisions. The Italians have not reintroduced sanctions against Iran; the Japanese (associated with European policy) are reluctant to impose them on their businessmen. The reduction of embassy staffs has had practically no effect.

For once, the Nine--including Britain, which is supposed to be close to Washington--are all on the same wavelength. They all believe that "something must be done," on the one hand, to make the Iranians realize the unacceptability of holding the hostages and, on the other, to dissuade the Americans from undertaking any other military action. Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington was insistent on this point during his Washington visit. But they are also aware that there is no responsible form of authority in Tehran, and they are convinced that strict sanctions would prompt a "holy war" in Iran against the West, which would throw the country into the Soviets' arms.

The Europeans therefore believe that the wise course of action would be to wait for the time being for the situation to settle, while maintaining some degree of pressure on Tehran. In Naples they will confirm their decision to sign no further trade contracts with Tehran and must--though this will be more difficult--specify their attitude toward completing current contracts.

The excuse for this default of course, lies in Washington's lack of consistency. But, for this very reason, should not the Nine seize this opportunity to establish their own policy and to state uninhibitedly what, in this connection, they consider inopportune and what they consider necessary?

PCF'S GREMETZ HAILS 'USEFUL, CONSTRUCTIVE' PARIS CP MEETING

LD151415 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 9 May 80 pp 1, 6

[Article by PCF Politburo member Maxime Gremetz: "A Useful and Constructive Meeting"]

[Text] The great national and international interest aroused by the recent European communist and workers parties' meeting in Paris has answered the speculations of all kinds and from various quarters launched increasingly during its preparation. The presence of more than 200 journalists during the meeting with the press and the coverage given to the initiative by 41 French and foreign radio and television stations and by the main newspapers in some 40 countries--for an initiative portrayed as pointless and allegedly "abortive," that is a lot of people!

Some people predicted a poorly attended, rather insignificant meeting bearing witness to a so-called cold dogmatic regression by a few parties clearly "tied" to Moscow. The press organs, initially caught unawares by the importance and real content of the initiative, tried to distort its meaning, and some did not hesitate to resort to the crudest of lies. For instance, with regard to the Soviet delegation's speech LE MONDE carried the headline: "No Third Path Between Warsaw Pact Policy and NATO Policy." This sentence did not appear in the speech in question, as was shown by the passage published a few lines later! There are other such examples.

Indeed, as we had hoped when we and our Polish comrades proposed holding such a meeting, it is now clear that it was useful and constructive.

Let us recall the objective we had set: to have an exchange of views among European communist and workers parties on a major current issue: peace and disarmament--an exchange of views concluded by an appeal to the peoples of Europe urging them to resolutely take control of the defense of peace and the necessary struggle for disarmament. This objective has been attained: The draft appeal submitted 1 month in advance was adopted after being amended following a fruitful discussion.

For the first time we had a specific example of those "new relations among communist parties" for which we decided to take determined action at our 22d congress. Finally, breaking with a style of "conference" which, as we said in Berlin in 1976, no longer seems to us to correspond to the needs of our age--since any elaboration of a strategy common to all the parties is out of the question--the Paris meeting enabled the parties who deemed it useful to do so to exchange their opinions frankly and directly on a major current issue and to move on to action.

Far from leading to "alignment" with some "center," which we have many times said we have no intention of doing, the meeting bore witness to the diversity of the communist movement and enabled everybody to put forward his original approach to the questions discussed in a constructive spirit devoid of any polemics toward others. It is also in keeping with the kind of relations we hope to see established to strictly respect, as did all participants in the meeting, each party's sovereign decision to take part in the initiative or not. As we said, we have no intention of making this a criterion for our future relations.

It was therefore a useful meeting constituting a starting point and a springboard for a unitary action which is to be developed. Far from being a withdrawal by the communists into isolation--which a press always seeking our "decline" pretended to fear--the meeting provided the opportunity to adopt constructive proposals for action, objectives common to us and behind which all parties can unite. More than this, the prospect of rallying all peaceful forces was opened up by the meeting and by the appeal for struggle which it launched to every man and woman, whether communists, socialists, social democrats, Christians and followers of other faiths and whatever our nationality, convictions and lifestyles.

This demonstrates the irreplaceable contribution to the development of action made by the great organized forces and ideas which the communist parties represent. This action will be stimulated by the results of the meeting. Party initiatives and unitary initiatives will be able to be launched in each country. At the same time the meeting offers the possibility of holding an initiative in the coming period, the form and method of which are still to be specified, open to all the forces in Europe and enabling the broadest meeting and debate in the spirit of Helsinki and the Madrid meeting.

As the French delegation recalled, for our party the only valid criterion is action and the struggle for peace and disarmament.

This meeting contributes to that, and that is the essential point.

For our part we will resolutely implement all the proposals accepted and we are prepared to respond positively to any initiative in this direction.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE DISREGARDS CABINET, VOTES TO GO TO MOSCOW

WA201120 London REUTER in English 1113 GMT 20 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 20, REUTER--Italy's National Olympic Committee (CONI) today voted overwhelmingly to attend this summer's Moscow Olympics, ignoring government pressure to join the U.S.-led boycott of the event. The committee voted 29-2 in favor of attending. Three abstained.

Cabinet Against Official Participation

AU191535 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 19 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 19 (ANSA)--The Italian Cabinet decided today that Italian athletes will not take part officially in the Moscow summer Olympics.

Budget Minister Giorgio La Malfa disclosed that the government decision to not take part in the Olympic games is autonomous, leaving the National Olympic Committee (CONI), scheduled to meet tomorrow, free to decide in an equally autonomous manner. La Malfa added, however, that CONI will have to take into account that eventual attendance of Italian athletes at the Moscow games can in no way be official.

After the Cabinet meeting, Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo explained the meaning of the decision: Italy will not attend the games under official symbols. "This is a political assessment. CONI, however, in its meeting tomorrow is free to decide autonomously. Certainly," Colombo added, "the committee will have to be aware of the reasons behind the government decision. Should CONI decide differently, Italian athletes could go to the games without official symbols. If developments produce a normalization of the situation (in Afghanistan in the wake of the Soviet intervention) which induced Italy to take this position--but not partial developments--the decision could be reversed," Colombo concluded.

Other government ministers after the Cabinet meeting also stressed the link between the official Olympic boycott and the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

The official communique motivating the Italian decision linked it to the ongoing international tension said to result from the "Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the occupation of that country by the Soviet Armed Forces." The statement also stressed that the decision of a "very numerous" group of countries from all ranges of the international spectrum not to go to Moscow had removed the Olympic games' "universality and gravely prejudiced their sporting spirit and significance."

According to the Rome government, the Olympics cannot be seen "in isolation from the context of world events" justifying in this way an incompatibility between using the Italian flag at the games and the "Soviet military occupation of Afghanistan." The Cabinet also invited the Italian Olympic Committee (CONI) to consider the international situation "attentively" as well as the government's decision so as to adopt a decision "in conformity with the national interest."

In other points, the Italian Government voiced the hope that the Soviet Union would make timely moves to "modify the situation" and declared that it adopted its position "with regret" since it has no intention of committing "an act of hostility against any people or country, confirming its will for peace and detente." The Cabinet also agreed to put into effect the sanctions against Iran which the EEC foreign ministers decided in Naples yesterday.

CONI President on Cabinet Decisions

LD191929 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 19 May 80

[Gian Battista Fenu report]

[Excerpts] The Council of Ministers' communique was issued nearly 2 hours after the end of the session. The reason for this was that Prime Minister Cossiga waited for CONI President Franco Carraro to arrive, in order to personally inform him of the political attitude adopted by the government.

Leaving the seat of government, Carraro told us [begin Carraro recording]: In this connection, obviously I can tell you nothing because tomorrow the CONI National Council will meet in order to take a decision regarding the question of the Olympics. I wish, however, to thank Prime Minister Cossiga, and the entire Council of Ministers for the respect which they showed to the Italian National Olympic Committee and its autonomy, within the framework of their communique, both in form and in substance [end recording].

Party Reactions to Cabinet Stance

AU200922 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 20 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 20 (ANSA)--After the Rome government decision yesterday to not send an official delegation of Italian athletes to the summer Olympic games in Moscow and on the eve of the National Olympic Committee (CONI) decision on the matter of participation in the events, a series of pro and con reactions were registered.

The secretary of the Communist Party, Enrico Berlinguer, declared in the evening that, "the position adopted by the Italian Government against Italian participation in the Olympics is a real act of provocation and confirms its subservience to the current President of the United States." The head of the major party on the opposition benches then declared that he was surprised that the Socialist ministers went along with the decision, those, he pointed out, "who, as members of Parliament, had signed a document favoring participation." Berlinguer expressed hopes that CONI, in its ruling today, would "confirm its desire to participate in the games."

The secretary of the Proletarian Unity Party, Lucio Magri, took much the same tone to term the government decision "an extremely serious" one which should have required a debate in Parliament.

On the other side of the issue, the Republican Party secretary, Giovanni Spadolini, recalled that the Republicans were among the first to come out in favor of a boycott of the summer games and indicated the other European nations which had arrived at the same finding. "The conditions for resuming the road to detente," Spadolini said, "require an unequivocal line from the Western nations on the basic response to give to Soviet expansionism."

The small right-of-center Liberal Party, in an editorial appearing in this morning's edition of their daily, L'OPINIONE, took the view that "the decision made by the government, which we hope will be adopted by CONI, is the east political act of concrete disapproval possible for the Italian Government to express for the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan."

ECONOMIC EXPERTS NOTE IRAN SANCTIONS WILL HAVE LITTLE EFFECT

AU200914 Rome ANSA in English 0800 GMT 20 May 80

[Excerpt] Rome, May 20 (ANSA)--The trade sanctions to be applied against Iran by the nine member nations of the European Economic Community beginning Thursday in a further Western move designed to obtain the release of the American hostages held in Iran are not expected to severely effect Italian business, industry and personnel at work in the Southwest Asian state.

Economic analysts pointed out here Monday, the day after the decision to apply the sanctions was made by the EEC foreign ministers meeting in Naples, that almost all the trade contracts signed with Iran were wrapped up before the November 4 capture of the American hostages and will, therefore, be unaffected by the sanctions.

An Iranian Government decision to cut off oil shipments to the Community in the wake of the sanctions, these experts said, would only confirm the Iranian warning to Europe aired at the beginning of April when the Community nations first began debating falling in line with the United States sanctions.

Last year, Italy imported only two million 200 thousand tons of crude from Iran, a scant two percent of the nation's oil requirements and a resounding drop from the 14 million 500 thousand tons of Iranian crude bought in 1978.

COLOMBO COMMENTS ON HIS VIENNA TALKS, EASTERN BLOC

AU191240 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 19 May 80 p 3

[Andreas Unterberger report on an interview with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo at the Italian Embassy in Vienna; presumably on 16 or 17 May 1980]

[Excerpt] Interrupted by a telephone conversation with his Premier Cossiga, who is just now negotiating with Helmut Schmidt in Rome, the talk turns to an assessment of the Vienna talks. "One has the feeling that what was frozen through the crisis has been given a fresh impetus for revival through the human contacts here and that the talk between the individual countries has sprung up again. Perhaps in a cautious manner, but nevertheless it has sprung up."

Colombo's reaction to the latest initiatives of the communist countries is marked by skepticism. Regarding the plan for a world conference to settle crises he asks whether there is really an actual desire to solve the problems, or whether there is merely a pretense of such an intention. Regarding the new eastern Afghanistan plan, Colombo asks where there is a sovereign and independent government with which the neighbor countries could talk, and what international guarantees could be given for such an agreement.

Asked about criticism of the U.S. attitude, voiced recently in West Europe, Colombo quotes a piece of advice once given him by former British Prime Minister Wilson: "If you want to express criticism vis-a-vis an ally, you should go right ahead and do so. However, it is better to whisper this criticism in his ear." At the same time, Colombo criticizes the fact that in the face of the violation of Afghanistan's sovereignty, this country's invasion by foreign troops and, in the face of the hostage affair in Iran that has lasted for months, such intensive attention is being paid to individual decisions by the United States.

SOUTHERN MILITARY CHIEFS DISCUSS MOBILIZATION ARRANGEMENTS

LD151553 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 7 May 80 p 2

[Unattributed report: "Military Summit"]

[Text] Around 20 military chiefs from the various districts and military commands in the southern areas of Norway will end their annual Southern Defense Command summit on Wednesday. The participants have been discussing current questions of defense and emergency mobilization and individual chiefs have put forward their views on what can be done to improve the defense of southern Norway within the framework of a defense system based on rapid mobilization and subject to a tight economic situation.

"The biggest weakness is the inadequate air defenses within all branches of the defense forces. At the meeting dissatisfaction has been expressed that the authorities have still not reached a decision on the choice of an effective air defense system even though the purchase of the F-16 interceptor jets will gradually make some improvement in the situation," Commander in Chief of Southern Norway Lt Gen Kjell Borge-Hansen said at a press conference in Oslo on Tuesday.

Borge-Hansen made no attempt to hide the fact that NATO wants Norway to establish standing forces in southern Norway. In its proposals the defense commission recommended that southern Norway have its own emergency battalion, but this was not followed up by the Storting. "Nevertheless, mobilization arrangements for southern Norway have been publicized within NATO as an example of how a mobilization system could be set up and function," Borge-Hansen said.

The officers' meeting also expressed the desire to be able to draft individual mobilization units for frequent refresher exercises. A unit which has not been in training for many years takes longer to prepare for action in a possible mobilization.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE VOTES TO SEND TEAM TO MOSCOW

WA191820 London REUTER in English 1808 GMT 19 May 80

[Text] Stockholm, May 19, REUTER--Sweden's Olympic Committee voted unanimously today to send a team to the Moscow Olympics this summer, a committee spokesman said. The decision, reached after a meeting with athletes and sports leaders, was in line with Sweden's policy of not taking part in international boycotts or sanctions unless they are backed by the United Nations, he said.

FOREIGN MINISTER CLAIMS 'NO REASON' FOR TAKING CUBAN REFUGEES

LD151323 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET IN Swedish 13 May 80 p 5

[Unattributed report: "No Reason To Accept Cubans"]

[Text] The Cubans who fled to the Peruvian Embassy in Havana have been placed in other Spanish-speaking countries in Latin America and in the United States. There has therefore been no reason for Sweden to accept Cuban refugees, Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten stated during Riksdag question time on Monday. He added, however, that if the UN high commissioner for refugees were to propose that Sweden accept Cuban refugees, such a request would be dealt with by the immigration and naturalization board within the framework of the current refugee quota.

EMERGENCY DEBATE CALLED ON 'RETROACTIVE' ON SANCTIONS

LD191737 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1638 GMT 19 May 80

[By PA parliamentary staff]

[Excerpts] An emergency debate on retrospective sanctions against Iran will be held in the Commons tomorrow after a furious row in the House today when the government was accused of cheating and deception. The speaker, Mr George Thomas, granted the application for the debate from Labour MP, Mr Tan Dalyell, after a statement from Deputy Foreign Secretary Sir Ian Gilmour on the weekend decision by EEC ministers to impose sanctions, backdated to November 4, the date the American hostages were seized in Tehran. Confirmation of the government's line brought uproar from the Labour benches and expressions of grave disquiet from some Tory backbenchers, including former minister, Mr Teddy Taylor.

The 3-hour debate will be held tomorrow afternoon. Sir Ian's statement had been greeted with cries of "cheating" from Labour MPs who claimed they had been deceived last week when the government rushed through the Iran (temporary powers) bill giving new powers to impose sanctions. Shadow Foreign Secretary Mr Peter Shore insisted that ministers had "clearly indicated that existing contracts would be exempt, at least in the first stage. The decision to make sanctions retrospective to November 4 makes complete nonsense of the bill and last week's debate," he said. "The House and the country are now totally confused as to the government's sanctions policy."

Labour backbencher Mr David Winnick said angrily: "Many of us feel the government have cheated over when the sanctions have to be applied. And former Labour Cabinet minister, Mr David Ennals, accused the government of "going against the will of the House." Severe reservations also came from the Tory benches. Mr Bowen Wells, MP for Hertford and Stevenage, claimed that the retrospection "was not made plain in the House during the debate" last week. And Sir Nicholas Bonsor (Nantwich) warned: "The retrospective element how to be invoked against Iran is going to do enormous damage to British industry."

The emergency debate was called for by Mr Dalyell who said last month's trade figures showed exports to Iran for 54 million pounds. This was gradually approaching the annual total of 750 million pounds before the Iranian Revolution. British companies were now in danger of losing the good will of Iranian customers and losing contracts to Romania and East Germany. The nature of the sanctions announced by Sir Ian were quite different to those in the bill discussed last week. And the government was "honour bound" to bring in new legislation to cover the present situation. After Ulster Unionist Mr Enoch Powell pointed out that the new provisions could be enacted without debate in the Commons first, Mr Thomas said the application came within the guidelines necessary to bring about an emergency debate.

In the Lords, the foreign secretary, Lord Carrington, said the signs were "very mildly encouraging" over prospects for the release of the American hostages. "But we have been so often disappointed in the past about the mildly encouraging signs that I do not care to go into any greater detail."

The nine EEC countries had decided that sanctions should come into effect because they could not truthfully say that "decisive progress" had been made towards releasing the hostages. On the implementation of sanction, he said: "We intend to set up coordinating machinery among the Nine." There would also be coordination with other countries, such as Japan.

On problems over application of the sanctions to renewed contacts, the government would "look more closely" at the difficulties as they arose. On whether sanctions would succeed, Lord Carrington told Labour's Lord Shinwell: "time alone will tell."

Government Withdraws Retroactive Stance

LD192028 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1940 GMT 19 May 80

[Report by David Healey, PA political staff]

[Text] An emergency meeting of ministers under Mrs Thatcher at Number Ten decided tonight that the Iran sanctions orders would not after all apply retrospectively. Britan's partners in the Common Market who had decided the sanctions should apply to contracts signed since November 4 are being informed tonight. The dramatic climb down by the government came after the speaker, Mr George Thomas, had granted an emergency debate on the issue, to be taken tomorrow. There was no immediate change in the plan for a debate. The government's change of heart came after serious rumblings of discontent about the surprise retrospective aspect of the sanctions, not only from Labour but also Conservative MPs.

Government chief whip Mr Michael Jopling was at tonight's meeting presided over by the prime minister and attended also by the foreign secretary, Lord Carrington. Mr Jopling reported on the unrest among the Tory backbenchers which clearly surfaced during today's Commons exchanges after Deputy Foreign Secretary Sir Ian Gilmour had made a statement about the sanctions move agreed by the EEC foreign ministers at Naples over the weekend. The question MPs were asking was whether the government had conned backbenchers over previous assurances that they would not be backdated, or whether ministers had been railroaded into it by the other Common Market foreign ministers.

Whatever the truth, ministers evidently believed they ran the danger of failing to get the necessary orders through the Commons. These orders will be laid later this week, in time to bring them into force by Thursday, the deadline set by the EEC foreign ministers. They will give ministers powers to outlaw new trade deals with Iran. The government's decision tonight means that the sanctions will apply only to orders signed after the date the orders come into force--that is, this week. The view of ministers is that Britain, unlike most of the other Community countries--Denmark is believed to be the only other exception--needs legislation to implement the decision of the foreign ministers. This necessity to conduct sanctions policy in open public debate, means that unpopular aspects like the retrospective move, just cannot be got through. Opposition parties at Westminister were also being informed tonight of the government's decision on the issue.

Labour backbencher, Mr Tam Dalyell, who made the original application for an emergency debate, said tonight "I shall now consult my front bench, and parliamentary colleagues on whether it is necessary to go ahead with the debate." Mr Dalyell, under the rules for such emergency debates, is due to be the first speaker.

Ministers tonight acknowledge that the government's decision would take the steam out of any debate. The decision, it is was explained, was made mainly in response to protests from MPs. Hardly any senior members of the government were believed to be in favour of retrospective action. Ministers tonight did not expect any complaints from other Common Market countries over the decision.

The PA diplomatic correspondent, Tom McMullan, writes: Britain, however, is once again open to the allegation of being an unreliable member of the Community. Lord Carrington agreed to the unanimous decision at Naples only yesterday. But it was expected that other Community countries would accept the decision rather than put their own traders at a disadvantage. Ministers tonight did not attempt to disguise their view that the whole episode over sanctions against Iran has been "less than glorious". A major reason for the sanctions was to give the European countries more influence with the United States as part of the effort to have the hostages released.

Only last week American secretary of state, Mr Edmund Muskie, was urging the Europeans to go ahead with sanctions against Iran. Britain's decision threatened to worsen relations between the Europeans and the United States, which have already been under strain in recent months. As the United States complained of lack of support from her European allies, Britain in particular won praise from the President for the strength of her support. However, tonight Labour MPs were anything but contrite. One backbencher commented: "If the government wants to be a lackey to the United States so be it. But that is not a role for the House of Commons."

Later it became clear that the orders bringing in the sanctions may not after all be introduced by this Thursday. This is because the government's climb down tonight raises immense complications within the Common Market. The government clearly faces a difficult task in explaining tonight's decision to Britain's partners, and is bound to face recriminations over the affair.

FOREIGN OFFICE STUDIES UGANDA'S BINAISA PLEA FOR HELP

LD181645 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1547 GMT 18 May 80

[Text] The Foreign Office was today studying an appeal for help from ousted Uganda President Godfrey Binaisa, under close guard by Tanzanian troops at his residence in Entebee. And former Tory Cabinet Minister Mr Geoffrey Rippon said Britain should send troops to the trouble-torn country to ensure the safety of the ex-president, overthrown in a military coup last week. The appeal for help, addressed to Mrs Thatcher, was handed to the Foreign Office by a newspaper representative. A similar message was sent to President Carter.

But Whitehall officials said today it was not clear what was happening in Uganda or exactly what assistance Britain could give. Mr Binaisa apparently wants pressure put on President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania, whom he claims was behind the coup, to "see reason by withdrawing recognition from the rebel government."

Meanwhile, Mr Rippon said today that a "token force" of British troops should join other African Commonwealth forces in ensuring Mr Binaisa's safety and in making sure fair and free elections are held in December. And Britain should send a Cabinet minister to Uganda "within the next day or two" he added. Mr Rippon, speaking on BBC Radio, said Britain should provide token forces "in the same way as we did in Zimbabwe." "I think this must be part of a Commonwealth force in which the other African countries play their part."

Mr Rippon said there was no question of "our intervening directly", but Britain should "make it clear that we should now take a lead in trying to resolve the situation." And he urged the government to try to persuade President Nyerere to use his influence to ensure the protection of Mr Binaisa and others who may be detained. "I think the British Government should respond and respond positively," he said.

PORTUGUESE PRIME MINISTER RETURNING HOME AFTER 'MINOR' ACCIDENT

LD191224 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1100 GMT 19 May 80

[Excerpt] Here is a report from London by Fernando de Sousa: There has been a change in the prime minister's European tour: I have heard from the Portuguese delegation that the prime minister will be returning to Lisbon today. He is suffering from pain in the vertebral column and in one hand. This is the result of a minor collision yesterday between two of the cars transporting the Portuguese delegation from Heathrow Airport to central London. Contrary to what at one stage was rumored here in London the tour will not be cancelled. It will continue as programmed with Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs Freitas do Amaral heading the delegation.

PAPAIOANNOU STATES AKEL REFUSAL TO BACK RIGHTWING RESHUFFLE

NC200930 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 20 May 80 pp 1, 5

[Speech by AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou at 18 May session of AKEL Limassol Conference]

[Excerpts] Probably never before in the past 35 years since the end of World War II has mankind found itself so close to world war III as during the first months of 1980.

This is due to the aggressive attitude of the most reactionary circles of imperialism that are headed by the American Pentagon "hawks."

The American imperialists have been using the British bases on Cyprus for the development of an aggressive policy and, thus, together with the British imperialists, they have been playing a very dangerous game.

For the Cypriot people, who have been waging a difficult and complicated liberation struggle, the British bases on their territory and the use of these bases by the American imperialists constitute a mortal danger to their very existence. For this reason our liberation struggle is inseparably connected with the unceasing struggle for the abolition of the British bases and the removal of all foreign troops from Cypriot territory without exception.

The British "sovereign bases" must be dismantled. They must be removed. The British and American monitoring spy stations operating on Cyprus territory must also be dismantled. No matter how much money the imperialists will give, we will never consent; they must go; they must leave us in peace to resolve the problems that are confronting us as people. We know that they do not want to go. On the contrary, they want to consolidate their position in our country. However, we, the Cypriot people, are determined to struggle--no matter how difficult or uneven our struggle may be--in order to secure the dismantling of all the foreign bases on our territory and the removal of all foreign troops. And we will be successful in this, irrespective of time or sacrifices that might be required.

The Cyprus problem has been in a state of stagnation following the UN secretary general's fruitless efforts for the resumption of the intercommunal talks. An end must be put to this state of stagnation, which serves only imperialism and the enemies of Cyprus in general.

Imperialism, particularly American-NATOite imperialism, is mainly responsible for this stagnation and for the intransigence being displayed by the Turkish leadership. Why is this so? Because it is this imperialism that brought the Turkish occupation troops to Cyprus following the coup by the fascist junta--a coup which was organized by imperialism, which wants to keep the Turkish troops here and wants a Cyprus solution to its liking.

The solution that imperialism favors is a solution based on the notorious Acheson plan and the U.S.-British-Canadian plan which is based on the Acheson plan.

Imperialism favors a partitionist solution which would secure the sovereign bases for imperialism and would convert Cyprus into the biggest NATOite war bridgehead in the eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East--a solution that would bring to power the extreme rightwing reactionary Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot forces; a solution that would be based on the suppression of AKEL and of the progressive democratic forces of the Cypriot people because so long as there is a strong leftwing movement in Cyprus, imperialism will never feel safe with its bases.

This is why there is no progress toward the resumption of the intercommunal talks. This is why Rally leader Kliridhis is praised by imperialist publications--such as TIMES--and this is why the Denktas regime treats him in a privileged way. Only Kliridhis can meet Cagatay--the leader of the Denktas party--and only Kliridhis can visit the Karpas area. But why is this so? An effort is being made to give the impression that only Kliridhis can come to an understanding with the Turkish Cypriots in order to resolve the Cyprus problem.

AKEL has always defended friendship betwen Greek and Turkish Cypriots. AKEL has been the first party to speak about the need for a rapprochement between Greek and Turkish Cypriots and for the working out of a full program by the government to achieve this rapprochement. We declare that we are prepared to meet, either at the Ledra Palace or elsewhere, with leaders of any political party of the Turkish Cypriot community.

Dogmatic, chauvinistic, sectarian, narrow-minded or nationalistic approaches--irrespective of origin--serve as grist for the mill of imperialist policy and of intransigence that has been displayed until today.

Resumption of the intercommunal dialogue for the solution of the internal aspect of the Cyprus problem must be sought on the basis of the agreements that have been concluded so far--the Makarios-Denktas and the Kiprianou-Denktas agreements--and on the basis of the UN resolutions. The United Nations and the UN secretary general's good offices must help in this respect. However, they will not solve our problem; our problem will be solved by the Cypriots--Greeks and Turks alike.

We have agreed to a solution based on biregional federation not because we consider it ideal but because treachery and mistakes committed in the past have not left us any other choice. But since we have accepted such a solution and compromise, no hesitation or retrogression is permissible. We have rejected the solution of confederation, the solution providing for the establishment of two states; however, we are firm with the line for biregional federation.

Never before, since the establishment of the independent state of Cyprus, has our internal front suffered from so much discord and so many contradictions as today. The basic reason for this is the failure to observe the line and tactics for a Cyprus solution--line and tactics that have been observed by AKEL--that have become known as the "Makarios line" and that are included in the Makarios-Denktas agreement on the four guidelines and in the line approved by the National Council and the Council of Ministers in March 1977.

The Rally leader has been following a NATOite policy and has been advertising the notorious American plan for a Cyprus solution. At the same time it has been following a wildly anticommunist policy with slogans such as "the communists to the gallows," "Greece-Cyprus-Enosis."

If the Rally leadership is lifting its head today; if EOKA-B [National Organization of Cypriot Fighters] fascism is being revived with its oral and written slogans, with bomb explosions and the reorganization and reactivation of the armed groups; if Cyprus is in danger of being pushed to civil war today, all this is also due to the encouragement policy toward the coupists. All this is due not only to the fact that there has been no purge, that the "ministers" of the Sampson coupist cabinet were not arrested but also to the fact that Sampson himself is free to enjoy himself at places of entertainment in Europe and to embark on fresh subversive activities.

On the other hand, the government's economic policy is such that it has been causing great anxiety for the people. On the one hand there is a very serious problem of the astonishing price increases--this is intentional and planned--on the other, an effort is being made to reduce the rate of development. Although the government talks about the need for austerity, yet it does not take any measure that would force those who are living in luxury and lavishness to pay for the increased taxation, while the government itself fails to implement austerity measures. Who does the government think is going to implement the austerity measures? Could it be the poor working class of people whose lives have been full of privations? Why does the government not tax to the maximum the wealth--the accumulated wealth--which has resulted from the exploitation of the people?

The government must know that the people's discontent over its weaknesses, its mistakes and its lack of courage has been growing. We are not saying this for the sake of criticism but because we care for our people and our country and because we want them to really enjoy affection and capable administration.

AKEL has always said that due to the current tragic conditions of our country there should be a political, representative government that would enjoy the necessary prestige and popular support and would undertake to implement the Makarios line for the solution of the Cyprus problem; that would carry out a purge; that would implement an economic policy for the sake of our people's liberation struggle and would see to the practical implementation of a fair distribution of the economic burdens and of a redistribution of the national income. We have repeatedly said that such a government would enjoy the necessary prestige both at home and abroad and would successfully conclude our liberation struggle.

However, the AKEL views have not been heeded and there have been--and continue to be--plans for a right-of-center government reshuffle. But today things have reached the point where there is no need for a government reshuffle but for a radical change. Cyprus needs a strong, political and representative government that will meet the requirements of our liberation struggle and of our people's expectations.

AKEL is willing to contribute to this change. AKEL has never sought to impose its views. AKEL has never even asked for the slightest favor because such a thing would be completely contrary to its principles. What AKEL has asked for is the faithful implementation of the Makarios line for the solution of the Cyprus problem. What AKEL has been asking is faithful implementation of the president's and the government's promises for the sake of which the people have furnished their support.

It is not enough to declare support for the line approved by the National Council and the Council of Ministers under Makarios' chairmanship in March 1977. What is important is the implementation of the line. And when one draws a comparison between the statements and their actual implementation, then one will note that there is a difference, there is distance between them.

AKEL has always been and will continue to be the champion of unity and cooperation among all the people's patriotic forces, irrespective of ideological or other differences or affiliations; provided that there is agreement, consistency in the case of the basic question of line and tactics for a Cyprus solution and provided that the policy to be implemented in the case of all the other people's problems will serve the interests of the people and of our liberation struggle.

Based on this policy, AKEL will always be ready for unity and cooperation with all the people's patriotic forces for the salvation of Cyprus, for a solution of the Cyprus problem based on the UN resolutions, the Makarios-Denktas and the Kiprianou-Denktas agreements, so that the road be opened for peaceful, free, democratic creation and for an all encompassing development for the sake of the happiness of all the people.

TFSC RAPS GREEK MAYORS' BOYCOTT OF MUNICIPAL CONFERENCE

TA151005 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 14 May 80

[Text] The Foreign Ministry of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus has issued a statement saying that the boycott by the Greek Cypriot mayors of the Mediterranean Municipalities Union Conference being held in Istanbul was another manifestation of their continuing attacks on the Turkish Cypriot people within the framework of their long-term struggle plan. The statement notes that the Greek Cypriot side since 1960 has refused to grant separate municipal rights to the Turkish Cypriot people despite the Cyprus Constitution and that it is continuing its attitude and stand contrary to the Denktas-Makarios and Denktas-Kiprianou agreements in principle concluded after 1974.

The statement adds that the attitude of the Greek Cypriot side, which wanted to be represented at the conference in Istanbul by the so-called mayors of Girne [Kyrenia] and Gazimagosa [Famagusta] who had not been elected mayors, was undermining attempts toward the resumption of the intercommunal talks. Noting that the Greek Cypriots are trying to avoid the intercommunal talks within the framework of their long-term struggle plan, the statement adds that this attitude shows that attempts to continue the economic and political boycott imposed on Turkey and the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus is being directed from a single center. The statement concludes by expressing the hope that the participants in the conference will assess this attitude.

TFSC SPOKESMAN SAYS GOVERNMENT VIOLATING TURKISH RIGHTS

TA161740 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] The spokesman of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus has (?replied) to the statement issued by the Greek Cypriot administration on the occasion of the 31st anniversary of the establishment of the Council of Europe. The spokesman said that with this message the Greek Cypriot administration has again attacked Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot community. He said: Had the Greek Cypriot administration sincerely adhered to the principles of the Council of Europe, as it claims it does, it would not have violated for years Turkish Cypriot rights and the right of the Turkish Cypriot community to live in Cyprus.

ROLANDHIS ARRIVES, EXCHANGES STATEMENTS WITH MITSOTAKIS

AT200829 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 19 May 80

[Recorded report by correspondent Aris Xipolitidhis]

[Text] Within the framework of cooperation between the governments of Greece and Cyprus the Cyprus Minister for Foreign Affairs Rolandhis arrived in Athens this afternoon. Rolandhis was welcomed at Ellinikon Airport by Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, Cyprus Ambassador to Athens Hatzimiltis, Greek Ambassador to Nicosia Zakharakis and other officials of the Foreign Ministry. The two ministers are scheduled to meet at the Foreign Ministry tomorrow morning in order to exchange views on the current phase of the Cyprus problem.

On his arrival at Ellinikon and in answer to a question from a press representative on the purpose of his visit to Athens, Rolandhis made the following statement: [begin Rolandhis recording] My satisfaction is great today because I am in Athens in order to meet my Greek counterpart, Mitsotakis. This meeting could be described as an acquaintance meeting. In reality, however, we will have the opportunity to discuss the Cyprus problem with Mitsotakis as well as a chance to discuss procedures which have been dictated for the current situation. I would like to stress that relations between Athens and Nicosia have always been excellent and they will remain excellent. I would like to reiterate this once again and to add that Cypriot Hellenism, in its effort to solve its national issue, relies to a great extent on the unity of spirit, the support, the solidarity and assistance of the Greek Government and the Greek people.

As you may well know in recent months there have been a number of attempts to resume the intercommunal dialogue in Cyprus, which was stopped last year. These attempts have been unsuccessful. The truth, the bitter truth, is well known. The Turkish Cypriot leadership relies upon a Turkish supremacy of arms. It relies upon the Turkish Army which has occupied 40 percent of Cyprus, holds it under occupation and tries to impose a solution which is not based upon the principles of international justice and is not based upon logic. Such a solution, which would be the fundamental result of force, will never be accepted by us in Cyprus because we believe that it is contrary to the interests of the people of Cyprus as a whole. We believe that it degrades international institutions and we further believe that it will not survive and that the sequel to a possible failure of this solution will reach the shores of Greece and Turkey with unforeseen consequences. In light of what I have already stated and always with the wise leadership of the Greek Government, we will attempt to find themethod and the way which will one day lead us--if thoughts of justice, wisdom and moderation prevail on the Turkish side--to the solution of our truly difficult and thorny problem. [end recording] In welcoming the Cypriot foreign minister, Mitsotakis made the following statement: [begin Mitsotakis recording] I would like to express my particular happiness because, as the the foreign minister of the Greek Government, I today welcome Cypriot Minister Rolandhis. I would like to stress the pleasant coincidence that he is the first foreign minister to be received by the new government, It is natural that this should happen because, as it is unnecessary for me to repeat, the relations between Athens and Nicosia continue to be and will continue to be particularly close because the Greek side, the Greek Government and the entire Greek nation, completely, fully and totally support the struggle of our brother Cypriots. Rolandhis will have the opportunity to brief us on progress on the Cyprus problem and its current status and I am certain that this time, like in the past, there will be a useful exchange of views. What in my opinion is of importance for local problems, the phases through which the Cyprus issue is passing through and will pass through in the future, is the absolute, the total, the wholehearted support of the Greek Government and people to the Cypriots. This, I think I can say not only on behalf of the government but also on behalf of all Greeks, must be considered to be fact by our Cypriot brothers. With these sentiments we today welcome Rolandhis to Athens. [end recording]

NEW MBFR ROUND OPENS, MARKED BY INTRANSIGENCE

[Unattributed report: "Nothing But Reproaches and Harsh Words"]

[Text] On Wednesday 14 May the 21st round of the Vienna force reduction talks began in Vienna with each side clinging to its own position and charging the other side with refusing to respond to proposals that might lead to progress. The Western side talked about its readiness for making concessions but, at the same time, insisted on a clarification of the "key problem," the controversial figures on Eastern troop strength. The Warsaw Pact states, on the other hand, stressed "with every determination" that progress could only be achieved if the West European states and Canada were to adopt "binding commitments" in a first phase to freeze the personnel strength of their armed forces, and in a second phase to reduce them.

GDR Delegate Urges End to 'Stalling'

AU161834 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 15 May 80 p 2

[Unattributed report: "Vienna Negotiations: East Urges Disarmament Decision"]

[Text] Vienna--At the Vienna Hofburg Palace the 21st round of the Vienna negotiations on a reduction of armed forces and arms in Central Europe began on Wednesday. GDR chief delegate Wieland declared on this occasion that the Warsaw Pact states in the past few years presented a good many proposals. Although they took into consideration what NATO had described as "decisive points," the delegates of the Warsaw Pact countries are to this day still waiting in vain for a positive answer from the Western military pact.

Ambassador Wieland pointed out that the concentration of troops and arms in Central Europe is becoming more and more dangerous. An early conclusion of the Vienna negotiations is all the more necessary. This presupposes, however, that the NATO negotiators finally stop their stalling tactics and that all directly involved states show their readiness to accept concrete disarmament commitments. It is completely unacceptable if NATO, for example, excludes the West German Army from the reduction measures and even wants to let the FRG increase its potential for attack, he said.

On Tuesday, 13 May, Imelda Verrept, former secretary of the Brussels NATO headquarters who moved to the GDR, published NATO document C-a 78, 79 (NATO-secret) that reveals the West's negotiating strategy at the Vienna Hofburg Palace. This document, according to Mrs Verrept, "clearly shows that NATO, and first and foremost the United States and the FRG, is completely disinterested in a swift reduction of the military confrontation in Central Europe on the basis of equal security. They refuse to adopt concrete national disarmament commitments, drag on the negotiations in Vienna and constantly burden them with unfulfillable, unheard-of demands.... The documents clearly prove that NATO has waged the negotiations exclusively with the aim of obtaining unilateral advantages and of altering the military balance of power in Europe in its favor."

DIPLOMATS HIT BRITISH ACTION ON IRAN SANCTIONS

WA201440 London REUTER in English 1409 GMT 20 May 80

[Text] Brussels, May 20, REUTER--European Common Market diplomats expressed surprise and annoyance today at Britain's decision, despite its rallying cries, not to impose retrospective economic sanctions against Iran.

In The Hague, a Dutch Foreign Ministry spokesman said Britain's decision weakened the solidarity of the EEC.

"Two days ago the EEC decided to tackle the problem in a united way. But it seems EEC solidarity is interpreted differently by the British Parliament than the British Government. This move weakens the solidarity of the Community."

Although unwilling to comment officially, one source said, "It's absolutely astonishing, especially as the British were among the strongest proponents of these sanctions."

Common Market foreign ministers meeting in Naples agreed Sunday to implement a trade embargo on Iran this week which would apply to all deals concluded since November 4, the date student militants took U.S. Embassy staff in Tehran hostage.

But the British Government, bowing to parliamentary pressure, said yesterday its sanctions would apply only to new deals. Many members of the British Parliament complained yesterday that the sanctions went further than had been agreed on in the House of Commons last week.

"This is most aggravating. From the British we hear a lot of tough talk but little action," another source said.

The sources added, however, that they doubted that the package of sanctions, designed to help President Carter in his efforts to secure the hostages' release, would be renegotiated following the British decision.

In Bonn, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said West Germany would stick to the decision to backdate the economic sanctions despite Britain's decision.

The spokesman said, "The government has said it would backdate sanctions to November 4. This position remains unchanged."

TEXT OF MINISTERS' 18 MAY DECLARATION ON IRAN SANCTIONS

LD210833 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 May 80 p 6

[Unattributed report: "The Naples Declaration"]

[Text] The following is the text of the declaration on Iran published by the nine EC foreign ministers in Naples on Sunday 18 May:

"In keeping with their statement of 22 April (note 1), (the Nine had then decided to apply 'sanctions immediately' on 17 May if no 'decisive progress leading to the hostages' release' had been recorded before then). The foreign ministers...have reviewed the situation arising from the detention of the American hostages in Iran--a detention which constitutes a flagrant violation of international law.

"The ministers have checked reports coming from Iran. While noting the existence of some developments likely to be important for the release of the hostages, notably the completion of the second round of the parliamentary elections and the forthcoming convening of the Majles (note 2) (the Iranian parliament), they had to recognize that no decisive progress leading to the hostages' release has been made since 22 April.

"They have therefore decided to apply immediately the measures envisaged in the Security Council draft resolution of 10 January 1980 under the conditions and according to the methods jointly decided upon. They notably agreed that all contracts concluded after 4 November 1979 will be affected by the embargo measures. They will remain in close consultation in keeping with article M224 of the Treaty of Rome (note 3) (this article states that Community members must consult each other to jointly take the necessary steps in the event of war or serious tension or to meet pledges made with a view to preserving peace).

"The ministers welcomed with great satisfaction the decision taken by the UN secretary general to give Mr Ajib Daoudy, member of the UN commission of inquiry, the job of contacting the Iranian Government with a view to enabling the commission to resume its work and to arrive at a solution to the crisis. They give their full support to the secretary general with whom they will remain in constant contact to determine whether the UN mission is progressing in such a way as to enable them to quickly suspend the measures taken with regard to Iran.

"The one objective of these measures is to speed up the hostages' release. On this occasion the ministers reaffirmed their intention to respect Iran's independence and the Iranian people's right to determine their own future."

The embargo measures are contained in a working document which broadly follows the draft resolution submitted to the Security Council. They notably consist of:

1--Preventing the sale or supply from EC territory "of all goods, merchandise and products aside from foodstuffs, medicines and supplies strictly for medical purposes" to any Iranian individual or body or to any individual or body in Iran.

2--Refraining from making available to Iran "any credit or new loan" or "any deposit facility or authorizing substantial increases in existing deposits in currencies other than the dollar," or granting payment methods which are "more favorable than those usually applied."

3--Preventing the sending of the above-mentioned products and merchandise.

4--Preventing nationals or companies of EC territory from signing new service contracts supporting industrial projects in Iran other than those related to medical care.

The sanctions will come into force on Thursday, 22 May.

APPREHENSION EXPRESSED OVER TRADE IMBALANCE WITH JAPAN

OW210147 Tokyo KYODO in English 0123 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Brussels May 20 KYODO--The European Community (EC) expressed apprehension Tuesday over signs of worsening of trade imbalance between Japan and the EC in the first quarter of this year. This emerged from high-level trade consultations held here Tuesday between Japanese Deputy Foreign Minister Kiyoaki Kikuchi and Sir Roy Denman, EC director general for external relations.

Members of the Japanese delegation said Sir Roy noted the EC's trade deficit with Japan last year virtually remained at the same level as the previous year.

But he expressed apprehension over the fact that Japanese exports of electronic products and other items were increasing again this year.

The Japanese side stressed that the Japanese market has been opened through the conclusion of the Tokyo round of multilateral trade talks.

It called upon the EC to make further efforts to increase its exports to Japan and pledged cooperation in correcting the current trade imbalance.

Japanese delegation sources said the talks Tuesday were friendly.

Although European makers were critical of Japanese electronic product and car imports, they said the matter was not taken up specifically at the talks.

According to Japanese statistics, EC's trade deficit with Japan totaled $5 billion in 1978 and $5.1 billion in 1979.

The deficit in the January-March period of this year amounted to $1.7 billion.

The three-day consultations started Monday with the holding of a preparatory meeting of experts of the two sides.

STEEL COMPANY OBTAINS LARGE SAUDI ARABIAN ORDER

AU210828 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0515 GMT 21 May 80

[Summary] Last night, 20 May, Voest-Alpine Steel Corporation Director General Apfalter declared after his return from Saudi Arabia that his company had succeeded, against strong FRG and Japanese competition, in obtaining a large Saudi Arabian order for a complete electric-furnace steel plant, worth 3.2 billion schillings. In an interview Apfalter declared that delivery will be made within a period of 29 to 33 months and payment will be made in cash. Of the 3.2 billion schillings, 1/3 will go directly to the Voest-Alpine Corporation, another third to Austrian subcontractors and the remaining third to foreign subcontractors. According to Apfalter, the new steel plant will produce 820,000 tons of steel annually. Saudi Arabia is at present importing 1.4 million tons of steel annually.

KURIER DISTURBED BY LARGE VOTE FOR NDP'S BURGER

AU190955 Vienna KURIER in German 19 May 80 p 2

[Hans Rauscher commentary: "A Bad Surprise"]

[Text] The least important, the most extreme, the most grotesque candidate in these presidential elections has touched off the most extensive discussions after the election results became known. Rightist extremist Burger was at the end of election Sunday the principal topic of those interested in politics, and he will remain in the focus of attention for some time to come. After the first computer projection it became evident that far more than 135,000 Austrians had given their vote to a candidate who represents a repulsive Nazi ideology: a man who--and is only one example--pleads for the death penalty and would personally act as an executioner; a muddle-headed rightist extremist.

At the parliamentary elections Burger's NDP [National Democratic Party] obtained a measly 4,000 votes. He scraped together the 2,000 signatures needed to support his candidacy with great pains and with dubious methods. Before the elections, anything over 30,000 votes for him was regarded as a disgrace for Austria. And now, 135,000 people have voted for him.

There are many explanations. None of them is particularly pleasant: It is argued that, since Burger was the first candidate listed on the official ballot [in alphabetical order], many senile people unwittingly voted for him (results from old-age homes reportedly support this assumption); that opponents of abortion and supporters of capital punishment and of work houses voted for Burger because he shares their views on those issues; that the "old Nationalists" [German-Nationalists] preferred him to the Liberal Freedom Party candidate Gredler. It is also conceivable that leftist-extremist anarchists have launched a concerted action to discredit democracy. And, finally, it is argued that the very hard core of incorrigible old Nazis, who otherwise never go to the polls, this time found a candidate to their liking.

"Be that as it may, it is a good thing to know that something like that exists," (said New Freedom Party Chairman Steger, a liberal). And, as is shown by the example of the German NDP [National Democratic Party], such a coalition of outsiders will probably disperse again. We will have to live with it, and we can live with it.

The results obtained by the other two candidates are not affected by all this. Kirchschlaeger received an overwhelming vote of confidence. Gredler himself had expected more but, in view of his greatly handicapped position, he can certainly speak of a respectable success. On Mr Burger, however, who has now undeniably been given an uplift, we will have to keep a watchful eye.

"NO" VOTE WINS IN QUEBEC REFERENDUM ON SOVEREIGNTY

LD210219 [Editorial Report] Montreal in English to Europe at 2230 GMT on 20 May carries live, special coverage in English and French on the results of the referendum on a mandate for Quebec to negotiate for "sovereignty-association" with the rest of Canada. The special coverage program consists of brief interviews with various officials on the significance of the referendum interspersed with interim reports on the voting returns.

Special coverage concludes at 0130 GMT on 21 May with the following report in English on the voting results:

"The opposition forces [the 'no' vote against negotiations for political independence] led by Claude Ryan of the Liberals have won a clear victory in the Quebec referendum on sovereignty-association by a margin of about 60 percent to 40 percent. That figure, based on the results from 90 percent [of the] poll results from Quebec's 110 ridings, is a setback for Premier Rene Levesque and his Parti Quebecois.

"Across the province: In western Quebec it was 58 to 42 in favor of 'no'. In southern Quebec, it was 59 to 41 for the no's. In the center of the province it was 55 to 45 for the no's.

"And on the island of Montreal in the western part of the city, which is largely English-speaking, it was a massive 76 'no' to 23 'yes'.

"In the east end of the city, where a majority 'yes' was predicted, it did not materialize. East end Montrealers voted 57 percent 'no' and 43 per cent 'yes'. Only in eastern Quebec was there a tight race: The 'yes' got 50.5 percent; the 'no', 49.5 percent. One of the major failures of the 'yes' side was their inability to do well in the east end of Montreal where they hold a huge majority of seats in the provincial legislature. The 'yes' forces needed strength there to counterbalance the strong 'no' support in the west [words indistinct] but the support failed to materialize.

"Similarly, in the giant Montreal suburb of (Laval), expected middle-class and student strength failed to materialize for the 'yes' forces. In the eastern townships, which still have large pockets of English voters, the vote went as expected, with the 'no' forces winning about 60 percent of the ballot.

"The 'no' side has now increased its lead in the ridings, which have federal Cabinet ministers to 65 percent of the vote [as heard], and they are maintaining their lead over the 'yes' side in the ridings represented by the Parti Quebecois in the provincial cabinet. The vote for the 'no' side in the ridings is 52 percent. Premier Rene Levesque, who leads the 'yes' forces, has captured only 51 percent of the vote in his home riding of Taillon. The leader of the 'no' forces, Claude Ryan, has 69 percent in his riding of Argenteuil, compared to 31 percent for the other side.

"So, it is a decisive victory for the no's."

GOVERNMENT TO ADHERE TO EC DECISION ON IRAN SANCTIONS

LD201414 Hamburg DPA in German 1351 GMT 20 May 80

[Text] Bonn--In spite of Britain's decision not to fully implement the economic sanctions against Iran, as decided by the EC meeting in Naples, the Federal Government intends to adhere to the EC decision and to include contracts concluded after the seizure of the hostages on 4 November in the range of sanctions. This was pointed out by Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling in Bonn today in an interview with Sueddeutscher Rundfunk. [words indistinct]

Boelling stressed that sanctions against Iran are just one of several methods of action for the release of the U.S. hostages. The (?Federal Government) maintains that efforts toward a solution of the hostages affair through political means should not be renounced.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN INTERVIEWED ON IRAN SANCTIONS, OLYMPICS

DW210958 West Berlin Sender Freies Berlin in German 1005 GMT 20 May 80

[Interview by unidentified reporter with State Secretary Klaus Boelling, chief of the Federal Press and Information Office; place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] What sense is there in week-long discussions and secretly negotiated decisions--such as those by the European Community foreign ministers in Luxembourg and later on in Brussels--if individual members of the Community later on act differently and probably rather in contrast to the original acts?

[Answer] We both know that the European Community is not a monolithic bloc. It is therefore always possible that a national parliament--we experience this over and over again in a parliamentary democracy--develops different ideas, such as yesterday in the British House of Commons. A government that has to rely on parliamentary backing must accept the consequences. You are right; the deviation the British Government is compelled to undertake is irritating, but it is not our business to criticize it.

I believe it is decisive--and the U.S. Government stressed this yesterday--that the entire European Community, regardless of its present differing practices with regard to approving contracts, will maintain its political pressure on the leadership in Iran. I believe that, from the viewpoint of our American ally, this is the decisive factor. It was said in Washington yesterday that they were rather content with the Naples decision, considering it evidence of practical solidarity.

[Question] A significant element of Bonn's policy with regard to the Tehran hostages was common action by the European Community, complete backing within the European Community. Has this tactic now been spoiled by London's decision?

[Answer] No, that is too strong a word. I just said that the British Government was still moving along the same line. After a thorough debate in Parliament, another decision has been made deviating from our decision and that of other governments of the European Community. That need not necessarily curtail the effect of these measures because, as I have just pointed out, we have had in mind from the very beginning the exerting of political pressure aimed at starting a process of thinking in Tehran. So the weight of the Naples decisions will not necessarily be weakened.

[Question] With regard to the Olympic problem, there have also been decisions in other states which differ from those made in the Federal Republic. It looks as if the Federal Republic is the only state carrying some weight within the framework of Europe that has implemented a boycott of the Olympic games in Moscow. Should the Federal Republic feel abandoned in Europe with regard to the United States?

[Answer] Certainly a greater degree of solidarity would have been desirable among the various national Olympic committees. But the fact that others have made decisions that differ from that of the German National Olympic Committee does not decrease the value of this decision--the decision we and the Bundestag suggested to the National Olympic Committee. That was a unimpeachable democratic decision. It is certainly not a very beautiful picture--the fact that the West European national Olympic committees give the impression of discord, of a lack of unity--but it is characteristic of a democratic community that governments state their opinions but cannot enforce their will vis-a-vis independent bodies.

[Question] The Olympic decision of other states, the decision of Great Britain with regard to Iranian sanctions, all this together and possibly also the surprising trip of Giscard d'Estaing to Warsaw and his meeting with Brezhnev, doesn't this all demonstrate a lack of cohesion in the West?

[Answer] That seems to me to be an overdramatized conclusion which is not justified by facts. I have pointed out already that we are dealing with parliamentary democracies. In the case of the Olympic games we are dealing with parliamentarian democracies and with national Olympic committees which make their independent decisions. The West is in contrast to how this is organized in other regions of the world. It is not a firm bloc always marching on the same path. It is a weakness--which you hinted at with your remark--but simultaneously it is also a strength. I believe that, with regard to basic problems such as defense capability--defense preparedness on the part of the West in view of Soviet armament, an armament which goes far beyond what is needed--I believe that the West stands together in rank. One needs to keep the dimensions in mind and not let oneself be taken by surprise.

MINISTRIES, TRADE GROUPS DISCUSS PROBABLE EFFECTS OF SANCTIONS

DW200920 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 20 May 80 p 1

[Article signed Wff: "Working Group Clarifies Decisions on Sanctions"]

[Text] Bonn, 19 May--Lack of clarity still prevailed in Bonn on Monday about the concrete effects of the decisions on sanctions made by the EC foreign ministers in Naples over the past weekend. A meeting of an interministerial working group with representatives of the ministries for economics, foreign affairs, finance, justice and the chancellor's office was planned for the afternoon to discuss details.

Economics Ministry quarters were unable to divulge details, but people in this ministry as well as in the economy make no bones about the fact that the effects will hardly come to much in view of the exclusion of the old contracts concluded prior to the taking of the hostages in November.

There is talk of relief in the Federal Association of Wholesale and Foreign Trade (BGA). No complaints or lamentations have as yet been forthcoming from among the members.

The Federation of Chambers of German Industry and Commerce (DIHT) considers the measures inevitable "as the Community's proof of solidarity with the United States." They could be an appropriate flank protection for the political efforts to liberate the hostages. What matters is that the sanctions are applied in all member states. By adopting the foreign trade ordinance on the basis of the foreign trade law as early as on 24 April, the Federal Government created the legal basis required in the Federal Republic for applying sanction measures.

PAPERS CRITICIZE THATCHER OVER IRAN BOYCOTT DECISION

DIE WELT Commentary

DW210855 Bonn DIE WELT in German 21 May 80 p 6

[Commentary signed Kem.: "London Failure"]

[Text] Margaret Thatcher, of all people, had to go and join the lamentable European group picture with its Iranian-Afghan backdrop. The grand Atlantic pose changes into a hoax out of the sheer fear for survival. It was not only Britain's sportsmen but also part of her own group in the House of Commons that refused to be obedient to her or to show solidarity with the alliance. The tiny mouse of sanctions to which the EC mountain painfully gave birth in Naples was not small enough for the British. So the motto on the Thames River, too, is everyone for himself.

In the beginning the United States could count on the lady as part of the family, as it were, since she verbosely came to the aid of the harrassed President so quickly and naturally--and who can still respect her as the "iron" lady after this backdown? But what makes the matter depressing is not so much the meek backdown itself but its meager significance in the general environment of European embarrassment. It is no longer surprising. And why should it be anyway?

While Jimmy Carter is fairly lonely in his continued aherence to the strategy of pressure and refusal, the European statesmen have long succumbed to the euphoria of "overcoming the lack of dialogue" between East and West. Still the fact that Brezhnev granted an audience to a so helpfully willful Giscard d'Estaing does not yet make a new detente spring, let alone a summer in which Schmidt plans to travel.

Bonn and Paris are already celebrating the beginning of a "dialogue" with the Russians since Moscow now, at long last, is taking advantage on a higher level of the mistrust the Europeans have for the Carter administration, a mistrust which is proliferating in a fantastic way. But where would they--each of them ultimately with his own dialogue and with a party hard of hearing--end up if the United States some day ceases to understand the language that is being spoken--and refuses to understand it?

Press Review

DW211031 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 21 May 80

[Press review]

[Text] It was apparently only with great effort that the nine foreign ministers of the European Community reached an agreement this weekend in Naples to implement retroactively as of November at least a large part of the sanctions against Iran which were decided on in April. The united front did not last for long; London departed from it.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU writes in this connection: One can certainly dispute whether economic boycott measures are really an effective instrument in political disputes. But, aside from that, the action of the British Government under Margaret Thatcher is hard to understand. Great Britain was involved in formulating the joint European decision and it had agreed to it. For the British Government now, just a few days later, to try to leave the European train halfway along the line is new evidence that many people in Great Britain do not take this Europe very seriously--particularly when their own interests are involved.

NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG of Essen also carries a critical commentary: Who does not remember the strong words of the iron lady from London? She wanted to make a show to the Russians because of Afghanistan and make a show to the Iranians because of the hostages. She is making a show to the Europeans at any rate. What Margaret Thatcher said at the time and often enough later on was worth listening to. But what she has done is something completely different. The declaration of a trade war against Khomeyni's Iran, the sharp formulation of which by Lord Carrington in Naples was not surpassed by any other partners of the European Community, now comes from London with a wink.

MUNICH PAPER QUESTIONS EFFECTIVENESS OF IRAN SANCTIONS

DW191044 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 19 May 80 p 4

[Article signed C.W.: "Sanctions Which Are None"]

[Text] Meeting President Carter's punishment wishes halfway without further driving the fragmented leadership of Iran into more irrationality (and in the end into the embrace of the Soviet Union) is the aim and the purpose of the tissue-soft sanctions which the foreign ministers of the European Community decided on on Sunday in Naples. None of the nine Community governments seriously believes that a painful punishment and isolation of Iran will lead to the release of the American hostages. Bonn does not believe it either although, in order to show itself an exemplary ally of Washington, it loudly whispers that it terms the Naples results insufficient.

In fact, the foreign ministers (including Genscher and Lord Carrington) have done what they could to "deescalate" the crisis. If a real embargo were to be declared on Iran, what escalation would be possible if one part of the widely scattered hostages--may Allah prevent it--were to experience something irreversible? What new evidence of solidarity would Carter then demand from his Allies?

The Europeans, therefore, learned with relief in Naples that the new U.S. secretary of state said over the phone that he was "content" with their decision. Edmund Muskie was hopefully aware of the small effect of the sanctions, otherwise, irritated tones might then be heard again about the cowardly Allies. And will President Bani-Sadr, who is under strong pressure in Iran, be in a position to convince his radical compatriots that the European sanctions are not a punishment but much rather a conciliatory act? An appeal to show common sense? That is probably the most urgent question "after Naples."

SCHMIDT TO FRANCOIS-PONCET: GISCARD-BREZHNEV TALKS 'HELPFUL'

LD201930 Hamburg DPA in German 1844 GMT 20 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt regards the meeting between French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Leonid Brezhnev, the Soviet state and party chief, as "useful and helpful."

A government spokesman said that that was what the chancellor told French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet, who briefed him today on the Warsaw talks. Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher was present at the 90-minute meeting.

According to the spokesman, Schmidt received with satisfaction the report given by Francois-Poncet who attended the Warsaw meeting. The chancellor also stressed Bonn's and Paris' concurrent views on the world situation in the wake of the Afghanistan crisis and the problems resulting from it.

On Sunday morning Giscard informed the chancellor by telephone of his proposed meeting with Brezhnev, while the French foreign minister informed the EC foreign ministers at their Naples meeting.

SCHMIDT, GENSCHER REPORTEDLY TO VISIT MOSCOW IN EARLY JULY

LD210816 Hamburg DPA in German 0724 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher are to travel to Moscow in early July for the scheduled talks with the Soviet leadership. It was learned from Federal Government circles today that this period was suggested by Genscher to the Soviet ambassador in Bonn, Vladimir Semenov, on Monday. Moscow's approval is still needed for the date to be finally fixed.

A firm arrangement for the chancellor's visit to discuss the international crisis situation and disarmament issues with the Soviet state and party leader is expected to be fixed at the latest during the visit to Moscow by State Secretary Guenther van Well of the Foreign Ministry immediately after Whitsunday [25 May]. Van Well is to prepare for Schmidt's and Genscher's talks. His mission is intended to discuss in advance the results of the talks which may be laid down in a communique.

MEXICO'S LOPEZ PORTILLO CONTINUES OFFICIAL VISIT

Talks With Schmidt, Genscher

LD201216 Hamburg DPA in German 0914 GMT 20 May 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today received Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo for a political exchange of views. Earlier Lopez Portillo talked to Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher about questions related to North-South policy. The Mexican president plans to hold talks with Chancellor Candidate Franz Josef Strauss and meetings with prominent representatives of the West German economy this afternoon. A Foreign Office spokesman said that Genscher had informed the Mexican head of state about the German concept of partnership cooperation in the Third World in the political and economic spheres.

Discusses Oil With Businessmen

LD201622 Hamburg DPA in German 1535 GMT 20 May 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--President Lopez Portillo of Mexico told German businessmen at a meeting of the Congress of German Chambers of Commerce and Industry in Bonn today that Mexico wants to limit its oil production to an amount appropriate to its national development. High revenues from increased oil output would not benefit the mass of the people in his country. It would be absurd if Mexico were one day to become a capital exporter.

He conceded that his country would be prepared to step up its oil production within the framework of a world energy [word indistinct] which would regulate oil exploration, consumption and marketing for mankind on an international scale. He stressed Mexico's interest in becoming independent of foreign countries both economically and in food production.

Mexico is interested in extending its economic relations with the Federal Republic which has an advanced technology, a large market and good sources of finance. He said: "My country is open to all men of good will." Investments in Mexico are subject to the terms of the national development plan. These are known and offer fair ground rules.

CDU'S MERTES WARNS AGAINST WARSAW DECLARATION

DW210908 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 21 May 80 p 2

[Report by Bonn correspondent C.G.]

[Text] Bonn, 20 May--The Union parties believe that the Warsaw declaration of the East bloc calling for a world conference on international crises contains "traps that look like delicacies of detente." The addressees are particularly the German Social Democrats, said CDU disarmament expert Mertes on Tuesday to this paper. Mertes linked the East bloc statement of Warsaw with the forthcoming Moscow visit of Federal Chancellor Schmidt. The Warsaw statement reacts to "two signals" by Federal Chancellor Schmidt which the Soviet Union obviously considers as Bonn's preparedness to give in. Moscow continues to demand an actual but not formal discontinuation of the NATO decision of December, linking negotiations to Western efforts to close the arms gap. Now the Soviet Union aims for an agreement that is supposed to fix, in the form of a moratorium, the existing Eastern preponderance regarding Eurostrategic nuclear arms.

Moscow hopes that with such an agreement the West itself will legalize the imbalance to its disadvantage. "Schmidt's Hamburg suggestion regarding a bilateral deployment renunciation in the field of medium-range arms, which he had not discussed with the West or with the Cabinet, has obviously been interpreted by Moscow as being a signal of preparedness for such a fixing," said Mertes. It is possible that the Soviet Union will make a pause in the deployment of its offensive medium-range missiles look like a compromise, particularly since such a pause can hardly be checked in view of the mobility of the Soviet missiles.

The Union considers as a second sign indicating the federal chancellor's preparedness to compromise--which the Soviet Union is now obviously willing to take up--the earlier suggestion by Schmidt that East and West ought to agree at the Vienna troop reduction negotiations on a troop ceiling for both sides in Central Europe. It would mean that neither the Soviet Union on the territories of the GDR, Czechoslovakia and Poland, nor the Bundeswehr on the territories of the Federal Republic and the Benelux countries would be permitted to hold more than 350,000 armed men. This suggestion is said to have been rejected by Federal Foreign Minister Genscher and by NATO because it would be advantageous to the Soviet Union, which is located not far away, and because it would promote its striving to exert influence on the Federal Republic. "The paragraph devoted to the Vienna troop reduction negotiations in the East bloc's Warsaw declaration leads one to expect that Schmidt will be taken at his word with regard to this problem," said the Union politician.

ELYSEE SPOKESMAN DISCUSSES GISCARD'S WARSAW AIMS

LD201029 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 May 80 pp 1, 3

[Bernard Guetta dispatch: "Ask the Poles...."]

[Excerpts] Warsaw--"Pursuing dialogue." Perched at a low table at the Warsaw Intercontinental Hotel for an "informal conversation" with the press at midnight, that was how the Elysee foreign affairs spokesman defined the purpose of the president's visit. This theme recurred each time he spoke: Basically Mr Blot was not authorized to say anything else. Annoyed by a question on France's "solo play," he simply replied that, if the West believes that "talking to the Soviets means following a solitary policy, then Mr Muskie has just done that in Vienna"; he also explained that the president had a long telephone conversation with Mr Schmidt before his departure and sent messages to Mr Carter and Mrs Thatcher.

According to the French spokesman, spectacular results should not be expected. The reason why Mr Giscard d'Estaing accepted the "Polish invitation" was essentially because there is allegedly no longer any communication between West and East, and it is "essential that the West should understand Soviet motives and that the West should make its position understood."

The Afghan problem, "on which France's position is one of firmness," was therefore to be one of the subjects discussed, but there could be no question of starting negotiations to settle the problem. The aim was merely to exchange vital information because "we think basically that, if dialogue is not pursued, not only will the Afghan affair not be settled but, furthermore, very serious tensions and hence dangers of escalation are likely to appear."

The French president would seem, therefore, to have no more specific goal than this in going to meet with Mr Brezhnev, not in a neutral country but in the capital where the last Warsaw Pact meeting has just taken place. He has done this without any assurances and with the risk of giving a spectacular edge to the Soviet diplomatic offensive aimed at Europe. It was difficult to imagine Mr Giscard d'Estaing returning to France to celebrate the sixth anniversary of his election at Saxon-Sion without having any result to announce.

INITIATIVE FOR GISCARD-BREZHNEV TALKS SEEN COMING FROM POLAND

LD201541 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 May 80 p 3

[Maurice Delarue dispatch: "The Plan Was Apparently Mr Gierek's Initiative and Was Decided a Few Weeks Ago"]

[Text] Naples--The Giscard d'Estaing-Brezhnev meeting in Warsaw and the suspense maintained in Paris around this event have somewhat deflected the Naples meeting of the nine EC foreign ministers from its original goal. East-West affairs occupied the whole evening on Saturday, 17 May. Mr Francois-Poncet told his colleagues, already informed of the meeting through the press, that he would accompany the president of the republic to Warsaw. The foreign minister had said nothing about it either to those he had met on Thursday and Friday in Vienna or to Mr Muskie, the new U.S. secretary of state, or, we are assured, to Mr Gromyko who, moreover, knew all about it.

Since the affair concerns mainly the Elysee chief, the president of the republic apparently took responsibility for informing people at his level; he had a telephone conversation with Mr Carter in the middle of last week and informed Mr Schmidt and other heads of European governments. [paragraph continues]

Moreover, the Bonn government expressed its satisfaction on Sunday and that is regarded as essential in Paris. Without showing their discontent publicly several ministers present in Naples expressed, through diplomats, some skepticism on Mr Giscard d'Estaing's move and some criticism of France's unwillingness to consult, to which they readily contrast that displayed by the FRG. The FRG is seizing every opportunity to consult its partners on preparations for Mr Schmidt's forthcoming visit to Moscow.

The French reply that the two visits are not the same in nature. Mr Schmidt's visit will be an official visit with all the ceremony that implies. The Warsaw meeting is a man-to-man conversation scheduled to last half a day (Monday morning) attended by foreign ministers but without any public stances being adopted--toasts, declarations or communique--which an official visit implies.

The mystery with which this event has been surrounded and which has had the effect of dramatizing it, has not been explained. The president of the republic apparently wanted it to be "confidential" before it actually took place, which shows some candor. The Poles, who werethe main architects of the meeting and had no reason to play it down, "spilled the beans."

As far as we know the initiative did indeed come from Mr Gierek. As regards East-West relations, Paris and Warsaw--whose concerns about European and world balance are almost identical historically speaking--tacitly understand each other. Mr Giscard d'Estaing and Mr Gierek meet as often as possible and the Elysee has more than once used the Polish channel to make sure the Kremlin has understood it. The plan for the meeting dates from a few weeks ago (the approximate period was decided fairly early although the exact date was only set recently). The suggestion was apparently first made during a visit to the Elysee by Polish Ambassador to Paris Olechowski at the beginning of April. It was of course the subject of the discussion which Mr Poniatowski had with Mr Gierek in Warsaw on 25 April. It should be remembered that normal Franco-Soviet relations (but are they still normal?) called for a visit by Mr Brezhnev to Paris this year which, in present circumstances, would pose some problems....

There is every reason to believe that in their heart of hearts the Poles are as worried as the French are about the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and the dangers it poses. There was, therefore, no reason to refuse Gierek's invitation, official circles think, especially since it could be important to make the French view on the Afghan affair known to Mr Brezhnev in the presence of a witness from his side.

The French viewpoint is well known: Any solution to the Afghan crisis necessarily depends on a Soviet pledge toobserve a precise timetable for withdrawal. On that basis the guarantees which the Kremlin thinks it needs on respect for Afghanistan's neutrality and nonalignment can be envisaged. This has already been said several times to Soviet officials, notably to Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Korniyenko and to Mr Gromyko and there is no indication that Mr Giscard d'Estaing is prepared to change it. However, that is the weak point of the French reasoning; what point is there in repeating to Mr Brezhnev what he has already been told several times?

The Soviet Difficulties in Afghanistan

However, since the French Government began to say this to the Kremlin the situation has changed and it has done so precisely in the direction it had indicated: The USSR is encountering undoubted problems inthe field; it is cut off from the Islamic world and at the same time has moved away from the Third World; it has revived the arms race and the dangers of confrontation. Is this change, which Paris regards as far more important than taking partin the Olympic games, likely to make the Soviet leaders stop and think? [paragraph continues]

Mr Giscard d'Estaing will probably have a clearer idea of this on his return from Warsaw but the French seem to think that the increasing number of suggestions from the Kremlin, although fairly futile in themselves (two in 1 week via Kabul and the Warsaw summit) indicate a certain malaise.

The Nine, who advocated the neutralization of Afghanistan in February, have in any case recently examined the latest Soviet offer: the plan for a world summit. Those who met with Mr Gromyko in Vienna were able to give some details. What the Kremlin apparently envisages is not a great world assembly but an exchange of views among the biggest powers by region and perhaps in several stages. Could this procedure be used as a "context" for solving the Afghan crisis? The Nine are considering this.

For his part Mr Genscher gave an assurance that Mr Schmidt, during his trip to Moscow, has no intention of rejecting the new U.S. Euromissiles despite the pressures to which he expects to be subjected by the Soviets.

During the Naples discussion participation in the Olympic games was briefly mentioned. Mr Francois-Poncet did not give the impression that the French Olympic Committee's decision was final. He seemed to think that French athletes would not go to Moscow if athletes from the other Community countries were to boycott the games.

PRESS TROUBLED BY GISCARD-BREZHNEV MEETING

LE MONDE: 'What Point'?

LD201545 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 May 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Going It Alone?"]

[Text] Nobody seemed to object to Mr Helmut Schmidt's intention to visit Moscow this summer. In so doing the West German chancellor would have been the first Western government chief to have talks with Mr Brezhnev since the Red Army's invasion of Afghanistan. While Mr Giscard d'Estaing has snatched this "honor" from his colleague there is no need to denounce as "treachery" in him what was regarded as a goodwill gesture in Schmidt. It is true that Bonn has extensively consulted its Allies about its plan while the secrecy with which Mr Giscard d'Estaing surrounded his move could justifiably be regarded as discourteous by some of his partners. However, the relatively favorable reaction from German officials, in contrast with the sarcasm found in a large part of the press on the other side of the Rhine and elsewhere, shows that the news is not bad for everybody in the West.

It would also be unjust to talk of "appeasement" and even to compare the Brezhnev-Giscard d'Estaing meeting with the visit which British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain made to Hitler in the weeks which preceeded the Munich agreement and the Western powers' capitulation over Czechoslovakia. Even if the Afghan situation lends itself to some comparisons with this crisis the essential differences lies in the fact that Mr Giscard d'Estaing--as the French have categorically stated--had no intention of "negotiating" a solution to this crisis with Mr Brezhnev, still less of accepting the fait accompli.

However, it is precisely in the meagerness of the objective officially proclaimed--to reaffirm known positions on the "unacceptable" nature of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, "to avoid any musunderstanding" on the reactions from either side--that the exercise shows its weakness.

What point is there in repeating to Mr Brezhnev in person--who, in any case, is only acting with the support of his collegial leadership--what was already said in unequivocal terms last January to Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Korniyenko and, last month, to Mr Gromyko in Paris? The "maintenance of dialogue" is a legitimate concern but a dialogue between deaf people is a dialogue between deaf people at whatever level it takes place. The holding of a summit adds nothing aside from giving a more spectacular and hence more dangerous character to the policy of "dialogue at any cost."

Indeed, although the Elysee asserted with understandable caution that it did not expect any specific results from the Warsaw meeting, Mr Brezhnev has already obtained what he was seeking. Whatever Mr Giscard d'Estaing does, his presence in Warsaw will be presented to the Soviet public and the rest of the world by the Soviet press as marking the end of the quarantine into which the rape of Afghanistan had placed the Kremlin leadership for 5 months.

Whatever he does he will justify the hopes of those for whom, in Moscow, the end of isolation depends on exploiting the divisions not only between the United States and its allies but between the Islamic countries and their Western partners. It is hardly logical to preach a firm line to Afghanistan's neighbors, to prevent any "normalization" in the field and to contribute to that same normalization at diplomatic level.

LE FIGARO Warning

LD201555 Paris LE FIGARO in French 19 May 80 p 1

[Max Clos article: "Talk About What?"]

[Text] It would be absurd to condemn in advance the principle of a meeting between Leonid Brezhnev and Valery Giscard d'Estaing. It is indefensible to bring forth the following hasty and insulting accusation: France summoned, comes running to receive its orders from Moscow.

Having said this, the Warsaw summit arouses both surprise and concern. Surprise, because of the way in which things have happened. The information given by the Poles as early as Friday was confirmed by the Elysee only on Sunday night. What was the reason for the secrecy and delay? And concern, because of the haste in which this matter was dealt with. No new factor seems to have emerged on the international scene in the past 48 hours. So what was the reason for such urgency? What was the reason for this haste? And what was the reason for this unscheduled conference which, we believe, could hardly have been well prepared on our side?

It is important to talk. Agreed. But the main question is to know what you are going to talk about. There are only three subjects lending themselves to discussion: one of minor and two of major importance. The minor subject: the Olympic games which have become an important political matter for the Soviets. The French Government can still decide whether our athletes will or will not go to Moscow. Afghanistan and disarmament are the major problems. As far as the first point is concerned, nothing indicates that Brezhnev is prepared to withdraw his troops and end a military occupation which has repeatedly been called "unacceptable" by France and its European partners. Nothing new has happened in this sphere. And, as far as the second point is concerned, the presence of SS-20 missiles on the borders of Europe is a reality, and it is hard to see whom they can threaten if not ourselves. What new development has occurred in that sphere?

Talk, certainly, but what results can reasonably be expected from talking? There is no cause for optimism in this sphere for two reasons.

Negotiations with the Soviets can be envisaged only in terms of the balance of strength. What strength has the French president at his disposal? The European entity is nonexistent and, in any case, neither France's partners nor the United States were informed about the Warsaw meeting until the last moment. Mr Giscard d'Estaing cannot even call himself spokesman for the Europeans. True, France has always boasted of "privileged relations" with the USSR. But how has this been shown? Who is "privileged" in this kind of situation?

What does Brezhnev want? Maybe he wants to secure France's moral support. Detente and the peace offensive launched by Warsaw Pact member states will be discussed. Can we really fall into such an obvious trap? The fact is that the free world has to face up to a venture aimed at subversion which, after many other instances, has just become cynically apparent in Kabul. Where is detente? Where is peace?

We will not know whether this summit has been useful or not before the end of the Warsaw talks. But it would be a good thing if we were informed of its results. It may be useful to talk to Brezhnev, but it will be very necessary to explain to the French people why and, above all, to tell them what purpose these talks have served.

Trip Involves 'Unequal Risks'

ID201557 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 20 May 80 pp 1, 4

[Benoit Rayski editorial: "A Difficult Trip"]

[Text] Any diplomatic initiative involves risks, but in the "Warsaw summit" affair they are very unequally divided. By going to the Polish capital to meet with Valery Giscard d'Estaing, Brezhnev risks nothing: He has no public opinion (or in any case he has stifled it); he does have allies, but they are loyal to him.

The same is not true of the president of the republic who, with his surprising trip--indeed it came as a complete surprise--runs the single but considerable risk that the Soviet Union will try to use his name and prestige to develop a diplomatic offensive whose ultimate objective is to make the Western world accept the occupation of Afghanistan.

The Giscard-Brezhnev meeting--it should be said in passing that it seems strange that it was only announced by "leaks" from Moscow and Warsaw until the very last moment--seems therefore like an operation in which the president of the republic could have more to lose than to gain, although he has simply beat West German Chancellor Schmidt to the post, since Schmidt plans to visit Moscow next July. Nonetheless, it is up to Valery Giscard d'Estaing and him alone to make this perilous summit a success. It depends on him alone, because nobody can really be in suspense about what Brezhnev might concede: Whatever the Soviet leader says, he will not restore freedom to Afghanistan unless he is forced to do so.

Contrary to some assumptions, success is not always an agreement, a compromise or a deal; it is also being able to speak the language of courage. It would be pointless to accuse the president of the republic of intending to speak another language to Leonid Brezhnev before the results of his meeting are even known. If Valery Giscard d'Estaing makes the Soviet leader understand that detente as the USSR conceives it, with its repeated distortions and invasions, is no longer acceptable to us, his trip will be a success.

If he explains to Mr Brezhnev that France is indeed an independent country but that, in face of aggression, it stands by its allies, his trip will be a success. If he shows his interlocutor that our country, whatever its desire to maintain dialogue with the USSR, cannot accept a detente which becomes an alibi for weakness, his trip will be a success.

If, finally, he indicates to Brezhnev that a vague "concession" like, for instance, an illusory withdrawal of a few Soviet soldiers from Afghanistan could in no way undermine French determination, his trip will be a success. It is this success which we hope the president of the republic will obtain.

LE MONDE: 'PEACE OFFENSIVE' SHOWS NO CHANGE IN USSR POLICY

[Editorial: "Offensive"]

[Text] As many observers foresaw immediately after the invasion of Afghanistan, the Soviets have now launched a large-scale "peace offensive." This offensive, whose aim is to put the diplomatic ballet which is now taking place in Vienna in the shade, to increase, if possible, the divergencies among Western countries and to influence a large number of Third World countries which will participate in the Islamabad Islamic Conference starting 17 May, has developed in perfectly orchestrated stages.

The first part of the "seduction" operation has been entrusted by the Kremlin to its Kabul collaborators. We refer to the Karmal plan which makes the beginning of a withdrawal of the Soviet occupation forces dependent on the recognition by the West of the authorities installed by the USSR and on a commitment by Iran, Pakistan and the United States that they will do everything in their power to strangle the Afghan resistance movement. It may well be that there is no future for this plan: Pakistan has already rejected it, new American Secretary of State Muskie has practically done the same and Mr Francois-Poncet has clearly indicated that it is unacceptable. However, we may well continue to hear about it for a long time to come since, unlike Western diplomacy, Soviet diplomacy has in fact a great capacity for obstinacy.

Undoubtedly, this capacity will also be exploited with respect to two statements published on 15 May at the end of the Warsaw Pact summit which met recently in the Polish capital. However, the call for a world conference to be held at the highest level seems to be a rather crude propaganda gimmick. True, the international situation is grave but it is hard to see how it could be improved through endless talks which, in any case, would duplicate those held at the United Nations. Furthermore, the causes of the international tension are known. The invasion of Afghanistan, which has already been condemned by the majority of countries in the world within the UN framework, is a major one. Obviously, any solution to this crisis--if a solution can be found--depends on Moscow. It is rather cynical of the Soviet leaders to expect to make anyone overlook such an essential fact by proposing that the West should agree to a reduction of its influence in other regions of the world.

A second major cause of the poisoned atmosphere in which we live: the arms race in the world in general and in Europe in particular. In this case also it is difficult to imagine that any world conference could improve the present state of affairs. The most urgent problem--that of medium-range missiles--can and must be the subject of negotiations between the parties concerned, that is, the Warsaw Pact member states and the countries belonging to the NATO military alliance.

This is a very concrete point but, unfortunately, nothing new on the subject can be detected in the very long statement published in Warsaw. The USSR still demands as a condition for opening negotiations that NATO officially reconsider its December 1979 decision to deploy cruise missiles and Pershing-2 type continental missiles from 1983 onwards. However, no mention is made of equivalent Soviet arms--the SS-20 missiles--which have been deployed in the western region of the USSR for several years already. The conclusion must be that the "peace offensive" which has just been launched indicates no change in the Soviet positions.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE JUSTIFIES PARTICIPATION IN MOSCOW GAMES

AU201555 Rome ANSA in English 1545 GMT 20 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 20 (ANSA)--The Italian Olympic Committee (CONI) voted by an overwhelming majority here today to take part in the Moscow Olympics even though the Rome government yesterday came out against participation because of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. The voting in CONI's National Council gave 29 ballots in favor of taking part in the games, 3 against, and two abstentions.

Because of the government's acceptance of the America-promoted boycott of the games, the Italian athletes will not appear with the Italian flag or anthem, but with those of the International Olympic Committee (IOC).

The CONI communqiue justified the body's decision on three grounds: the individual nature of participation in the games, the right of Italy's Olympic athletes to see their sacrifices rewarded, and the juridical fact CONI is legally subject to IOC regulations.

On the first point, CONI said that the Olympic games are "competitions among individuals, and not nations". "Participation can in no case be considered as acceptance of any ideology or political behavior", the communique said. CONI also pointed out that the games are a "purely sporting" event assigned "to a city, not a nation".

On the second point, CONI said the athletes who have accepted sacrifices for a long time to take part in the games have the "right to full recognition" of their preparation. "It would therefore be iniquitous to deprive them of an opportunity to which they have subordinated important life-choices", the Italian Olympic Committee argued.

On the third point, the communique pointed out that CONI is a "fiduciary organism of the IOC and subject to the regulations dictated by the latter, which establish that the national Olympic committees must respect the Olympic Charter's regulations and the international calendar (of sporting events)".

The statement also pointed out that the IOC has decided against postponing the Moscow games, noting that CONI's activity must be pursued in "harmony with the IOC's deliberations and policies" as the "supreme authority in all questions concerning the Olympic games". CONI also cited the decisions reached in recent weeks by the West European Olympic committees, ruling out "any type of political exploitation" of a decision "inspired solely by sporting assessments of whose great value CONI's National Council is deeply convinced".

CONI's decision in direct conflict with the government's raises a tricky problem over the athletes who are in service with the Italian Armed Forces. According to the government, and Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio in particular, the armed services athletes must, at least in juridical terms, "obey the government, not CONI". To date, CONI has received no communication laying down officially whether the military sportsmen will be available or not, and has accordingly decided to include them in its list of competitors.

According to CONI's President Franco Carraro, a vote against participation at today's National Council meeting merely because of the problem raised by the military athletes would have been equivalent to declaring defeat in advance. Signing on for the Olympics and continuing work to avoid an "odious discrimination" against these athletes "is in any case a positive attempt" he told a press conference after CONI's meeting.

If CONI had decided not to go to the Moscow Olympics, it would have been Italy's third absence in the history of the modern games. Italy was not present at the first or second editions in 1896 and 1904. In the sixteen editions of the modern Olympics, Italy has won 11 gold medals, 100 silvers, and 100 bronzes.

The similarity of responsibilities and interests binding the two Mediterranean states together in a common quest for peace was stressed yesterday by Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio.

The Rome government's defense chief stressed the two states' common political, economic and social vocation for Mediterranean stability in remarks at a luncheon in his guest's honor Tuesday.

For his part, Baly noted that Italy and Tunisia had to work together for proper causes throughout the world and not just for peace in the Mediterranean basin.

BERLINGUER STATEMENT ON TITO, RELATIONSHIP WITH SFRY

AU181552 Belgrade NIN in Serbo-Croatian No 1532 11 May 80 p 31

[Report on statement by Enrico Berlinguer, general secretary of the Italian Communist Party, to NIN in Belgrade--no date given]

[Text] Enrico Berlinguer, general secretary of the Italian Communist Party, responded, without thinking even for a moment, to NIN's request to evoke his memories of President Tito although, as he said, he does not consider interviews to be "the most suitable form of communication." In the Metropol Hotel of Belgrade the beginning of the interview was delayed by more than 1/2 hour because as soon as Berlinguer entered the hotel lobby together with his associates Pajetta and Bufalini he was immediately surrounded by representatives of various foreign party delegations who wanted to talk with him. Thus we waited while Berlinguer had a brief conversation with the deputy general secretary of the Japanese Communist Party and then with Callaghan, head of the Labor Party of Great Britain.

Finally, apologizing, visibly tired and obviously depressed (he had just returned from the ceremony of laying a wreath on President Tito's bier), he sat at our table. Quietly, as is his habit, explaining every word, he spoke about his first meeting with President Tito.

I had known Tito before I actually met him. His name had become well known during the years of resistance throughout Europe and Italy, among communists and resistance fighters, as the name of the organizer and leader of the Yugoslav revolution, one of the strongest antifascist movements in Europe.

Personally, I met him for the first time in 1970 when he received me, as deputy secretary of the Italian Communist Party, in Belgrade. What impressed me most about Tito was not only his deep knowledge of the substance of those topics that we discussed, but also his deep knowledge of all the topics that were discussed during our talk. I realized that this man really had complete views and the deepest possible perception on problems of the modern world. We met several times after that occasion: here in Belgrade again, then in Italy and in Karadjordjevo....We met for the last time in Igalo in the fall of 1978. Naturally, we also met at the Berlin conference of Communist parties; that was a very important meeting before the beginning of the conference's work.

In Karadjordjevo we also signed a joint declaration, a very political one, which referred not only to international problems but also to the very close stand of our two parties on problems that arise in relations within the international workers movement. I would says that in this respect our stands were always identical. Our parties advocated that relations of equality, noninterference, autonomy, recognition and valorization of the original attempts of parties and movement to follow their own path in the struggle for socialism and for building a socialist society must prevail in relations among communist parties, within the workers movements and among progressive forces in general. These principles were later confirmed by all communist and workers parties at the Berlin conference.

Berlinguer then remarked that the entire world was impressed by the great number and the high level of the delegations which came to pay their last respects to President Tito.

There is no doubt that Tito has left at a very difficult moment for the world, when relaxation of tension is in a great crisis and when a great cooling in international relations has occurred. Nonetheless, I would say that it would be useful to analyze more deeply the causes that led to the fact that here--in paying last respects to Tito--delegations have attended, nearly all of them on the highest level and virtually from all over the world. I believe that this is not merely an expression of the respect that the entire world feels, not merely the expression of a need to express gratitude to Tito for everything that he represented. I believe the high level of the delegations can be explained as a wish to follow Tito's work and teaching, which he left to the world as his testament, advocating cooperation among countries regardless of differences. Tito's ideas--which he constantly demonstrated and worked for--that it is necessary to wage a resolute struggle and to maintain an open dialogue among countries even in the most difficult situations--primarily in difficult situations--and that it is necessary to restrain oneself from actions which may irrevocably lead to war, represent in my view that which we can call, among other things, Tito's inheritance. I believe that this inheritance will be enriched and that primarily the nonaligned countries and then all other countries will work for its implementation.

In conclusion, we asked whether there were differences in views in the talks between Tito and Berlinguer and how Tito reacted to them.

[Berlinguer] Actually, there were not many political differences between the Italian Communist Party and between Tito and myself. I would say there were very few differences. However, I can say that Tito, even when he spoke about those parties and states with which disagreements of a political nature existed, spoke about them without being burdened by passion, without hatred and reproach. I felt great calm and tranquillity in Tito, even when he spoke about the countries and parties, even the largest of them, with which political polemics, disagreements or deep discords existed at that moment or earlier, naturally without hiding that differences existed.

PRIME MINISTER RENEWS APPEAL FOR OLYMPIC BOYCOTT

LD201920 London BBC Television Network in English 1820 GMT 20 May 80

[Text] The prime minister made a new appeal to the chairman of the British Olympic Association: Boycott the Moscow games. The call came in a letter from Mrs Thatcher to the association's Chairman Sir Denis Follows. In it Mrs Thatcher says that with the Americans, West Germans and others absent after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, the games will not be worthy of the name "Olympic." And she adds: I remain firmly convinced that it is neither in our national nor in the wider Western interests for Britain to take part in the games in Moscow.

However, Sir Denis Follows said tonight that he won't be offering the British Olympic Committee any advice on the matter. Our sportsmen he said, are responsible people and it is up to them to exercise their own judgement. But he has asked for their reaction to the new appeal as soon as possible.

JAPAN'S OKITA HOLDS TALKS WITH CARRINGTON, GILMOUR

OW210048 Tokyo KYODO in English 0012 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] London May 20 KYODO--Japanese Foreign Minister Saburo Okita and British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington agreed here Tuesday that Japan and Britain should consult with each other closely in respect to international political and diplomatic issues in the midst of the current tense international situation.

Okita, who arrived in London Tuesday morning on his way to Paris to attend a meeting of the International Energy Agency (IEA), also met with Deputy Foreign Minister Sir Ian Gilmour.

The foreign minister told newsmen after his meetings with the two British officials that the foreign secretary sought his views on the political situation in Japan and the situation in South Korea.

He said he told Sir Carrington that he believed the mainstream faction within the Liberal-Democratic Party will continue to take the reins of government even after the dissolution of the House of Representatives and that there will be no drastic change in Japan's diplomatic policies.

He said he also revealed that Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira plans to attend the Venice summit of Western industrialized nations.

Okita said that in exchange of views conducted on the Iran, Afghanistan and Middle East problems with Sir Carrington, he obtained the impression that Britain still believes that the Soviet Union intends to work for a solution of the Afghanistan issue through peaceful discussions.

He said Britain apparently believes that the European countries should play a positive role in respect to the Middle East peace problem, which is connected with the Afghanistan and Iran issues.

He said he told the foreign secretary that Japan had the same view on the matter and expressed the view that if Japan and European countries cooperated with each other, they will be able to exert their influence on U.S. policies.

Okita said Sir Ian told him that Britain planned to ask the European Community (EC) to delay by several days the enforcement of the trade sanctions against Iran, now scheduled for Thursday, because of the British decision not to make the sanctions retroactive to November 4 as decided by the foreign ministers of the EC nations in Naples last Sunday.

Okita was scheduled to go to Paris Tuesday night to hold talks with French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet.

He is also planning to meet with West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Bonn.

ALBANIA REBUFFS MOVES TO RESTORE RELATIONS

LD201042 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0816 GMT 20 May 80

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] An attempt by Britain to end a 30-year diplomatic deadlock with communist Albania has been rebuffed, Foreign Office Minister Mr Peter Blaker told the Commons in a written answer today.

Mr Blaker said Britain recently proposed to Albania that diplomatic relations, broken off shortly after the war, should be restored without waiting for a solution to the financial questions which had previously stood in the way.

Regrettably the Albanians had not agreed to this, Mr Blaker said. But Britain was continuing to seek a solution to the financial questions and her offer to Albania remained open.

Britain's relations with Albania were broken off when two British destroyers were sunk in the Corfu channel with the loss of 40 lives.

An international court awarded Britain 800,000 pounds in damages, but the Albanian Government refused to pay and Britain retained 8 million pounds in Albanian gold in British custody.

Since then, the Albanians have asked for the return of the 8 million pounds with interest, and have denied responsibility for the sinking of the destroyers.

Diplomats were uncertain of just how far political factors influenced the Albanians, who have long been strong supporters of China in the communist world.

This relationship is now felt however, to be less close than it was, but because of Britain's present cool relations with the Soviet Union there is a feeling that Albania might have seen closer relations with Britain as a hostile act to the Soviets.

DAILY TELEGRAPH: GISCARD BREAKS WEST'S 'QUARANTINE' OF USSR

LD201251 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 20 May 80 p 18

[Editorial: "Giscard's Pas Seul"]

[Text] "In one bound Brezhnev was free" one might almost say speaking of his meeting with the French president in Warsaw. By this diplomatic coup, made all the more galling to America and France's European allies by being secretly arranged, he busted the West's quarantine. [paragraph continues]

He can tell his own people that, despite all President Carter's efforts, detente is still alive and well, and that by implication, his Afghan aggression was justified. He has driven a wedge between France and America which cannot but affect the whole trans-Atlantic relationship and feed American isolationism. Herr Schmidt who might have received a grudging American special dispensation to break the ice with Mr Brezhnev later this year because of his East German commitments, is now completely in the clear. In the West only Bonn has officially welcomed Giscard's step, and his Social Democrat Party, especially its neutralist left wing, will be jubilant.

This is not all. Giscard's pas seul comes at a time when the whole of European NATO is disillusioned and alarmed at Mr Carter's leadership. At the same time all members, with the exception of Britain, consider America's policy on Afghanistan to be too hard, and are seeking ways, while expressing disapproval, not to damage "detente" or make the Russians too angry. There is a growing irrational yearning for a "European" policy, but without due recognition of the military absurdity of this or, least of all, any willingness to make the huge effort that would be necessary even to start bridging the American gap. There can be no doubt that Giscard sees himself as the acknowledged champion of moves in that direction. His cherishing of De Gaulle's "special relationship" with Russia gives additional cause for concern.

It is true that, in the past, in times of crisis--over Berlin or Cuba for example--France has rallied strongly to the alliance. Nor is there any reason to doubt official French statements that M. Giscard told Mr Brezhnev very bluntly that his continued occupation of Afghanistan was unacceptable. Nevertheless, the balance of power has deteriorated so disastrously over the past 15 years or so that, with France already outside the NATO organisation, there are now very narrow limits to the safe exercise of French capriciousness. The meeting cannot have moved Mr Brezhnev an inch and must have done grave harm. M. Giscard, in pursuing whatever objectives he had, must have known this would be so.

FOREIGN MINISTER RALLIS RETURNS FROM ATHENS, MAKES STATEMENT

NC201850 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 20 May 80

[Statement by Cyprus Foreign Minister Rolandhis upon arrival at Larnaca Airport on 20 May--recorded]

[Text] I return from my short visit to the Greek capital absolutely satisfied. First of all, I had the opportunity to meet with new Prime Minister Rallis as well as with Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, and we discussed the Cyprus problem in detail including recent developments. In this way I prepared the ground work for the visit of President Kiprianou to Athens, expected to take place around the middle of June. I also heard directly from the official Greek leadership that Greece's position on the Cyprus problem remains unchanged and that we can rely on the unanimity and support of the Greek Government and the Greek people. I say this not because I had any doubt about the sentiments and the positions of the new government of Mr Rallis toward Cyprus, but because, as I said in Athens yesterday, this support for us Cypriots is very [word indistinct]. Cyprus, at this moment, wages a gigantic struggle, a struggle for its independence, territorial integrity--which has been violated--sovereignty and its right to follow a nonaligned policy. Cyprus will maintain these lines and these positions until vindication. But Cyprus is small and the struggle is great and this is why I believe that Greece's support is not only important for us but also indispensable.

In conclusion I would like to say that I look forward to complete and sincere cooperation with the Greek Government and I am certain that this cooperation will materialize. Thank you.

ROLANDHIS ATHENS ARRIVAL STATEMENT PROVOKES PRESS COMMENTS

Rolandhis Explanation

NC201854 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 20 May 80

[Text] Answering a question on what he meant by his statement in Athens that efforts would be exerted under the guidance of the Greek Government, Mr Rolandhis answered that with the word guidance he did not mean patronage or any imposition of Greece's views on the Cyprus Government. I meant, he added, friendly support and advice on behalf of the Greek Government. Moreover, he said, I have also said in the past that I believe that the doctrine "Cyprus decides and Greece supports" would be better if it were changed to "Cyprus decides and Greece advises and supports."

I SIMERINI Comment

NC210755 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 21 May 80 p 3

[From the "Freely" column: "The 'Wise Guidance'"]

[Text] The other day Mr Rolandhis went to Athens to meet the new Greek foreign minister, Mitsotakis. The Cypriot foreign minister, after making some statements and forecasts, asserted that any new humiliation of Cyprus--as the result of a probable failure to find a solution to the Cyprus problem--would have an impact on Greece. Mr Rolandhis added: "With the Greek Government's wise guidance we will always try to find a method, a way that would lead one day to the predominance of just, wise and moderate views on the Turkish side." We have observed from the very beginning that during the last 6 years wise guidance by the Greek Government has been a rare thing. [paragraph continues]

But even when such guidance was demonstrated, the...wise Cypriot leaders here have unwisely rejected or discarded it. The facts are well known and there is no need to repeat them. What must be mentioned again is the complete uselessness of the well-known doctrine "Cyprus decides and Greece supports"--a doctrine that has been proved by facts as unfounded and groundless. The Cyprus problem is in an endless stalemate and deadlock. As to how wise future Greek Government guidance will be and how...wisely it will be received by the Cypriot leaders here, this will soon become obvious.

O AGON Praise

NC210750 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 21 May 80 p 2

[From "Our Positions" column: "The Wise Guidance"]

[Text] We hail the statement made by Foreign Minister Rolandhis in Athens about the wise guidance of the Greek Government with which we will continue our efforts for the solution of our problem. We hope that this statement implies a change of attitude and an abandonment of the doctrine that we make the decisions.

Mr Rolandhis spoke about wise guidance. Wisdom is definitely not a heavenly gift for the officials in Athens. Rather, wisdom is the result of a global view of all the problems facing the Greek Government which affect all Hellenism.

The Cyprus problem is not removed from the other problems facing Greece. In fact, Greece's problems with Turkey have their origin in the Cyprus problem. We repeat: It is inconceivable for Greece not to have a strong voice in resolving the Cyprus problem at a time when its developments affect all Greece.

If this wise guidance referred to now had been accepted in the past, today the situation would probably have been different. We hope, however, that what the foreign minister said is not a mere figure ofspeech.

TA NEA Criticism

NC210760 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 21 May 80 p 5

[From the "Positions" column: "The 'Guidance'"]

[Text] Mr Rolandhis' statement about "the Greek Government's wise guidance" has come as a surprise. It is a reminder of the era before the coup, of the dark days of the junta and of the disastrous theory about the "national center" and the "office" and the "sub-office." Mr Rolandhis is the minister of foreign affairs for the Republic of Cyprus, which is an independent and sovereign state, a member of the United Nations, and a nation which has been struggling against Turkish occupation in order to confirm and stress its existence as an independent state.

But how can this capacity be confirmed with references to guidance by another government and by another state? The Greek Cypriots honor Greece; we respect its government; we feel that we are a part of Hellenism; we seek the support of all the Greeks and of the Government of Greece; we desire close and sincere cooperation with Greece. The basis for such cooperation already exists and we are all supposed to have accepted it; it is the principle that Cyprus decides and Greece supports.

The reference to guidance removes this principle and reinstates the juntaist theory: "Greece decides and Cyprus obeys." Such a theory, which has led to the EOKA-B, [National Organization of Cypriot Fighters], the plot within the church and the fascist coup, is completely unacceptable. We consider Mr Rolandhis' statement inappropriate and we ask him to withdraw it.

ROLANDHIS CONFERS WITH RALLIS, MITSOTAKIS BEFORE DEPARTURE

AT201154 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 20 May 80

[Text] Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis was visited shortly before noon today by Cyprus Minister for Foreign Affairs Rolandhis, who discussed the Cyprus issue with the prime minister. Speaking to the press after his visit, Rolandhis said he had a very useful conversation with Rallis. The Cyprus foreign minister referred to the exceptional cooperation they had in the past when Rallis was foreign minister. "As is known," Rolandhis continued, "Rallis assisted the Cyprus struggle in every possible way at that time and I am certain that from his new position as prime minister of the Greek Government he will continue to work for the good of Cyprus."

Earlier this morning Rolandhis visited Foreign Minister Mitsotakis at the Foreign Ministry and had a private meeting with him. This was followed by a meeting attended by the two ministers, Greek Ambassador to Nicosia Zakarakis, Cyprus Ambassador to Athens Hatzimiltis and by other officials.

After the meeting Rolandhis told representatives of the press: "We have had a very useful exchange of views with Mitsotakis. We discussed the Cyprus problem fully, including the latest developments and Mitsotakis had the opportunity to reaffirm Greece's support to the fighting Cypriot people."

Speaking to the press Mitsotakis said: "I agree with the conclusion that this was a very useful review. Information which should be supplied was supplied by both sides. The unity of spirit and the unstinted support of Greece toward fighting Cyprus was reaffirmed." At 1400 [1100 GMT] Mitsotakis gave a luncheon at the Foreign Ministry in honor of Rolandhis who is due to depart Athens at 1700 [1400 GMT] today for Nicosia.

Karamanlis sent his cable to Kiprianou to thank him for his wishes and congratulations on his election as president of the republic.

PAPER CITES RALLIS VICTORY AS CHANCE FOR MOVE TOWARD CENTER

AT181540 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 18 May 80 pp 1, 3

[Article by Stamos Zoulas: "'New Democracy' and PASOK Forge New Policies"]

[Text] The two largest parties--"New Democracy" and PASOK--are revising and readjusting their policies after the recent changes at the top of the country's political leadership. This process creates prospects for a calm political climate which will continue until the two political opponents establish their new strategy in light of the forthcoming election confrontation which--at least for the time being--is planned for no earlier than the spring of 1981. A first indication of the trends prevailing within the two areas of the majority and minority will, in all probability, be provided during the 3-day debate on the government's policy statement to be held from Wednesday to Friday in the chamber of deputies. Even if the two parties appear in the chamber of deputies with their arguments as they were presented in the recent past, this will in no way presuppose any insistence by them upon old political positions which are already considered to be outdated in view of the new political situation.

The factors which dictate a readjustment of the policies which are followed by the two greatest parties to date are centered around the election of Karamanlis as president of the republic and Rallis as the leader of "New Democracy" and as prime minister.

The move of Karamanlis to the presidency was considered both by "New Democracy" as well as by the opposition parties to be the retirement from active politics of a leader whose presence and involvement in the country's fate had a definite effect upon the development of our political affairs. In this case PASOK hoped that, with the election of Karamanlis, the initiative for maneuvering would immediately pass on to Papandreou. This hope was also supported by the forecast that, in the confrontation between Rallis and Averof, the latter would win or even that "New Democracy" would suffer a rift or that it would break up during the election of its new leader.

Always faced with the necessity of balancing clashing trends within his own party, A. Papandreou had every reason to "prefer" Averof to Rallis. Such a solution would have freed him of any danger--to PASOK's unity--from overtures directed toward the center. The leader of the majority opposition had reasons to believe that with Averof as its leader "New Democracy" would confine itself to the more conservative area of the rightwing and that it would abandon any "expansionist views" toward the center, which PASOK could then take over without a battle. In addition it was believed that this advance by PASOK would have been helped by the climate of political tension which would have been created by the expected (by PASOK) Averof overtures toward the extreme right and by the character of the polarizing confrontation resulting from a competition between the two larger parties. Under these conditions the party of the majority opposition not only had every interest in hastening the elections, but it is also considered nearly certain that it also had the ability to influence developments toward this direction.

In the Area of the Center

Now, after the latest changes, the expectations of PASOK are overthrown. The election of Karamanlis demonstrated that "New Democracy" always maintains stronger "claims of ownership" over the center than PASOK. These claims were, in any case, confirmed by the election of Rallis to the party's leadership and to the prime ministership. Papandreou can no longer hope for a painless and passive surrender of the remnants of the center. He is obliged to wage a battle by revising both his tactics as well as certain ideological positions which he holds. However, recent changes limit the ease of PASOK's maneuvering to the same degree that they also correspondingly and understandably widen the possibilities of political ease of maneuvering by "New Democracy."

Those who support this view stress that Rallis' victory as the representative of "New Democracy's" progressive and center-rightist trends is a definite advantage. This capacity of Rallis, it is argued, permits him to attempt, without the danger of internal or external party disturbances, considerable overtures both in the direction of "liberalization" of the economy as well as in the direction of the "recapturing" of a considerable proportion of the voters of the extreme right. This can be done without any loss to "New Democracy's" center-right wing, which considers Rallis' victory to be a justification of the expansion of the majority party toward the center. It is added that in contrast Averof, who represents the conservative rightwing, would have had far greater difficulty in adjusting his policy to current conditions.

He would specifically have had to face the negative position of the center-right, the enmity of the opposition and the suspicion of the extreme rightwing. This difficulty would have been particularly obvious in the sector of economic policy in which every "liberalization" measure--necessary under the current reality--would be easily undermined and attributed to an attempt to revise the ideological principles of "New Democracy" and as an abandonment of the socioeconomic overtures of the Karamanlis government to date.

ERKMEN, DENKTAS RETURN FROM ISLAMIC CONFERENCE

TA210823 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen, who participated in the NATO defense and foreign ministers' meeting in Brussels and the Islamic Conference in Islamabad, returned to Turkey by air at 0430 this morning. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport, Erkmen said that the activities at the Islamic Conference were closely followed because it was held at a time when new tensions were being created in the world and when the clouds over the Middle East were getting darker.

Erkmen recalled that all Islamic countries opposed the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan at the conference, which met in extraordinary session 4 months ago, and that the Soviet Union was called on to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan as soon as possible. Erkmen added that the call will be repeated at the current conference. Noting that he held bilateral meetings with the foreign ministers of various Islamic countries during the conference, Erkmen added that a majority of the countries participating in the conference were inclined to repeat this call and to seek ways of ensuring the implementation of the call in a bid to secure unity and solidarity regarding the activities of the conference. Erkmen said: However, various member countries tried to avoid the discussion of the Afghan issue and to blame the superpowers rather than denouncing the invasion. I hope that a realistic appraisal of the situation will be made and a realistic attitude will be adopted. Differences of views among Islamic Conference member countries will decrease the effectiveness and prestige of the conference. This should not be the case.

President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus Rauf Denktas, who participated in the Islamic Conference, returned to Istanbul with Erkmen. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport Denktas said that he briefed the conference on the Cyprus problem and noted the support which was expected from the Islamic world. Expressing the hope that the resolutions adopted at the conference would be supported at other international forums as well, Denktas added that in addition to the requests made last year, the Federated State also requested that the Islamic Bank establish a special fund to finance various development projects in the Federated State.

OSLO PAPER CITES CRITICISM OF DENMARK FOR LOW CONTRIBUTION

LD161511 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 14 May 80 p 8

[Per Nordrum report: "NATO Disappointed With Denmark"]

[Text] Brussels, 13 May--Denmark is disappointing its NATO allies and was described by individual nations as a liability, since Denmark first promises to make its contribution to joint defenses and then reneges on its promises by making reference to its economic problems. During the defense ministers' meeting in Brussels on Tuesday, Norway was cited as a good example to follow.

Many NATO countries would be happy to have Denmark's economic problems, a high-ranking American source said on Tuesday.

As far as is known, Denmark has the highest per capita GNP of all the NATO countries [as published] and, together with Belgium, it is the problem child when it comes to the fulfilment of its obligations to a 3 percent real increase per year in its defense budget, American sources said. Both countries have problems in achieving political approval of the defense spending necessary in today's situation. But they do not have problems any greater than those of other countries, it was said at NATO headquarters in Brussels when the alliance's defense ministers met for the first time since the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan in December of last year.

On Tuesday, Italy promised to do everything possible to increase its defense spending by 3 percent per year, the figure on which the NATO nations agreed over 2 years ago. Canada also made clear promises to make a greater investment; and the Netherlands' promises had a good reception.

For the Americans it was extremely encouraging that NATO members made these undertakings for at least 3 percent increases in defense budgets. There had earlier been doubt as to how genuine the will in individual countries was to make such big investments. At the same time it was made clear that Portugal and Turkey, with their real economic problems, cannot be expected to fulfill the 3 percent goal.

TRUDEAU OUTLINES PLANS FOR CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

LD220126 Montreal Domestic Service in English 2100 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Now that the Quebeckers have said "no" to sovereignty-association, the difficult process of trying to achieve constitutional reform begins again. In Ottawa, the prime minister outlines new plans to consult the premiers. With the details, our parliamentary bureau chief, Brian Callagher:

Prime Minister Trudeau made it eminently clear today that he wants to move as fast as possible towards constitutional reform, both to show Quebec that he meant what he said during the referendum campaign and to take advantage of the seemingly overwhelming approval of change that now exists in most of the country. In a speech to the Commons, Mr Trudeau announced that the minister of justice, Jean Chretien, leaves tonight on a whirlwind tour of all the provinces to explore where the possibilities for change may lie and how quickly a constitutional conference can be arranged. Mr Chretien is to report back by Saturday.

Mr Trudeau says he is hoping for cooperation from all the provinces, including Quebec, because now is the time for healing. Mr Trudeau says he has only two nonnegotiable items: federalism must be kept and a charter of basic rights, including language rights, must be put into the Constitution. Everything else, he says, is negotiable. And the prime minister congratulated all Canadians for their spirit of tolerance while the people of Quebec conducted their struggle to decide both that they wanted Canada and that they wanted change.

[Begin Trudeau recording] But Quebeckers have also shown that they themselves are prepared to hear what other Canadians have to say, to find out what their aspirations are and help them to realize their dreams. We Canadians are now agreed on a common destination and that, madam speaker, was the fundamental issue. What we must now do is charter a new course and agree on a common itinerary towards that common destination. [end recording]

Mr Chretien, for his part, won't speculate on what specific areas are the most (?ripe) for agreement but there has been near agreement in the past in areas such as communications, family law and change to the supreme court. And Mr Chretien says the main thing now is simply to get the process moving:

[Begin Chretien recording] You know, it's not a process where one level of government is winning or the other level government is losing. It's not that. It's what is best for Canadians at this time. There is a great will for change and a great desire to modernize our Constitution and give most satisfaction to all the Canadians. And we have to find out where are the areas of agreement and then we should proceed with them very rapidly. [end recording]

Whether the constitutional conference is held in June, July or later this summer, it's not going to produce an agreement on a tough question such as the division of powers between Ottawa and the provincial governments. But federal officials say the referendum obviously has created momentum to show that some change can be accomplished and that momentum must now not be lost. The opposition leader, Joe Clark, points out also that the first time in a long time the public is interested in reform, but he is urging Mr Trudeau to abandon any thought of confrontation in the negotiations and to give weight equally to the aspirations of all the parts of the country. The NDP [New Democratic Party] leader, Ed Broadbent, says the process could also be advanced if Mr Trudeau would include opposition leaders and members on the federal negotiating team, especially since the Liberals are lacking western MPs.

One big question left, of course, is what Premier Levesque will do at any constitutional conference. Prime Minister Trudeau said today that only time will tell if Mr Levesque is now willing to take part in good faith or whether he will persist in the mistaken view that a "no" vote means he must accept whatever crumbs the federalists choose to throw.

GOVERNMENT APPROVES ECONOMIC BOYCOTT OF IRAN

LD211408 Hamburg DPA in German 1319 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government today decided on the already announced economic boycott against Iran and closed the trade links with Iran. The Federal Cabinet decided in this connection on the necessary amendment to the foreign trade law, according to which business with Iran and the transport of goods through the Federal Republic to Iran requires permits as of tomorrow. Capital traffic is also being limited at the same time. Foodstuffs and medical supplies are exempted from the boycott. Deliveries taking place on the basis of so-called old contracts--concluded before 4 November 1979, the day the hostages were taken in Tehran--must be submitted to the authorities for approval but will not come under the boycott.

With this decision the Federal Government follows the decision taken by the EC foreign ministers in Naples last weekend. The French Cabinet also approved sanctions today.

Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling said after the Cabinet decision that economic sanctions had been taken "because of the serious violation of international law" in Iran. The EC foreign ministers had agreed in Naples to introduce sanctions by all the EC countries tomorrow. The Federal Government had taken all the legal prerequisites for this step on 23 April when it agreed on a catalogue of sanctions against Iran. It is very much like the draft resolution submitted to the UN Security Council which failed because of the Soviet veto.

KREISKY MAKES UNSCHEDULED VISIT TO BONN 21 MAY

LD211052 Hamburg DPA in German 0958 GMT 21 May 80

[Excerpt] Bonn-Austrian Federal Chancellor Bruno Kreisky is to pay an unexpected short visit to Bonn this evening. An SPD spokesman stated in reply to questions that Kreisky will have meetings at Gymnich Castle with Willy Brandt, chairman of the International North-South Commission and SPD leader, and Mexican President Lopez Portillo.

BRANDT MEETS WITH MEXICO'S LOPEZ PORTILLO, KREISKY

LD211832 Hamburg DPA in German 1702 GMT 21 May 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--At Gymnich Castle near Bonn today, Willy Brandt, chairman of the International North-South Commission, met Mexican President Lopez Portillo and Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky. They are understood to have discussed the possibility of international summit meetings which the Brandt commission hopes may produce a breakthrough in deadlocked North-South relations, as well as an initiative for a crash program in favor of the poorer developing countries. Kreisky, who, like Lopez Portillo, is exploring the prospects for such a summit meeting, arrived in Bonn this afternoon on a surprise visit.

SCHMIDT, MEXICAN PRESIDENT ISSUE JOINT STATEMENT

LD212048 Hamburg DPA in German 1850 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Republic and Mexico will strengthen their economic cooperation. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo affirmed this intention in a joint statement released today at the end of their talks in Bonn.

Both countries want to expand trade, promote investments and intensify industrial, scientific and technological cooperation. Lopez Portillo, speaking at a press conference, expressed complete satisfaction with the political and economic results of his state visit.

Earlier today the Mexican president visited Hannover and the Volkswagen works in Wolfsburg. He then met the federal chancellor for a final talk at Gymnich Castle near Bonn. Tonight he was the guest of the Federation of German Industry in Cologne.

According to the joint statement the Federal Republic promised Mexico that it would press in the EC for wider access to Community markets through the general system of tariff preferences for developing countries. In the international field, Schmidt and Lopez Portillo "most deeply" regretted the armed intervention in Afghanistan. Regarding the hostages held in Iran, they called on those bearing responsibility to do all in their power to secure a swift, satisfactory and peaceful solution to the problem.

MINISTER LAMBSDORFF TO VISIT HUNGARY, ROMANIA

LD211800 Hamburg DPA in German 1639 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Economics Minister Count Otto Lambsdorff will pay an official visit to Hungary on Monday. The Economics Ministry announced in Bonn today that talks are planned in Budapest with Premier Gyorgy Lazar; his deputy, Josef Marjasi; Foreign Minister Frigyes Puja; and Foreign Trade Minister Peter Veress. Lambsdorff will be accompanied by State Secretary Otto Schlecht.

Following his visit to Hungary, Lambsdorff will visit Bucharest with State Secretary Martin Gruener at the invitation of the Romanian Government.

The German-Hungarian Commission for Economic Cooperation begins its fourth meeting in Budapest tomorrow. The German delegation is headed by state Secretary Schlecht.

SAUDI OIL MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON FRG RELATIONS

LD211829 Hamburg DPA in German 1632 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Bonn--The Saudi Arabian Government expects the Saudi credits to the Federal Government amounting to a total of DM2.5 billion to lead to closer political cooperation between the two countries. This was stated by Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Shaykh Ahmad Yamani in an interview with Deutsche Welle today.

He said his government at first only had financial goals in view when it helped the Federal Government to overcome the crisis which arose as a result of the sudden rise in oil prices. Now he expects, however, that Bonn will show its recognition of this help in technological cooperation and in its attitude "toward our legitimate political concerns."

With reference to the forthcoming OPEC conference in [name indistinct] Yamani said that there could be no hope as yet of a return to a unified oil price. Before that could happen the situation on the energy market would have to become more stable, consumers would have to limit the amount they use, and oil supplies would have to remain at the present level.

PAPER HITS WARSAW PACT STATEMENT, USSR'S 'NEGOTIATIONS' PLOY

[Editorial signed Rm.: "That's the Way They Would Like It"]

[Text] The final texts of the Warsaw East bloc summit conference are of byzantine length. Yet it is worthwhile reading them. Point by point they contain the most urgent international political wishes of the Soviet Union. At all costs it would like to see the preservation of the imbalance which it has created with its secret medium-range missile armament. Negotiations on this potential are to be held only if NATO rescinds beforehand its decision of last December on closing the arms gap. Moscow would be receptive to negotiations on the firm basis of its monopoly with this type of weapon and thus also on the basis of West European susceptibility to blackmail.

But in other respects, too, Moscow seeks to perpetuate its arms preponderence. This is shown by the proposal to freeze the numerical strength of the armed forces in Eastern and Western Europe. It also comes to light in the renewed initiative concerning a nuclear weapons ban. This is an old dream of the Soviets: Their superiority in conventional forces should no longer face the risk of the West possibly defending itself with nuclear weapons. Regarding Afghanistan, Moscow demands the discontinuation of any "intrusion" by third states so that Soviet sovereignty may remain undisturbed henceforth. Then Moscow would be prepared to "begin" pulling out its troops--they are talking only of the beginning, not of a final, complete withdrawal, let alone of what would then prevent the Soviets from finishing off the resistance in Afghanistan which has been partially suffocated with detachments of their secret police.

There is no hint at readiness to compromise, renunciation of even a bit of the positions which Moscow has obtained partly through deceitfulness and partly through war. Instead, its pompous projects--the conference on detente in Europe, demanded by Warsaw on orders from Moscow--is to be prepared without interuption, and then a "world peace conference" is to follow. The objective is obvious: The Soviet Union wants to drown all Western willingness to counteract its imperialism in torrents of palaver. And another thing: The world peace conference would have to deal primarily with Europe. In Africa and Asia, in contrast, Moscow would like to have a free hand. This is a useful hint as to the divisibility of what the Soviet Union deceptively calls "detent."

SAARLAND PREMIER FAILS IN REELECTION BID

LD211126 Hamburg DPA in German 0949 GMT 21 May 80

[Excerpt] Saarbruecken--In the election of Saarland's premier, the current head of government Werner Zeyer (CDU) suprisingly failed to gain a majority today. In a secret vote, only 24 deputies voted for and 26 against Zeyer. One deputy abstained. The CDU and FDP coalition parties together have 27 votes; the SPD has 24 votes.

It appears that three CDU deputies deviated from the party line and voted against Zeyer. Chairman of the FDP group Edwin Hubgel gave the assurance that his party's four deputies voted for Zeyer. Leader of the SPD opposition Friedel Laepple emphasized that his party's deputies all voted against Zeyer.

Immediately after the sensational result of the vote became known, the plenary meeting was terminated by Albrecht Herold, newly elected president of the Saarland Landtag. A new meeting of the landtag was convened for 28 May. The CDU-FDP coalition partners must agree by then whether and how they want to continue with the formation of the government.

Werner Klump, chairman of the Saarland FDP group said after the meeting: "The FDP stands by the coalition and we shall form a government." Klump, commenting on Zeyer's defeat in the election, said: "I think this can be rectified."

Should the CDU and FDP fail to agree within the next 3 months on the choice of premier then new elections will have to be held in the Saarland.

REPORTAGE ON 28TH CDU PARTY CONGRESS HELD 18-20 MAY

Kohl Political Report

LD191112 Hamburg DPA in German 0932 GMT 19 May 80

[Excerpts] Berlin--At the opening of the 28th CDU Party Congress in Berlin, with which the Union is also opening the Bundestag election campaign, CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl has called on his party to make increased efforts with regard to the federal elections. In his political report, Kohl made a powerful declaration of loyalty to the Western alliance. The Federal Republic's place was not between the blocs because the role of mediator would overtax it. Federal Chancellor Schmidt had put in doubt NATO's position on the question of the counterarmament decision and robbed it of its political effect. "It is among us Germans that the Soviet Union's months of attacking this NATO decision has achieved the first impression." On the Olympics issue, too, Schmidt and the SPD had given a "disgraceful impression."

Kohl repeated his accusation that there was a "Moscow faction" in the SPD. It wanted to detach the Federal Republic from the West, sought a third road between West and East, and had already taken on the language of the communists. "A vague anti-Americanism" was again spreading in the ranks of the SPD.

Strauss Address

LD201404 Hamburg DPA in German 1243 GMT 20 May 80

[Excerpts] Berlin--In a militant speech, followed by long applause, joint Chancellor Candidate Franz Josef Strauss addressed the Berlin CDU federal congress today. He issued an appeal to the Union parties to do everything possible to win the Bundestag elections on 5 October. After strong attacks on Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and the Social Democrats, Strauss, who spoke for just under 2 hours, called to the 780 delegates: "We shall win because we want to win."

Strauss, after an ovation, said that Schmidt was incapable of coming to terms with all problems. This incacapacity was a real danger for Germany and Europe in the 1980's. The future SPD Bundestag Group would have about 113 new people of whom at least 315 are supporters of the "radical left." If the Union would now release the SPD from government it would enable the Social Democrats to regenerate.

Strauss said that if the political adversary leaves the problems of the land "lying on the left" in the truest sense of the word, and by a "stupid alternative" imputes war to the CDU and peace to the SPD, then it was high time to hit back. The people backing the "stop Strauss" campaign are primarily communists but they are also backed by Social Democrats, writers and forces of the terrorist underworld. Certain sections of the DGB [German Trade Union Federetion] also opposed the CDU/CSU in the election campaign. "Those are the helpers of Helmut Schmidt," he said.

In the foreign political part of his speech Strauss warned against a "growing anti-Americanism" which was spreading in the SPD. If the Union comes to power the important task would be, above all, to increase the defense readiness of the Federal Republic and to take measures to encourage the confidence of the Americans to remedy all that has been reduced to ruins."

Strauss again attacked the chancellor's statement that the political situation resembled that of 1914 at the time of the outbreak of war. Schmidt had admitted the collapse of the policy of detente pursued by the SPD/FDP coalition since 1969. Strauss further rejected Schmidt's statement that the Union was not capable of ensuring peace as an insolent and slanderous allegation. He claimed that the SPD's policy in recent years had contributed to increasing Moscow's power.

Kohl Concluding Speech

LD201402 Hamburg DPA in German 1155 GMT 20 May 80

[Summary] Berlin--The 2-day CDU congress in Berlin ended today with a concluding speech by party Chairman Helmut Kohl, followed by the national anthem. Kohl called on all CDU and CSU members to make every effort to bring about a party victory in the 5 October elections.

Strauss Interview

DW211100 Cologne Deutsche Welle in German to Europe 1730 GMT 20 May 80

[Reporter Hans-Juergen Pickert interview with Franz Josef Strauss, minister president of Bavaria, CSU chairman and CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor, presumably in Berlin; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Dr Strauss, in your speech at the CDU Congress you focused your attention on foreign policy. Do you think that this will be the main direction of the election campaign?

[Answer] We were not at all surprised to find that in the North Rhine-Westphalian Landtag election campaign, where land policy issues really needed to be dealt with such as problems of full employment, the restructuring of the ruhr area, energy supply, and the educational system--where these issues needed to be the main points of the election campaign--the SPD conducted this election campaign under the slogan of war or peace, claiming for itself the position of peace and trying to give the CDU, in a shabby and malevolent way, the position of war. Thus, I must assume that foreign policy issues such as the problems of peace, freedom and security will be given priority in the Bundestag election campaign. Therefore I tailored my speech to the issues which will most likely be the main issues of the Bundestag election campaign.

[Question] If I heard all of your speech correctly, you did not mention the Free Democratic Party. Is there a special reason for that?

[Answer] If there is any reason at all, it is because the dispute will be between the SPD and the CDU/CSU. The Free Democrats are guilty for the political developments of the seventies. The Free Democrats may certainly have tried to slow down erroneous political developments here and there, but the trend continues to go to the left. The speed has been slowed down a bit. Mr Genscher sits in the brakeman's cab turning the brakes desperately, and Helmut Schmidt sits on a ship that is drifting to the left, looking out the porthole on the right and saluting with his pilot's cap.

[Question] The attacks against Helmut Schmidt just cannot be disregarded. Do you think that in the election campaign there will be a polarization over the personalities of Strauss and Schmidt and nothing else?

[Answer] Helmut Schmidt has devised the election campaign so as to make himself appear as the embodiment of peace. This is a grotesque misjudgment. His policy is leading to gradual rapprochement with, and growing submission to the Soviet Union and is unsuited for preventing the danger of a third world war; it is rather apt to increase that danger. As long as he adopts this position we cannot but take the offensive; that goes without saying.

[Question] What will be the stance of a Chancellor Strauss on development policy? This is a question which very much interests our listeners in the world.

[Answer] It will be very realistic, highly sober and quite honest. We will help our friends, we will aspire to partnerships, we will tell our friends of different skin colors the truth about what they can do on their part and what we have to contribute lest the Third and Fourth Worlds be victimized by further economic declines. But the oil-producing countries, too, which largely belong to the Third World, must make their contribution lest the economically weak countries of the Third and Fourth Worlds, having neither crude oil nor in most cases any other raw material resources, often having neither other raw material resources nor energy resources, completely go to the dogs.

SPD's Wischnewski Reacts

LD211116 Hamburg DPA in German 1012 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Bonn--The SPD leadership has reacted to the Berlin CDU congress and the attacks made there on the SPD and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt with unusually hefty criticism of the CDU, CSU and their candidate for chancellor, Franz Josef Strauss. In Bonn, Deputy SPD Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski described the CDU congress to the press as being to a large extent "political running-amok." The CDU intends to run not an election campaign but a slander campaign. The CDU claims to be a major integrative force and assumes the intellectual profile of a political sect.

In Wischnewski's view, Strauss' speech in Berlin had brought the principles of his "Sonthofen strategy" [congress at which Strauss expounded his political philosophy] to light at the congress. The German language had experienced a black day and had been used as a weapon for intellectual civil war where arguments would have been more appropriate. With his increasing shows of strength, Strauss is trying to overcome an attitude of resignation in some CDU circles. Anyone who says one should not change horses in midstream no longer believes in his own candidate, said Wischnewski.

The SPD politician described the CDU's language, which at the same time revealed its philosophy, as frightening. He quoted remarks about Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt such as "tool of Moscow's psychological warfare," "megalomaniac" and "war chancellor" and said that the overwhelming majority of the population does not believe such words and rejects such language.

Attempt To 'Limit Desperation'

[Commentary signed fr.: "Compulsion To Be Optimistic"]

[Text] Kohl and Geissler have done at the CDU congress what was necessary from the viewpoint of the party: They have tried to limit the desperation which has easily spread within such a moody and unstable entity as the Union since election defeats like those in the Saarland and North Rhine-Westphalia. Strauss did the same thing a short time ago at the CSU congress in Ingolstadt. Since time is passing by, the Union has decided that the election campaign will continue with Strauss as candidate for chancellor. Continuous murmurings as to whether this is good or whether somebody better might be found (as a reminder: Nobody in the party thought 1 year ago that Albrecht would be a safe winner), would be the worst thing for the Union. It would not help any if it were now to approach the SPD submissively.

A policy of embraces might be promising with regard to the intermediate future, as the SPD experienced after 1958. But embraces out of desperation have little publicity effect. Whether the Union will make an acceptable offer to the voter as a party of the citizen responsible for himself versus the socially administered citizen, as a party of clear borders vis-a-vis the East, will be seen on 5 October; the consequences should be considered thereafter. These three positions have been outlined by the Union in Berlin and in Ingolstadt.

It can also derive a certain degree of optimism (certainly no surety of victory) from the fact that North Rhine-Westphalia is not the whole Federal Republic. It would be premature to conclude from the lead gained by the SPD that the position of the strongest Bundestag party has been lost already. It is noteworthy that secretary General Geissler--particularly him--has put pressure on the FDP; no antechamber begging with regard to the other Duesseldorf losers, those who lost everything there (so far). Those who do not want to have an absolute SPD majority--and most people probably really do not want that--will not find an effective antidote in the FDP, says Geissler. So the Union can tighten the wall separating it from the FDP, creating difficulties for Schmidt who would much rather prefer a coalition with Genscher than an absolute majority for his party. The chancellor's unsocialist cloak has recently become rather threadbare anyway. That is a chance for the Union.

Press Review

DW211136 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 21 May 80

[Press review]

[Text] In reviewing the CDU congress in Berlin's convention center, the daily DIE WELT writes in its editorial: This party convention was also a convention by and for Helmut Kohl. The applause for him made this more than obvious. The opposition leader, too, is experiencing an uplift. Currently the top team sometimes lacks the necessary cohesion, yet the personnel potential of the CDU is impressive indeed, ranging from Stoltenberg to Albrecht, from Spaeth to Bluem. But it is neither the number of cooks nor the quality of the ingredients which alone decide a perfect menu. Strauss has obviously managed to imbue the Union with the will to win, and we are nearly tempted to say: Hammer this will into their heads. Still, on the road toward the goal many people will be wondering whether the style of the race is the proper one for them as well. The vocabulary of the chancellor candidate will continue to scare away many a voter; there should be no illusion about that.

Discussing the speech by the chancellor candidate and its effects on the audience, the Ulm SUEDWESTPRESSE voices the following view: The speech by Franz Josef Strauss at the CDU's Berlin election congress was balm for the souls of the delegates which had become sore with doubts. Could he make the impossible possible, the unexpected attainable after all? The pattern of the Strauss election campaign became evident in Berlin. What alone matters is the struggle between Strauss and Schmidt, with Strauss being the better man since he is clear, unequivocal and true to principles whereas Schmidt is and remains a socialist and is allegedly leading the Federal Republic into submission to the Soviet Union as a figure in the Kremlin's game.

As for the Schmidt-Strauss duel, MUENCHNER MERKUR writes: Any public opinion poll shows that the chancellor is capable of attaining a majority, even in the ranks of CDU/CSU voters, whereas his internal party antagonists are not. The battle plan of the Union must not disregard this difference; it must exploit it awarely. It may be regrettable that nowadays persons are considered more important than programs, but that cannot be helped. It would be a useless venture to try to make a majority of voters believe by 5 October that Schmidt is an unfair chancellor or that he is the leader of the so-called Moscow faction within the SPD.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in its editorial on the Strauss speech above all deals with his style and its effects: The 2-hour speech by the CDU Chancellor Candidate Strauss came down on the delegates of the Berlin CDU congress like a thunderstorm. The CSU has known the structure, the personality and the occasionally boundless rhetoric of its chairman for quite some time; the CDU, however, felt his powerful rhetoric like a medium-sized natural phenomenon, especially since it had been bored earlier by a long series of mediocre, obligatory speeches. No other speaker in Berlin applied such a reverberating air drill to the Helmut Shcmidt monument as did the challenger, Strauss. The appeal may have had the desired effect on the amply demoralized half of the Union. It is a different question whether this will benefit the Union parties in the election campaign. It is the declared goal of the chancellor candidate to shake up the voters. The call to awaken may well sound shrill and possibly dissonant in their ears, however.

Under the heading "Another Kreuth?" NUERNBERGER NACHRICHTEN writes: Under Chancellor Candidate Strauss two parties have been teamed up which are anything but a union. For the time being, however, they have committed themselves to the candidate, not out of enthusiasm but out of a mixture of despair and obstinacy [dennoch-stimmung]. The hopes for a change of mind by the voters on 5 October are minimal. Nobody at the party congress ventured the triumphant announcement that they will achieve victory together with Strauss. All they said was that they will fight with him.

BREMER NACHRICHTEN carries the headline "Look Far Ahead" on its commentary on the conclusion of the CDU congress: Strauss and Giessler wanted the delegates in Berlin to look far ahead. But they did not expect that the view would be that far ahead. It seemed that the Bundestag elections of 5 October 1980 were not the main issue for the delegates, but the elections in 4 years. The die have been cast for this year; nothing basic can be changed any more. People have been betting on Franz Josef Strauss and are waiting anxiously to see if this will work. If Strauss fails he will have failed and not the whole Union. Engagement and readiness to act are being kept within limits. The promised assistance turns out more and more to be lip service.

Strauss Polemics Scored

DW200842 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 20 May 80 p 3

[Commentary signed Zer: "Lacking Brakemen"]

[Text] The parties of the Federal Republic have long been on the election campaign racetrack. Collisions there can never be ruled out. Yet the manner in which the chancellor candidate of the CDU/CSU is already getting out of control is alarming indeed. Ever since the CDU suffered a painful defeat in North Rhine-Westphalia, Franz Josef Strauss has been stepping on the polemic accelerator more and more unscrupulously. Not even his worst adversaries can charge him with suffering from an inferiority complex. Yet the fashion in which he, when he introduced the CDU/CSU election program jointly with Helmut Kohl the other day, contended without blushing that there will be no war in the eighties provided he is elected was no longer embarrasing but profoundly disturbing.

He became even more plain at week's end in Ingolstadt when he addressed the CSU. The slander of political opponents triumphed. Moscow, it was heard there, is interested in a victory of the Social Democrats, and the chancellor has made himself the "useful henchman of psychological warfare" by Moscow. The whole thing then climaxed in the contention that the Soviet Union would not have invaded Afghanistan had the CDU and the CSU been in power. This is a mixture of blindness and pathological self-conceit. Regrettably there seems to be no one in the CDU/CSU capable of slowing their own candidate down.

CABINET DECREES EXPORTS TO IRAN BANNED

NC211217 Paris AFP in English 1212 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Paris, May 21 (AFP)--France today banned exports to Iran except for food, medicines and medical supplies. The measure covers all export and re-export contracts concluded since November 4 last year when the American hostages were seized. A decree to this effect was adopted by the Cabinet at its regular weekly meeting today.

This temporary measure follows the European Economic Community (EEC) foreign ministers' unanimous decision on May 18 in Naples on banning exports to Iran. It complies with the earlier April 22 decision by the ministers, as confirmed at the subsequent European Council (summit) meeting in Luxembourg, a Cabinet spokesman said.

LEADERS REMARK ON WARSAW SUMMIT WITH BREZHNEV

Giscard Comment

LD211517 Paris LE MONDE in French 21 May 80 p 3

[Unattributed report: "I Hoped These Talks Might Be Useful and They Were"]

[Text] On his arrival in Saxon-Sion, where he had come to celebrate the sixth anniversary of his election as president, Mr Valery Giscard d'Estaing said: "When France, or the French president, meets with the Soviet head of state for a detailed examination of the current international situation...you can be sure that he is reflecting the whole population's deep aspiration.

"Diplomacy does not consist in drafting communiques but in meeting with leaders and analyzing a situation, in explaining your views very frankly on issues and I did this (in Warsaw--LE MONDE note) with the greatest clarity....

"Communication does not solve problems but the absence of communication builds up misunderstandings. It is therefore important to say in the clearest of terms how we analyze the situation, even when our positions are different. In the case of Afghanistan our positions are different and I said so.

"I believe that no such clear explanation of Western reactions and the reactions of a country like France had yet been given. Indeed this explanation is likely to be taken into consideration by our interlocutors.

"International conferences are not intended to provide a spectacle; they are intended to find solutions to problems. I am convinced that there is not a single sensible person in the whole world who does not think it is useful, at present, for officials to examine the facts of the situation, as well as its causes and the initiatives which should be taken to try and reduce tension. That is what I wanted to do and what I did. I stated in advance that I was not seeking success. I wanted these talks to be useful and they were. I can tell you that our interlocutors listened to me very carefully when I told them our view with the utmost frankness.

"As far as I am concerned, I think that if we want to find a joint answer the top leaders must meet each other. At present the international timetable means that such a meeting cannot take place before 1981. If this meeting is to be useful it must not be too big. It must be attended by those who exercise essential responsibility in the search for peace and international detente."

Francois-Poncet Addresses Deputies

LD211546 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Jean Francois-Poncet addressed the deputies a short time ago. The foreign minister clarified the results of the Warsaw summit to them. He said that by going in person to Warsaw the president of the republic had wanted to throw all of France's weight into the balance and onto the side of peace. He clarified the French position regarding the Afghan crisis; Afghanistan must not become a bridgehead [place d'armes] directed against the Soviet Union; the Afghan people must be allowed to freely decide their own destiny and the powers must be brought to recognize its sovereignty. Jean Francois-Poncet concluded that France would continue to pursue its foreign policy as it intends without asking for a preliminary endorsement.

Summit 'Justified'

LD211801 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Francois-Poncet is on the front line. After the Warsaw summit it is naturally Foreign Affairs Minister Jean Francois-Poncet who has been entrusted with explaining the whys and hows of the Giscard-Brezhnev encounter, to explain it to France's allies and also to the French people. This is an impossible mission as far as the United States is concerned because the Americans are furious with Paris. On the other hand, the mission was accomplished as far as Germany is concerned; Helmut Schmidt expressed satisfaction with President Giscard d'Estaing's initiatives. This afternoon at the Palais Bourbon many deputies were gathered in session to hear the French foreign minister justify the Warsaw summit. You can hear Jean Francois-Poncet at the assembly rostrum. [Begin Francois-Poncet recording] France considers that to try and isolate the Soviet Union diplomatically would be a serious political error. It is undoubtedly important to firmly express the Western countries' viewpoint in the face of certain recent actions taken by the Soviet Union. This was done in Warsaw. France will continue to carry out its independent policy. It will do it through concerted action with its partners and allies regarding the topics of discussion, but it will do it in complete freedom of judgement and initiatives because it is convinced this is the best way of serving peace. [end recording]

Answering the minister, one of his predecessors, Gaullist Maurice Couve de Murville, said France had been right to maintain a dialogue with Moscow but he considered the Warsaw summit to be "useless."

LE MONDE: GISCARD RETURNS 'EMPTYHANDED' FROM WARSAW

LD220819 Paris LE MONDE in French 21 May 80 p 3

[Bernard Guetta dispatch: "A Meeting Which Merely Enabled Them To Meet Each Other"]

[Text] Warsaw--In short the meeting enabled them to meet each other and that is not really miraculous when the two interlocutors had agreed to meet and when one was so impatient that he spilled the beans 48 hours too soon. There were no results, however hypothetical. "Are you satisfied, Mr President?" Mr Giscard d'Estaing looked at the microphone being held out to him at Warsaw's military airport, hesitated for a moment and replied that he did not like to use this adjective. He prefers to say that these talks had been "useful." Did they help to start "a process of easing" international tension? When asked that, the president remained silent and avoided the question, falling back on a safe question asked by a Soviet journalist.

To say "yes" would have been to say too much and "no" would have been blunt. "The talks with Mr Brezhnev," Mr Giscard d'Estaing explained, "achieved their goal: to provide an opportunity for a top-level explanation of the international situation and the way of reducing the tensions affecting it."

This statement is almost the same as the first lines of the three-point statement read a little earlier by Elysee spokesman Blot. First point, Afghanistan: "The explanations given by both sides showed very different positions which remain very different.... The French positions and analysis were explained in the clearest possible way. However, the talks revealed a desire to seek a political solution to the Afghanistan problem. That is an indication which had already been given by Mr Gromyko in Paris and Mr Brezhnev repeated it emphatically. Only by pursuing dialogue can the possibilities of moving toward this political solution be evaluated."

Second, the discussions included "several positive elements on other subjects," but they were apparently minor enough not to be reported, any more than the Madrid conference was, for instance. Mr Giscard d'Estaing countered the Warsaw Pact's recent proposal to call a world conference with the proposal for a "summit between the main countries responsible."

"In order to make it possible," the French declaration says, "for such a summit to meet in 1981, every effort must be made to avoid increasing the causes of international tension between now and then." This warning could apply to either of the two superpowers but it was accompanied by a passage on "the usefulness and necessity for all countries to make a contribution" to securing the release of the Tehran hostages.

This Monday 19 May, when the two heads of state accompanied by their foreign ministers met with Mr Gierek in the white room of Wilanow Castle at 1000 hours, they began by irritable attacks in meterological terms. Mr Gierek said that it is "western Europe which has delayed giving spring its visa." Mr Giscard d'Estaing said however that "the cold air is coming from the north of the empire." Mr Gierek translated and Mr Brezhnev said it came from the "north of the Atlantic." Before lunch, attended by those already mentioned and the Polish foreign minister, the two heads of state had a private meeting. At 1500 hours when they parted and when Mr Gierek and Mr Giscard d'Estaing had a private conversation a preliminary assessment could be drawn up.

Considerable Advantages for Mr Brezhnev and Mr Gierek

For the chairman of the Supreme Soviet Presidium the assessment is excellent. Mr Brezhnev did not make a single concession (the French statement bears witness to that) and did not alter any of his arguments. However, on the one hand he has just highlighted and accentuated Western discord and on the other he has shown his public opinion, and public opinion of the people's democracies and the Third World countries that the occupation and normalization of Afghanistan has by no means isolated his country on the world scene. Better still, a few months later the French president attested to his "insistence" on seeking a political solution to the Afghan problem.

For Mr Gierek the benefits are considerable, too. He has twice successfully carried out two delicate missions entrusted to him by Moscow in the space of a few months: the European communist parties' conference in Paris and Monday's meeting. He is the most brilliant child of the socialist camp and on the strength of this his personal position has been strengthened and his internal policy--pragmatic and flexible amid the Catholic, economic and dissident hazards--consolidated.

Aside from the most highly politicized dissident circles the national pride of seeing Warsaw play such an active role is promoting political stability. Finally, Poland's external image, which is already generally good, has been further improved by this event at a time when Warsaw urgently needs foreign financing.

What about the French president? He was able to verify that Mr Brezhnev and Mr Gromyko speak the same language (it seems that Paris had some doubts on this point); to note that what Moscow calls a "political solution" still means international recognition of Mr Karmal's government and suppression of the rebels' bases; and to echo the Warsaw Pact proposal for a world conference with the idea of a summit between the main countries responsible (Note: Although Mr Giscard d'Estaing specified that he had not drawn up any list, such a summit could include the USSR, the United States, Britain, France, FRG, Japan, China. The Kremlin would clearly feel uncomfortable in such a gathering and this idea has nothing attractive as far as it is concerned). This is very little given the cost. What seemed difficult to imagine before the French declaration on Monday has proved right: Mr Giscard d'Estaing had received no assurances before leaving for Warsaw and has come back emptyhanded.

L'HUMANITE HITS MUSKIE'S 'OFFHAND' TREATMENT OF AFGHAN PROPOSAL

LD211209 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 17 May 80 p 1

[Yves Moreau editorial: "Coming to an Understanding Instead of Confronting One Another"]

[Text] According to an Austrian commentator, Mr Edmund Muskie's greenness as American secretary of state should be acknowledged as his main quality. However, in Vienna Mr Muskie pushed bogus artlessness too far when he accused the Soviet Union of being against an "atmosphere of restraint" in the international sphere.

After all, Mr Muskie could not have forgotten the circumstances under which President Carter recently put him in charge of American diplomacy. An armed operation attempted against Iran was disapproved of by Mr Cyrus Vance, who resigned. Apparently, not sharing Mr Vance's scruples, Mr Muskie agreed to succeed him without the least hesitation.

It is regrettable that he failed to advise Mr Carter to show more restraint. Ant it is also regrettable that Mr Muskie himself has not shown a little more restraint.

In fact, no sooner had he learned about the initiatives taken in Kabul and approved in Warsaw with a view to a political solution in Afghanistan than he rejected them. As we know, the aim of these proposals is to open Pakistani-Afghan and Iranian-Afghan negotiations whose conclusions could be guaranteed by the USSR and the United States, thus creating a situation which would make the withdrawal of Soviet troops possible. This offer has aroused such interest in a country like India that it immediately sent its foreign minister to confer with the Afghan leaders.

However, without even trying to obtain any additional information, Mr Muskie declared that these proposals are merely "illusory" and "cosmetic."

The least that can be said of such an attitude is that it in no way testifies to the sincerity of the emotion shown in Washington with respect to the Afghan affair. In fact, all the din orchestrated by the United States and its allies' propaganda with respect to the subject has merely been aimed at justifying measures decided long before the Afghan events, especially with respect to the installation of new American nuclear missiles in Europe.

As for the initiatives just taken by the socialist countries at their meeting in Warsaw, their importance is such that Western captials have after all not dared to treat them in such an offhand manner as Mr Muskie has treated the Afghan statement. The Warsaw Pact member states start with an analysis of the international situation which shows not only the decisive progress achieved by peace-loving forces in the past 25 years but also some serious reasons for concern which have appeared very recently. The idea of a world conference which they advocate is a logical result of this analysis; it is possible to convene it with some chance of success; it would preserve and consolidate detente.

The call advocating the convening of a world conference at the highest level is accompanied by a number of other specific proposals aimed at stopping the arms race, reducing arms stocks and continuing the process leading toward security and cooperation in Europe which was started in Helsinki.

But even though the Warsaw statement has not yet given rise to any official reaction in Western capitals, the government press has immediately given it an unfriendly reception. It is "propaganda," it writes, among other things, with more or less subtle variations, referring to "a trap" and a "seduction operation" which foretells "interminable discussions...."

This is a well-known refrain which has continually been sung in opposition to any initiative favorable to disarmament and peace.

If any propaganda is being made, it is propaganda for detente. How can you fail to feel sorry that NATO does not indulge in such propaganda?

And is it merely propaganda? Why not put the USSR and the other socialist countries to the test by taking them at their word?

Mr Francois-Poncet said in Vienna yesterday that you should "opt for understanding rather than for confrontation." This is precisely the choice offered by the Warsaw statement, by indicating specific means for making a peaceful option prevail. Namely, means which do not represent a whole which you have to take or leave but, rather, realistic themes for negotiations which would not rule out any initiative aimed at international collective security and transcendence of political blocs.

The announcement that Leonid Brezhnev and Mr Giscard d'Estaing are to meet in Warsaw is a good omen. Such dialogue could lead to salutary large-scale talks. This is a historic opportunity. Together, France and the USSR can make the voice of reason and peace heard.

LE MATIN VIEWS POTENTIAL 'WORLD PARTITION' BY U.S., USSR

LD210755 Paris LE MATIN in French 16 May 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Tall Story or 'Another Yalta?'"]

[Text] The Karmal government, which was installed in Kabul by Soviet troops in December 1979 and has been subjected to the Kremlin's military control ever since, has put forward a proposal for opening bilateral discussions with Iran and Pakistan and suggested that the USSR and the United States should jointly guarantee any settlement which might be concluded. In exchange, Kabul asserts, the Red Army would pull out in a "limited" manner from Afghan territory. In short, Moscow, which has invaded Afghanistan, which is occupying that country and which is laying down the law there, is asking Washington not only to endorse the new situation but also to help it to ward off the dangers which the Islamic and nationalist movements fighting against the Soviet-Afghan regime represent to it.

On his arrival in Vienna, where he is to meet Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko, the new U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie called these proposals "illusory, ambiguous and without serious bases."

In view of all that President Carter has said about the Afghan affair, in view of the campaign in support of the boycott of the Moscow games which he is conducting and in view of the urgent demands for sanctions which he has made to his European allies, any agreement on his part now to negotiate a "status quo"--since this is what it would be--in Central Asia with Leonid Brezhnev would be hard to understand. And yet nothing indicates that some day Moscow's proposal will not be considered. Diplomacy is naturally slow and who knows what will happen after the American presidential elections in November? Will Jimmy Carter, or his successor, be as determined in their condemnation of the Kabul coup as Carter is now? As for the Soviet-Afghan initiative, it has been prompted both by a desire for normalization and by the uncertainty which apparently prevails in Afghanistan. The Islamic and nationalist resistance to the Kabul government could in fact become reality and the country could find itself caught up in guerrilla warfare.

It is in the Kremlin's obvious interest to ensure that its "noninterference" is recognized, even if only in diplomatic terms, since this would enable it to deal with this kind of test, when the time comes.

Consequently, Washington, like Moscow, could some day reach the conclusion that "detente" is indeed worth the sacrifice of a people, the Afghan people. Talleyrand's cynicism has found many followers in the sphere of international relations. The spirit of Yalta is still alive. Could the Kabul coup have started the two superpowers on the path to a new partition of the world between themselves?

MEXICAN PRESIDENT, GISCARD DISCUSS MIDDLE EAST, ENERGY

LD211413 Paris LE MONDE in French 18-19 May 80 p 16

[Unattributed report: "Mr Giscard d'Estaing Hopes That Mexico and France Will Become 'Real Associates'"]

[Excerpt] Mexican head of state Jose Lopez Portillo had two private meetings with Mr Giscard d'Estaing lasting a total of 2 1/2 hours on Friday, 16 May, the first day of his visit to France. The two presidents discussed notably the situations in the Middle East and in Central America and energy questions, according to Elysee assistant spokesman Blot. During the second meeting in the afternoon Mr Lopez Portillo and Mr Giscard d'Estaing also studied the state of the North-South dialogue and the problem of East-West relations.

A few changes in protocol were made during the welcoming ceremony at Orly on Friday. The most noted was Mrs Giscard d'Estaing's performance as interpreter, translating her husband's welcoming speech into Spanish.

The ministers accompanying Mr Lopez Portillo (foreign relations, patrimony and industrial development, communications and transport, tourism) had talks with their French counterparts.

At the end of a dinner given in his honor by Mr Giscard d'Estaing, Mr Lopez Portillo stated in particular: "The first principle which should govern international economic relations is that of joint responsibility by all members of the international community for the fate of the weakest and most underprivileged."

The head of state noted that the tensions which have arisen in the "exploited" countries could pose dangers for all the others, including the most powerful. After advocating a new international economic system, he expressed the wish to conclude with France "a general economic cooperation agreement going beyond trade alone."

In his reply Mr Giscard d'Estaing said that Franco-Mexican cooperation "is based on respect for diversity and rejection of hegemonies." He added: "France is pleased to find in Mexico an important interlocutor which now has a recognized place on the international scene." He also pointed out that "the particularly rapid development" of bilateral relations "confirms the vast opportunities open to us." "The increase of investment made together and the transfers of technology stress that our two countries can now be real associates rather than mere trade partners," the president stressed. He reiterated the support that France was one of the first to give to Mexican initiatives with regard to international economic relations.

JAPANESE FOREIGN MINISTER OKITA CONSULTS WITH FRANCOIS-PONCET

OW220021 Tokyo KYODO in English 0014 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] Paris May 21 KYODO--French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet said Wednesday that France is attaching importance to the maintenance of dialogue between the East and West. He told Japanese Foreign Minister Saburo Okita that France anticipates changes in Soviet policies through such dialogues.

Okita and Francois-Poncet met for some three hours here Wednesday in the 16th Japan-France regular foreign ministers' consultations. They discussed wide range of subjects, including the recent meeting held in Warsaw between French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev, the coming Venice summit of Western industrialized nations and the Iran and Middle East problems. In briefing Okita on the French-Soviet summit, Francois-Poncet said that France stressed to the Soviet Union that it will be to the interest of the Soviet Union to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan at an early date.

Okita flew into Paris Tuesday night after holding talks with British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington in London.

AUSTRIA'S ROESCH IN PARIS; NEW 'MIRAGE 50' OFFERS

AU211145 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 21 May 80 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report by Georg Possanner]

[Text] Vienna/Paris--Further cooperation in the armaments sector is the central topic of Defense Minister Roesch's current visit to France that will last until Friday, 23 May. Moreover, France is still trying to sell the Austrian Army 24 "Mirage 50" interceptor planes, and reportedly is ready to reduce the price from 140 to between 105 and 110 million schillings per plane. A delegation consisting of three French generals visited Austria 2 weeks ago to sound out possibilities for return business at the Ranshofen Metal Works. France is reportedly willing to grant Austria a 9-year loan and to prefinance the first installment for 1980. Roesch is accompanied by the Austrian Army's chief test pilot, Lt Col Josef Bernecker, who has just returned from testing the American F-16 in the United States. Should Austria buy the "Mirage 50," France is said to be ready to cede the Austrian Steyr-Daimler-Puch Corporation "substantial market shares" for tank and arms exports to the Middle East and Africa.

SANCTIONS AGAINST IRAN COME INTO FORCE RETROACTIVELY

LD220133 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2200 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] The sanctions against Iran adopted by Italy are coming into force. This is established by two decrees issued by the finance minister. In particular, the export of all goods to Iran is subject to ministerial authorization. It is also determined that, while particular authorizations granted before 4 November 1979 remain operative, as far as all other authorizations granted subsequently are concerned the customs service will allow exports only on the basis of bank credit resulting from a contract concluded prior to 4 November 1979. These restrictions will not be applied to the export of food and medicines. Finally, effective today, all provisions authorizing in a general manner foreign exchange liabilities and transactions concerning Iran are suspended.

L'UNITA SCOPES EC DECISION ON IRAN SANCTIONS

[Unattributed commentary: "Italy Not a Country of Servants"]

[Text] Now that Naples has produced a decision which aligns Europe with the most extremist U.S. line, there are some fundamental questions to be asked. First, the political questions. Will the sanctions facilitate the road to resolving the distressing hostages issue or will everything be more difficult? Why was no heed paid to the appeals--couched in dramatic language--from Bani-Sadr for a decision that would help a "pondering Iran"? Is the objective really to regain the hostages or is it to punish a people who have freed themselves from a bloodthirsty regime and who are agonizingly trying to find their way? Was the intention to show that, in their own way, the Europeans too can carry out their own raids? This is more than an impression: There are real grounds for suspecting that an attempt was made in Naples to force peoples' hands to thwart the currently developing detente plans and force Europe onto a risky, extremist path.

Apart from this there are questions concerning national interests. Will the Europeans or Iran pay the more bitter price for the suspension of exchanges and trade? Let Prime Minister Cossiga remove his helmet for a moment and explain why Italy must surrender extraordinary prospects for economic cooperation with an oil-producing country--if nothing else. Is it merely out of an enslavement to Washington? Italy is not a country of servants.

REACTION TO CONI DECISION FAVORING MOSCOW TRIP CONTINUES

Parliament To Discuss Issue

LD220138 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2200 GMT 21 May 80

[Excerpts] The Parliament will discuss the issue of Italian participation in the Moscow Olympics. The decision was made tonight by the chairmen of the parliamentary groups in the chamber after the Democratic Party of Proletarian Unity, the Liberal Party and the Social Democratic Party submitted motions on the subject. The Social Democrats in particular insisted on a debate which they wanted to be held before the next local elections. The majority of the chairmen of the parliamentary groups, however, definitively fixed the date of the debate on the Olympics for the afternoon of 10 June.

The result of the parliamentary vote is uncertain since the political forces are divided and even the government majority is not compact.

Meanwhile, polemics have increased in the last few hours following the statements by defense minister Lagorio which emphasize that no permission will be given to athletes in military service, and by Minister of Education Sarti which says that the Italian National Olympic Committee's request to hold extraordinary exams for athletes going to Moscow will not be granted. All this, it is said, is in keeping with the decision of the council of ministers which said "no" to Italy's participation in the Olympics.

Political Controversy Unabated

AU220859 Rome ANSA in English 0850 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 22 (ANSA)--The Italian Olympic Committee's [CONI] decision to send athletes to the Moscow summer Olympics, which ran counter to the government's banning attendance by an official team, has unleashed a heated controversy in the political world which gives no signs of abating.

Reactions within the Christian Democrat Party (DC) were particularly spirited. Vito Scalia and Mario Segni maintain that Italy has lost credibility and hardliner Massimo de Carolis said the CONI move "is unacceptable rather than questionable, and in any case has no bearing since the decision is only up to the government". Another DC notable Public Fiori asserted that "a serious government cannot allow CONI to determine international policy decisions."

Social Democrat Party (PSDI) M.P. Luigi Preti said that the CONI move "has bolstered the sad fame of rogues we unfortunately enjoy. The government's no was purely platonic and, under the counter, encouraged CONI to say yes". Another Social Democrat, Michele di Giesi, urged CONI to "verify its decision with a referendum among all possible participants in the games".

The Communist Party (PCI) on the other hand was very critical of the Education Ministry's refusal to grant concessions to student athletes taking part in the Olympics, and organize special exam sessions in September. PCI Education Department chief Achille Occhetto said that "the government is showing that it takes no heed of the autonomy of the sport world's positions. The Education Ministry's response is completely absurd".

Socialist Party (PSI) member and Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio came under attack from a fellow Socialist, Michele Achilli, who charged that the ban against athletes in the armed forces attending the games "would not be understood by the large majority of Italian sportsmen who consider the Moscow event an important change for international competition".

The conflicting views within the PSI were stressed by PSI-Neofascist M.P. Franco Franchi who said that PSI Secretary "Bettino Craxi's pro-boycott stance is countered by the party's left which aligns itself with the Communist position of deference to Moscow".

The government came under attack from the right-of-center Liberal Party whose Secretary Valerio Zanone said that "the government's stance on the Olympics is weakly justified and therefore unacceptable. It decided in fact to not allow official participation with flags and anthem with the justification that, since other countries decided not to go, the international nature of the games no longer exists. This is a very weak justification which links the decision to those already taken by other countries".

Zanone concluded saying that it was necessary to assert that "we did not want to go to Moscow, not in compliance with American athletes, but because of the Soviet Union's aggressive foreign policy and repressive domestic policy".

The controversy over the Olympics overshadowed the electoral campaign for the June 8 regional, provincial and municipal elections. Among the few strictly political speeches, the most important was delivered by PCI Secretary Enrico Berlinguer who stepped up his attacks against the government and urged the end of the present three party coalition government (DC, PSI and Republicans). "The present government coalition is not only weak and discredited, but dangerous for the country," he said. "The problem of governability cannot be solved without confronting and resolving the nation's basic problems. All these basic problems are irresolvable without the unity of all the parties which intend to commit themselves, albeit with different ideological motivations, in a program of transformation and which can assure a vast area of consensus for a general and in-depth process of renewal".

No Education Ministry Concessions

AU220821 Rome ANSA in English 0800 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 22 (ANSA)--The Italian Education Ministry has announced that no concessions will be granted to students or teachers wanting to attend the Olympic games in Moscow this summer. A ministry note disclosed that it has turned down a request made by the Italian National Olympic Committee (CONI) to set up a special session of [word indistinct] tests and university admission examinations in September for athletes taking part in the summer games. CONI defied the government Tuesday and voted to send a team to Moscow. The Cabinet had supported a boycott of the games and decided against an official presence of Italian sportsmen at the Olympics.

TUNISIAN DEFENSE MINISTER STRESSES LINKS IN DINNER ADDRESS

LD211518 Tunis TAP in English 1408 GMT 21 May 80

[Pool item]

[Text] Rome, May 21 (TAP)--In an address deli red in the course of a dinner offered Monday in his honour by his Italian counterpart, the Tunisian National Defence Minister Mr Slaheddine Baly stressed that the official visit he is paying to Italy is certainly a proof of the two countries' will to be further linked and of making more fruitful and more active the secular dialogue between the two banks of the Mediterranean. Such a dialogue stems from a very ancient historic patrimony and Tunisia's most important wish is to see this dialogue more and more [word indistinct] and more and more positive.

"Indeed, went on Mr Baly, our two Mediterranean peoples' common yearnings for progress and prosperity within peace and stability compels our two countries to be constantly anxious about overcoming the conjunctural difficulties which can impede our cooperation.

"Our two governments' responsibility is, therefore, lying in overcoming the current difficulties, in jointly making future prospects, in laying down solid foundations for a sincere and fruitful cooperation based on historical and geographic necessities as well as on reciprocal interests.

"We have thus to better consider the future of our relations with more optimism and confidence."

Mr Slaheddine Baly added that taking into account Tunisia's options, "This country has been led to set up priorities, the top of which it puts its care to ensure chances for protection in economic, social and [words indistinct] only at a second level the race for armaments.

"However, added Mr Baly, our philosophy in life, your [words indistinct] the demands of our civilization as well as our material and spiritual assets and finally the necessity for us to defend our sovereignty and our independence compel us to reinforce our armed forces as part of our theory of a generalized popular defence. We are obliged in this regard to endow our army with deterrent means which will allow it to perform at best the mission it is in charge of.

"Tunisia praises the support which had always been granted to it by Italy and hopes to find in this country the best defender of its cause at the European level so that 'the Mediterranean policy' led by the Common Market be more efficient for the good of these two zones to which are belonging Tunisia and Italy respectively".

The Tunisian national defence minister moreover stressed that the economic security of the Mediterranean basin depends from [as received] that of the countries which surround it. "This is why," he stated, "we deem that the future of our relations with European countries should be clarified. Indeed, it seems that the entry of Spain, Greece and Portugal in the European Economic Community would create a lack of balance in the Mediterranean basin and we have to foresee and try to avoid the negative consequences which may result from such an affair". Mr Baly reminded in this respect that Tunisia and Italy share the same future and that both countries are appealed to jointly work for ensuring peace not only in the north and south of the Mediterranean basin but also in all parts of the world. "We must (?now)," he added, "defend together all the just causes and I am convinced that Tunisia's security is also Italy's security".

"We are conscient [as received] of the importance of our commitment consisting in further strengthening the relations between our two peoples united by a joint yearning for peace and justice. We are convinced that we can rely on your help and on the actions you make with a view to bolstering our relations in all fields."

PCI'S BOFFA HITS UNANNOUNCED 'MODIFICATIONS' TO FOREIGN POLICY

LD211403 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 17 May 80 pp 1, 21

[Guiseppe Boffa article: "Italy's Foreign Policy Has Changed"]

[Text] Something serious is happening at the moment concerning Italy's relations with the rest of the world. Without a public debate, without a decision from Parliament and without even a frank and explicit explanation within the parties concerned, the Cossiga government is silently modifying our country's foreign policy and therefore our international position. It is modifying it not only with respect to the notable effort made in recent years to give our diplomacy a broad basis of national consensus but also with respect to the very program stances with which the government presented itself to Parliament. Cossiga has not yet clarified what he meant with his obscure reference at the Christian Democratic Party meeting in Florence to imminent decisions which have allegedly "split" the Italian people; he is, however, clarifying it in his actions.

Undertakings are being made, while those doing so do not even have the courage to explicitly state their significance or to frankly explain their consequences. The recent NATO meeting approved documents which silently extend the Atlantic Alliance's sphere of action to part of Asia and which in various, albeit hidden, ways imply our country's involvement in military operations outside the treaty's traditional area of application. This therefore implies the shelving or at least a serious compromising of the strictly defensive and geographically limited interpretation of the Atlantic pact which has not only always been supported by recent Italian governments but which was one of the reference points for the old center-left governments.

With the same procedure, Italy is being involved in another tragic arms race and the good intentions to support the disarmament cause--often announced in the past--are disappearing beneath indifference and cynicism. It all began with last December's decision to approve the deployment of Euromissiles, taken without even seeking or explicitly requesting the guarantees which the very forces now in government said they considered necessary. But since then matters have been aggravated, especially with the recent NATO meeting which effectively only took further rearmament measures.

Italy undertook to support the famous SALT II treaty and to request its prompt ratification. Now it is no longer mentioned, since the U.S. decision to shelve the already signed treaty is accepted, as is a vague and in no way binding reference from the new U.S. secretary of state to his administration's alleged continuing "interest" in the issue (How? In what forms? How soon?) Even the attempts made by some European governments, which are our allies, after all--and primarily the German Government--to reopen responsibly--and not with mere words belied by deeds--the possibility of balanced arms reduction on the European Continent are being ignored in Rome and therefore tacitly sabotaged. There remains solely the approval of further military spending and initiatives--and the fact that this has happened under obvious and massive U.S. pressure is no justification.

Under such conditions even European policy, solemnly proclaimed on a thousand occasions, is disrupted. Indeed you cannot pretend to believe that such approaches are favorable to Europe and its unity. And the rhetoric about Atlantic "solidarity" is a smokescreen which conceals the real nature of the issues in question. It is not an alliance--which nobody challenges--that is at stake. The calculated remarks conceal a thrust toward a return to the old rigidity of blocs and to their drastic counterposition in all fields, with a process which would indiscriminately tear the entire fabric of relations patiently woven over the past 20 years.

In this framework, the pressure exerted on the sporting world to torpedo the Moscow Olympics is very serious. It is a gesture which goes against even common sense as well as against Italy's entire former policy in this field. To claim loyalty to detente under such circumstances is simply a meaningless verbal exercise. In fact both the spirit and the letter of the Helsinki accord, which Italy signed, are being thrown overboard. It certainly does not auger will for the Madrid meeting, wishes for whose success are being expressed verbally.

A few slight glimmers of light seem to have appeared in the past few days in the gray international climate. But these signs are still too fragile. Both the powers at the head of the two alignments have been pushing toward another head-on counterposition between the blocs in recent months.

But for this very reason it was and still is the duty of the other countries, which would pay--and to an extent are already paying--the price for this decline toward more serious conflicts, to follow a different path. Even after Afghanistan the European states demonstrated the intention to move in this direction, seeking a political solution which would of course involve the Soviet troops' withdrawal. But the Italian Government's policy has retained very little even of this autonomous effort. Now, on 17 May, something similar is in danger of happening with respect to Iran and the suggested sanctions against the Tehran government. Not even the terrible warning from the abortive U.S. raid seems to have worked.

The issues at stake are not secondary. We are talking about peace. This was well understood by the German voters of North Rhine-Westphalia who, according to reliable commentators, voted in their recent regional elections with an eye above all to the need to deal with the imminent threats and to defend detente. [paragraph continues]

AN equally frank debate is needed in Italy. We cannot accept the introduction of changes so important to the country's foreign policy almost without the public's knowledge. It does not only concern this or that party. We are all involved--Communists and Socialists, Catholics and non-Catholics. In Italy too the entire country must assert itself forcefully for the defense of detente and our peace, which clearly--following these latest developments--cannot be entrusted to Cossiga and his present government.

BUSINESS TIES, NUCLEAR CONTRACT WITH IRAQ THRIVING

AU200950 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 20 May 80

[Text] Beirut, May 20 (ANSA)--The glowing prospects for Italian business and industry in Iraq outlined by Iraqi Trade Minister Nasan Alin during his recent visit to Rome have been confirmed by Iraqi commercial sources here.

The Baghdad Government's new five-year plan comes at a time when the pace of development in the southwest Asian nation has been sharply stepped up in the areas of public housing, highway construction, new industries, hotels and other tourist facilities and schools.

The level of imports into the country, these sources said, is indicated by the three-month waiting list at the port of Bassora for ships laden with goods for Iraq.

The development plan calls for massive new outlays in the fields of petrochemicals, housing, communications, transport and for the agricultural industry. Also on the drawing boards are vast new irrigation projects for the country-side and a new series of public services for the cities.

Italy's industries can be expected to offer a range of products and service at the Baghdad trade fair in October. Italian Foreign Trade Minister Enrico Manca has been invited to attend the event.

The need for Italy to boost exports to Iraq is illustrated by the trade figures. Last year Italy imported Iraqi crude with a total cost of 2,400 billion lire and exported automobiles, sheet steel and machine tools, along with other finished goods, with a value of 600 billion lire.

A change in the trend began during the first quarter of the current year when Italian companies brought home contracts with Iraq totalling over one billion dollars.

These new trade contracts included a deal wrapped up by GIE [Economic Interest Group] for a 500 million dollar construction job for the electric power station at Baigi.

Nuovo Pignone won a bid worth 210 million dollars to supply compressors to a project in Bumaila and Ghenghini was awarded the contract for the reclamation of potential agricultural land at Abu Ghuraib at a cost of 125 million dollars.

Techinipetrol will supply gas storage tanks to Iraq on a contract worth 120 million dollars.

Among the other contracts now being negotiated is an 800 million dollar deal for conventional and nuclear power plant equipment being bid on by GIE in a consortium with other foreign firms.

Italian state-owned shipbuilder Fincantieri is also negotiating for the construction of four missile-launching frigates, six corvettes and one tender for the Iraqi navy. The removal on May 14 of the American veto on the use of engine parts built in Italy on a General Electric license is expected to ease the way toward wrapping up the deal for the Italian shipbuilder.

COUNCIL SAYS PROPOSAL ON PUBLIC, PRIVATE SECTORS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

LD210650 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0001 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] The Council of the Revolution, meeting yesterday, has ruled that the third version of the government proposals redefining the boundaries between the public and private sectors is unconstitutional. A member of the Council of the Revolution, Lt Col Vitor Alves, disclosing this a few minutes ago, said that a significant majority of councillors had voted against the constitutional committee's finding that the proposals were constitutional. The ANOP news agency quotes other sources as saying that the Council had given the verdict of unconstitutionality fundamentally because the proposals sought to open up the banking sector to private enterprise.

DE CARVALHO ON BREAK WITH FUP, PLANS FOR NEW POPULAR FRONT

LD201144 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 19 May 80

[Pedro Cid studio interview with Maj Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho--live]

[Excerpts] Question] Maj Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho needs no special introduction; everyone knows him. However, his name has recently been particularly linked with the internal conflicts, or the collapse of the Popular Unity Front [FUP] of which he was one of the main motivating forces. I would like to begin by asking why the FUP has collapsed, or is in the process of collapsing. Was it because you tried to dominate it? Did you try to dominate it? Was it because of ideological differences among the various constituent parties?

[Answer] Well, I will begin by telling you that the FUP has not really collapsed. The initials FUP stand for something that has a very concrete existence in our country. It is scattered, dispersed, disorganized, but it represents a huge popular unity force. It is formed by hundreds of thousands of people, if not millions [words indistinct] who are available and totally open to a popular alternative to the crisis that at present prevails in the country.

The popular unity force is a fact and will remain a fact, with the same initials and the same organization. It is true that the internal conflicts which have developed in the 4 months since the launching of the FUP as an organization on 30 January--when I read my political statement at Press House--have resulted in a split within the organization. Nevertheless, I....

[Question] Wasn't that 30 January manifesto of yours to some extent the very cause of this split? Can't the split be traced back, so to speak, to the very launching of the FUP?

[Answer] I do not think so. On 30 January conditions had really been created for the FUP to be a great success since it had the support of a very wide range of political organizations of what is commonly described as the revolutionary left.

[Question] Could you briefly sum up the essence of your present political blueprint?

[Answer] At the risk of speaking in cliches, and I know that when I try to condense my ideas I may make too much use--it may sound as though I am using cliches--the objective is to create a popular alternative as a way out of the present political crisis. The essence of my 30 January declaration is that this blueprint seeks its realization through new democratic practices whereby the broad popular masses will actively participate in the collective life of the nation. [passage indistinct] Parliamentary democracy only requires active participation once every 4 years when people push a vote into a ballot box. This is their only active participation.

We seek a new economic and social policy to provide solutions to the major problems confronting our country, problems such as unemployment, the housing crisis, health and so forth. These solutions will be practical and specific, understandable to the popular and working masses, not in the form of big abstract programs.

And, finally, we seek to give Portugal a different attitude toward world affairs. As far as I and a large section of the revolutionary left are concerned, this must inevitably entail nonalignment with either of the big powers currently seeking world political and economic hegemony. We seek a specific and effective move into what is commonly described as the group of nonaligned countries.

[Question] To achieve all that you need to be organized and that was, I believe, the purpose of the FUP. You have not yet told me what were the specific reasons for the rift, for the split within the FUP and, as far as I am concerned, this is an important question.

[Answer] The crux of the question, the factor that determined the split was, in my opinion, the failure to abide by what had initially been agreed upon in terms of rules of conduct, the rules agreed between myself and the constituent parties of the FUP. These rules required that the political leadership of the FUP not include party leaders. The role of the political forces that supported the blueprint was precisely that: a supportive role of the popular unity blueprint.

[Question] That sounds rather peculiar. How can a partisan organization or, rather, a group of partisan organizations be led by some management council without party leaders and, on the other hand, include someone with the political stature of Maj Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho?

[Answer] Yes, well, my point of view, on which basis the rules of the game were agreed upon at the outset--and this is one of the basic rules on which I make no concessions, and I have always been very frank on this to the parties--my opinion, as I was saying, is that the parties of the revolutionary left which usually support me, which supported me in the 1976 presidential elections and which, generally speaking, continue to support me, have a political image which has badly deteriorated. They had a very active and important role during the revolutionary process in 1974 and 1975 but in the last 6 years their image has been enormously eroded.

[Question] A question that may not be very easy to answer, but this is an open interview: How do you view your own political position in the present context? Don't you yourself feel that your political image has been eroded in the course of the political process?

[Answer] I believe that no Portuguese politician can claim that his image has not suffered erosion. But I believe that, in the eyes of certain quarters, because of the consistency for which I have always strived and which I really make a point of maintaining, and in contrast with the extreme inconsistency shown by major party leaders like Mario Soares, Sa Carneiro, Freitas do Amaral and Alvaro Cunhal, I think that my image has suffered less than theirs.

[Question] To return to the FUP: You have already said that the FUP continues in existence. Nevertheless, I would insist that a popular unity blueprint needs a degree of organization. What will happen now?

[Answer] I have often said that a revolutionary never folds his arms and never allows himself to fall prey to pessimism. At the moment agreement is really impossible. I have decided that I am unable to reconcile myself with the forces that have dissented and broken away from me.

So I am starting again, as befits a revolutionary who sees his project fail only to launch a new one the following day. So I have already set in motion a new process aimed at bringing about the organization of the popular unity forces.

[Question] Which organizations support you?

[Answer] None whatsoever. I totally reject any partisan support. I will create our own organizational backup essentially on the basis of people without party affiliation. [passage indistinct] I am going to launch this project nationwide in terms of an election campaign.

[Question] Is that a categorical statement: You still intend to run as a presidential candidate?

[Answer] Yes, I intend to stand, but first there will the earlier and fundamental stage of the general elections. And I will be there too. I will retain the initials FUP; I will campaign throughout the country for the general elections; I will form a new executive. I am starting from scratch without party support.

CUNHAL CRITICIZES GOVERNMENT, FUP, POLITICAL VIOLENCE

LD191436 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 19 May 80

[Text] Alvaro Cunhal, secretary general of the Portuguese Communist Party, said yesterday at a meeting in Baleizao that a democratic change is needed in Portugal's political life.

The meeting was held to honor the memory of Catarina Eufemia [farmworker allegedly shot dead by the Republican National Guard during the Salazar regime].

Cunhal attacked and criticized the government and said that his party will do its utmost to bring about the government's fall before the elections.

He also criticized the propaganda and election tactics of the leftists and said that the so-called popular unity movement wants to split the left and hinder the Communist Party's progress.

Finally, Cunhal said that terrorism and banditry disguised as political actions only serve the interests of reaction and must therefore be fought and exposed.

THATCHER SENDS LETTER TO OLYMPIC COMMITTEE ASKING FOR BOYCOTT

LD211033 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 21 May 80 pp 1, 36

[Roger Heywook report: "Games Medals Now Devalued Says Thatcher"]

[Text] Without the Americans and West Germans at the Moscow Olympics, "medals will be of inferior worth" and the games "will not be worthy of the name Olympic," Mrs Thatcher said yesterday in an 11th hour plea to the British Olympic committee to reconsider its decision to send a team.

Sir Denis Follows, committee chairman, declined to comment on the letter, which was also sent to each of the 26 governing bodies of sport.

In the letter to Sir Denis and his 32-member committee, Mrs Thatcher said a large number of MPs had voted for a boycott and she was sorry the British Olympic Association had decided to confirm its acceptance of the games invitation. "Since then," the letter said, "condemnation of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has continued to grow. As you know, the United States' and the Federal Republic of Germany's Olympic committees have now decided not to send teams to Moscow.

"Whatever other national Olympic committees may decide, absence of these teams robs the Moscow games of much international competitive significance. Their athletes are among the world leaders in many events and have won a high proportion of medals at recent games. Without the Americans and West Germans and other sporting countries who have also decided to stay away, the games will not be worthy of the name Olympic. Medals won at Moscow will be of inferior worth, and the ceremonies a charade."

Nothing had happened to cause the government to alter its advice to British athletes. Soviet troops still occupied Afghanistan and "cruelly oppress the Afghan people." Despite strict censorship, there were continuing reports of atrocities. "Only the complete withdrawal of Soviet troops will end that, and it is essential that the pressures on the Soviet Union should be maintained."

Mrs Thatcher said the games would only serve the propaganda needs of the Soviet Government, and there was no "effective palliative" such as the cutting out of ceremonies. "As a sporting event the games cannot now satisfy the aspirations of our sportsmen and women. British attendance can only serve to frustrate the interests of Britain."

Mrs Thatcher said in the Commons earlier in the day that she believed it would be "advisable" if Britain's Olympic committee "thought again." A boycott would "bring home to the Russian people more forcibly than anything else" the enormity of what had happened by the Russian invasion of Afghanistan.

Sir Denis Follows said last night that no doubt a statement would be made later in the week when his committee had considered the prime minister's opinions.

Mr Derek Johnson, chairman of the International Athletes Club, said the latest appeal would not resolve their determination to go to Moscow because they were "sick and tired" of the repeated boycott calls. Mrs Thatcher should "get off our backs."

The prime minister's arguments are unlikely to make the British Olympic Association change its decision about sending a team, mainly because the rest of Europe has not followed the West German lead in voting for the boycott, as was thought likely last week.

LORD CARRINGTON CRITICIZED FOR ROLE IN SANCTIONS EPISODE

LD211035 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 21 May 80 pp 1, 38

[James Wightman report: "Carrington 'Went Too Far'"]

[Text] Lord Carrington, foreign secretary, went further than the prime minister and other colleagues wanted when he agreed with other EEC foreign ministers at the weekend that Britain should backdate some economic sanctions against Iran. That became clear last night amid an intensive diplomatic operation by the Foreign Office to explain to President Carter and EEC partners why the backdating decision had been overturned quickly by the government.

Some colleagues also suggested that because, as a peer, Lord Carrington cannot be a member of th Commons, he had failed to appreciate the considerable opposition among MPs to retrospective sanctions.

But the foreign secretary said in the Lords yesterday that he would not be resigning over the affair. Invited by Lord Paget, a Labour peer, to resign, he said: "I don't think I will just yet. I hope you will forgive me."

Lord Carrington and other EEC foreign ministers agreed in Naples at the weekend that there should be backdating of sanctions to Nov. 4, the date when the American hostages in Tehran were seized.

But at a special meeting of senior ministers, including Mrs Thatcher and Lord Carrington, on Monday night the decision was overturned after MPs of all parties had protested in the Commons that they had been misled. They said they had expected the sanctions to apply only from the end of this month under the Iran (temporary powers) bill which was rushed through Parliament last week. Tory whips warned the party leadership that a rebellion of Conservative MPs could have meant the government being defeated in an emergency debate arranged for yesterday.

Mrs Thatcher, who all along had been against backdated sanctions, called a meeting of ministers, and it was quickly agreed that Lord Carrington would have to tell his EEC counterparts that the agreement was off.

In the aftermath of an extraordinary episode, the blame was being put unmistakably on Lord Carrington. Although the possibility of retrospective sanctions had been kept open when legislation was proceeding through the Commons, Mrs Thatcher and others were surprised when they learned that Lord Carrington had actually agreed to such action.

The foreign secretary, explaining the reversal decision reached on Monday night, told the Lords that the government could not ignore the strong opposition in Parliament to any element of retroactivity. He also said it was important that Britain's allies should realize the situation in which the government found itself. No one was backing away from support given to the United States over the hostages.

In the Commons a statement on the government's decision was made by Sir Ian Gilmour, lord privy seal and deputy foreign secretary, who had had to face MP's criticism on the sanctions issue the day before. The sanctions action is in support of President Carter's attempts to secure release of the American hostages held in Iran.

The confusion began because sanctions on existing trading contracts with Iran could be stopped under the Export and Customs (Defense) Act, 1939.

Mr Douglas Hurd, minister of state, Foreign Office, told the Commons last week that no decision had yet been taken to use the 1939 powers and that such a decision was clear that Britain's main competitors were doing the same. [sentence as published]

The sanctions move is not now expected to become effective until the end of this month. The relevant order in council may not be laid this week as had originally been intended.

In the wake of government's reversal decision the emergency debate was reduced in importance yesterday.

There was acclaim from colleagues for Mr Tam Dalyell, Liberal MP for West Lothian, whose persistent criticism of the sanctions moves led to the emergency debate being granted by the speaker, Mr George Thomas, as well as contributing to the pressure on the government to reverse the decision reached by the EEC foreign ministers.

Mr Dalyell said yesterday: "What is salutary about yesterday's upset is that it means a minister however senior and however prestigious, before he enters into an agreement with our EEC partners, the Americans, or anyone else, must seriously ask himself this question: Can I be sure that the House of Commons will wear such a policy?"

'SANCTIONS MUDDLE' RESULT OF PUBLICITY GIVEN HOSTAGES ISSUE

LD211037 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 21 May 80 p 18

[Editorial: "Sanctions Muddle"]

[Text] Economic sanctions against Iran--supposed to assist in securing the release of the American hostages--had already, before Monday's Commons revolt, become oneof those futile, threadbare non-policies which nobody believed in but which ministers went through the motions of urging because they thought it would please President Carter and show "solidarity" in the Western alliance. The government's U-turn on backdating them to Nov. 4 was in the circumstances only sensible and all the better for having been made quickly. The House and most people outside it had been under the impression that sanctions would only apply to new contracts. Perhaps they ought to have known better, though Mr Hurd had not exactly made the possibility of backdating crystal clear, to say the least.

More the the point, perhaps, is that the issue of backdating was only a spark which ignited MPs' combustible feelings about the whole question of economic sanctions as such. Most Conservatives have a profound disbelief in their efficacy as a political weapon. History, from Mussolini to Ian Smith, lends weight to their views. The complicating factor in the case of Iran has been the need to show support for America. This is perfectly honorable and justified motive. As Sir Ian Gilmour put it yesterday: "Although we recognize that sanctions are of limited value, we continue to believe that the policy of applying them is right to demonstrate our support for our friend and ally."

The trouble is that the fierce light which Mr Carter has, for electoral purposes, focused on the hostages issue has been misdirected. The glare should all have been directed towards Russia's invasion and occupation of Afghanistan. Quiet diplomacy (a much maligned practice in some circles, but one which still has its uses) was always and obviously the best way to tackle the hostages problem. Mr Carter, to his credit, tried this for quite a long time, but then gave up. It was after this that the pressure on "the Allies" was deliberately built up. Hence the half-cock sanctions response.

PAPER NOTES: NO PROGRESS ON OUR PROBLEM DURING CARTER TERM

NC220655 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 22 May 80 p 3

[From the "Comments" column: "The Carter Report"]

[Text] President Carter's latest report to Congress is similar to all the previous ones; it has nothing positive to tell Congress about the Cyprus problem. It confines itself to recommendations to Greece and Turkey to cooperate in order to resolve the problem and expresses for a hundredth time support for the UN secretary general's efforts.

It is obvious that those who prepared President Carter's report have endeavored to provide one single element in order to impress the Congress. The reference to contacts between groups of Greek and Turkish Cypriots is a mere witticism, because if the UN secretary general has failed to remove the obstacles to a Cyprus solution, does Mr Carter think that the problem will be resolved at the meetings of two party leaders, two journalists or two other figures?

We shall again speak the truth even though this might displease the White House leaders. From the moment that President Carter asked for and won the removal of the embargo, he automatically strengthened to the highest possible degree Turkish intransigence toward the Cyprus problem. As for the wishes that are included in his periodic reports to Congress, we have no doubt that they will remain unfulfilled.

We are not going to point out to Congress what attitude it should adopt toward the U.S. Government's policy on Cyprus. However, we have one thing to say, and this expresses the belief of all the Cypriot people: President Carter's 4-year term in office will expire without the slightest progress in connection with the Cyprus problem, because he has intentionally violated some of his election promises, because he has sacrificed Cyprus and human rights for the sake of the U.S. military bases in Turkey.

RALLIS GOVERNMENT POLICY STATEMENT INCLUDES NO 'DRAMATIC CHANGES'

AT211523 Athens Press and Information Secretariat in Greek 21 May 80

[Prerelease of Greek Government policy statement read by Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis at the chamber of deputies on 21 May]

[Text] Ladies and gentlemen, colleagues:

Today I address myself to you with emotion. My emotion is justified because I am succeeding at this rostrum men who, as prime ministers, not only identified themselves with the country's history but formed it, men who with toil and agony creatively formed the fate of this country and brought Greece to its current enviable position.

However, the most honorable and weighty burden that I feel on my shoulders is that I am promptly succeeding Konstandinos Karamanlis, a politician who has devoted his entire life to Greece, and has brought it out of underdevelopment, rid it of the syndrome of deprivation, led it to rapid economic and social progress, and finally integrated it into Europe as an equal member, thus guaranteeing a secure future for coming generations.

The current government, which is appearing before you through me, in order to be honored with your trust is proud to be considered a sequel to the Karamanlis governments. It is not only natural, it is necessary that it be considered a sequel of the Karamanlis' governments. This is dictated by the composition of the national representatives and the state of affairs because the pressure of the same great and most difficult problems encountered by the previous government continues.

Therefore, it is equally natural and imperative not to seek dramatic changes in the basic guidelines of the policy charted by the last Karamanlis government and approved by the national representatives.

Even more, it is not possible to have deviations from the ideological principles which inspire political actions and once again I will reiterate--with the lucidity of platitudes--that our policy will not be further to the right or to the left of the steady course followed by New Democracy.

This steadfastness does not mean severance from the reality of life which by its nature constantly changes. On the contrary, steadfastness means the constant adjustment to unending developments which are the facts of life. It is this adaptability, this flexibility which avoids the dangers of rigidity, that our policy will have in its methods and specific measures.

After all, nobody claims infallibility and it would be woeful if in instances where experiences suggests that we have made mistakes we do not have the boldness to admit them and the sensitivity to correct them.

For this reason then, we believe, dear colleagues, in the valuable help which democratic dialogue in good faith, especially in this hall and outside it, in the press, in intellectual institutions and with the various classes, can give to the government.

Consequently, having stressed from the outset the three elements which the current government considers basic--steadfastness in principles, adaptability in methods and tolerance of criticism--allow me to report to you the relevant portions of the policy we intend to implement.

The area of our international relations takes priority.

From the day following the restoration of democratic legality in our country, Greek foreign policy was charted with the national interest as the criterion; it has been consistent and steady and it has moved realistically within the framework of international reality. In this spirit the government will continue to work to defend the national interests, to contribute to the progress of the European idea and to help in maintaining peace and in strengthening international law and order.

Greece's foreign policy, like that of every country, is necessarily placed within the framework of a more general international situation. Currently this situation is a composition of social upheavals in various parts of the world, an economic crisis that is intensifying rather than abating and violence which exists not only within states but is also being used as a means to impose political aims and interests in international relations.

Within this international atmosphere the Greek Government will continue to be dedicated to the principles of international law and the UN Charter and it will maintain the policy of cooperation and friendship with all states which have the same intentions of friendship toward us.

The maintenance of this policy is not easy because respect for the principles of international law and the UN Charter is not the rule in international society. International public opinion is justified in being emotional about the detention of the U.S. hostages in Iran and the occupation of Afghanistan by Soviet troops. However, one should not forget the other great and blatant violation of international law, the principles of the UN Charter and the final act of Helsinki that is taking place through the continuing occupation of almost 40 percent of the territory of Cyprus by Turkish troops. Such particularly painful incidents disturb international legal order and peace and sow uneasiness and insecurity, creating the danger of conflict.

It is a fact that events in Afghanistan halted efforts being made for years to create a situation of detente in relationships among states.

The Greek Government believes that, together with the condemnation of arbitrary acts and aggressiveness, it is imperative to exert every possible effort to save what can still be saved of detente.

In this spirit the government is preparing for participation in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to be held in Madrid. In this spirit it confronts developments in the various seedbeds of crisis of international life. The most immediate problems for Greece's foreign policy as you know are those which result from the Cyprus issue, Turkey's demands in the Aegean and the suspension of Greece's relations with the NATO military wing.

On the Cyprus issue the government is determined to continue the policy of its predecessor and to give every possible support to the government and the people of Cyprus for the defense of the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and unity of the Cyprus Republic. It agrees with the Cyprus Government that a just and permanent solution to the problem of Cyprus should be sought on the basis of the UN resolutions and through the best possible utilization of the opportunities afforded by the offices of the secretary general as has been agreed upon by the resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly.

The government's aim is to help put an end to the tragic anomaly which the current situation of the occupation of Cyprist land by Turkish Armed Forces constitutes, the existence of 200,000 refugees in their own country, the exploitation of 70 percent of the resources on Cyprus on behalf of 18 percent of the population and the ignoring of fundamental human rights.

As regards bilateral Greek-Turkish relations, I am deeply convinced that it is in the interests of both peoples to once again seek an atmosphere of calm and cooperation that would allow them to live like good neighbors. This is dictated by their common interest. However, as long as there are differences, the creation of which in any case is not the fault of Greece, these should be solved through a serious dialogue. We are willing to hold this dialogue at whatever level is necessary, always on the basis of international law and international practice. Results can be achieved only through negotiations in which every side shows respect for the legal rights of the other side along with support for its own rights. Meanwhile, every provocation that could disturb negotiations should be avoided and should it be ascertained that dialogue is fruitless then we should jointly resort to international procedures for that which has remained unresolved. A more reasonable and honest proposition cannot be made and I want to believe that the responsible Turkish leadership will want us to jointly walk this road. The government's intention is to demonstrate the same persistence and patience, the same prudence and steadfastness that have characterized the Greek stance thus far. We do not ask for anything from Turkey but we are not prepared to sacrifice any of the rights given to us by international law.

In any case, the fact that in good faith we intend to persist in a search for peaceful solutions within the framework of a dialogue does not mean that we are ready to allow the issues to be prejudiced by other procedures. Specifically I am referring to our relations with NATO. The government believes that the country's interest will be served through defense cooperation with the democratic countries of the West which share our basic political position regarding freedom and parliamentary life. However, the interests of these countries are equally served by Greece's cooperation. A significant element of Greek defense policy is the country's reliance on the security system of the West. In the light of recent experience, our aim will be to establish a relationship with NATO which will allow us to first have control over our national forces and second to meet our security needs in case of war. This special relationship is favored by both the NATO military leadership and the members of the alliance, with the exception of Turkey which seeks to take advantage of the negotiations in order to benefit from the resolution of issues that were unresolved prior to Greece's withdrawal and to indirectly promote its own goals.

This is the reason why negotiations between Greece and NATO have not had a positive result so far. Greece has demonstrated its desire for the conclusion of a special relationship with NATO and since 1978 it has agreed on the basis for negotiations. It is up to NATO, even now, to make possible the auspicious conclusion of the negotiations.

The government will examine the conclusion of a new agreement which will settle the status of the U.S. facilities that are operating in Greece within this framework, an agreement which will replace a complex of older relevant agreements. This examination will be conducted in light of the recent U.S.-Turkish defense agreement, taking into consideration the need to maintain the current correlation of forces between Greece and Turkey.

The settlement of our defense relations with the alliance does not influence at all our intention for broader cooperation with all countries and especially with the neighboring countries for the maintenance of peace. In this spirit Greece will continue to be open to any initiative for broader bilateral and multilateral cooperation in its specific area, the Balkans. It will favor the continuation of efforts to promote inter-Balkan cooperation just as it will seek the further constructive tightening of relations with its neighbors.

Yugoslavia especially should know that the Greek people and their government shared with great sympathy the moments of agony it endured in recent months. The government looks forward with faith to the continuation of its cooperation with the new Yugoslav leadership to which it very warmly wishes complete success in its mission so that the future friendly ties between the two countries may become even closer.

The government believes that the best basis for international relations, especially between countries with different political, social and economic systems, is mutual respect for sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity and nonintervention in the internal affairs of the other country and mutual interest.

We shall continue to take special interest in the development of our bilateral relations with countries of the Third World. A special position in this effort is occupied by the Arab countries with which we are linked by old and new bonds and with which we have excellent prospects for further cooperation. However, we have indications that with the African countries there is also fertile ground for broader cooperation which we shall seek to cultivate and expand.

Greece's participation in the European Community is now a fact and already our participation in Community procedures has gradually begun. Of course the Community at the moment is facing certain difficult problems which to a great extent are due to the more general economic situation. However, we do not doubt that it will overcome them; the existence of these problems does not decrease the political and economic weight of the European Community, which has become one of the great factors of international life. Our country's participation as a full member in the Community gives Greece the opportunity to contribute, according to its ability, to the constructive role which Europe is currently playing in the world. Actually at this very time it is being proven and it will be proven even more actively in the future that Konstandinos Karamanlis' decision for complete participation in the Community was right.

From all that I have stated it is obvious that the government will follow in its foreign policy the line of its predecessor. After all, a foreign policy that made us full members of the Community, that opened channels of communication for us with the countries of Eastern Europe and the Third World and that permitted us to retain our positions on national issues without harm has been proven correct by its results.

But, as I told you before, foreign policy to a great extent depends on international situations. In the international area the eternal change in things constantly creates new situations and for this reason dictates constant adjustments. Thus, the government will constantly adjust its course and perform the necessary course corrections in accordance with developments. The only thing that should be considered as an unchanging fact is the government's dedication to the service of long-term national goals, which are the independence, integrity and security of this country, and in this sense nobody is entitled to consider Greek foreign policy as "granted."

However, for the exercise of this foreign policy and for the guarantee of our independence the existence of strong armed forces is indispensable, armed forces that can defend the country's dignity and integrity if need be.

For this reason the government attaches and will attach special significance to maintaining the current high level of the Greek Armed Forces, as attested to by foreign experts. Despite the expense entailed, the government will aim at increasing their strength even more and in this it will undoubtedly be helped by the excellent morale of the Greek people's drafted young people and especially by the splendid corps of Greek officers.

Also at the same level is the security corps which, thanks to their devotion to duty which reaches the point of self-sacrifice, have protected our fatherland from the attack of violence which is harassing most countries. I am sure that with the support of all the people they will guarantee security, order and the country's peace.

The cadres of the armed forces and the members of the security corps have selected one of the most honored professions which, however, entails especially weighty obligations. Recognizing the weight of these obligations I wish to assure them that they have all the affection of the government, which, to the extent permitted by available means, will try to satisfy their more specific needs.

I would like to reiterate the assurance to the Greek people that the Greek Armed Forces are among the best in the world and that the government is determined to do everything possible so that this will always remain true in the future.

Gentlemen deputies, it is well known to all of us that with the revaluations of the oil prices which occurred in 1979 hopes that the international economy would escape from the condition of inflation and recession in which it found itself after the oil crisis of 1973-1974 have evaporated. In order to cope with the unfavorable repercussions of worsening inflation and in order to limit the deficits in their balances of payments resulting from oil revaluations, most countries decided to follow a restrictive policy. This will result in a zero development rate and a serious expanion of unemployment. As is natural, these developments cannot but significantly influence the Greek economy, whose dependence on international economic conditions is well known.

Just as for the other non-oil-producing countries, for our country in the final analysis, the increase in oil prices means the transfer of income to oil-producing countries, something that necessarily leads to the radical readjustment of economic policy and finally to a change in our way of life.

It is worth noting that under these unfavorable international developments the Greek economy has made significant progress. In the last 5 years real national income increased significantly with the result that real incomes for all social groups, and especially for salaried people and farmers, improved. This is confirmed by official statistics which show that the rate of increase of real national income was double the average rate for OECD European countries. We can see this improvement if we look at the manner and standard of living of workers and farmers who currently enjoy the benefits and comforts of modern civilization which only a few years ago were accessible to only a very limited number of individuals. We should not forget that this progress was implemented in a period of international economic recession and despite the fact that our country alloted huge sums to increase its defense.

I am making this observation to show the dynamism of the Greek economy and to stress that it is not reasonable and correct for the achievements of a relatively long period to be overshadowed by problems which interfere in its evolutionary course only temporarily and for a short period. Furthermore, regardless of how much these influence and define the current directions of the government's economic policy, these directions basically remain the same as the directions of the two previous New Democracy governments under Karamanlis.

The basic aim of the government's economic policy is rapid economic development within an atmosphere of relative monetary stability, security and social calm because only under these conditions will the improvement of the Greek people's standard of living be guaranteed.

Although the goals of the economic policy remain the same, the method and the tactics for their implementation change. This change is considered to be necessary in view of the country's accession to the European Community and of the frequent changes that are taking place in international economy. Most countries, both with a free and a guided socialist economy, are encountering the same need for a quick adjustment of their economies to international developments.

Gentlemen deputies, in the current circumstances the primary problem we are facing is how to combat inflation, because monetary stability is the basic prerequisite for pursuing a high rate of economic development and for guaranteeing a balance in the country's foreign transactions.

The government will continue the anti-inflationary policy which has been implemented since the middle of 1978 and it will take every necessary supplementary or corrective measure dictated by the experience of the policy that has been implemented and by the new conditions that are shaping up, because inflation and the inflationary psychology which inflation itself feeds strike at all social classes and especially at salaried people, erodes initiatives for investments, undermines economic resources and leads to stagnation and unemployment.

However, combatting inflation should not be the task of the government alone, but of the society in general. The participation of all social groups in this effort is indispensable to cooperation and a constructive dialogue with the government.

In general lines the government's economic policy will be the following:

An effort for development will be pursued with private initiative as the principal agent and it will be based on the increase of productive investments, especially in the industrial sector. The policy of regional development will be continued together with the utilization of the country's resources, especially in the field of energy sources and underground wealth in order to reduce the country's dependence on imported oil.

In the processing sector, small and medium-sized businesses which include 120 thousand units spread over all the regions of the country will be strengthened in all of their activities with administrative and credit facilities.

In this effort our economy will be substantially helped by the money which will be channeled from the funds of the European Community and the European Investment Bank.

Soon the government will submit to the chamber a draft bill on the adjustment and simplification of development incentives and the encouragement of private initiative.

The state's investment effort will be limited to those instances where private initiative is unable to undertake entrepreneurial action and naturally to the necessary public works for economic and social infrastructure.

In the agricultural field the government will continue the policy of supporting agricultural income by protecting the prices of agricultural produce. At the same time, every effort will be made to increase productivity by promoting programs for land development, regional development and the enlargement of agricultural exploitation.

The basic aim is for every Greek agricultural family to have as much land and the means of production which will guarantee full employment and family income comparable to incomes from nonagricultural occupations.

These efforts will be made more systematic and will increase with our accession to the EEC. The supplementation of national resources with resources from the Community will allow a greater increase of agricultural income while the protection of his profession will give the Greek farmer the self-confidence and the pride of the independent professional who effectively participates in the increase of national production.

Thanks to the measures taken by the previous government, sufficient fuel has been guaranteed for the current year. However, it should not be forgotten that the continual increase in oil prices has placed an unbearable burden on the balance of payments. For this reason the government will seek through every practical means to save energy without influencing the rate of economic development.

In the area of financial policy the government will intensify its effort to stabilize and develop the economy and improve the distribution of income and of the nation's wealth.

Within this framework we shall seek to restrict the contribution of the public sector to total demand through the continuation of the effort to compress the operational cost of the state and limit deficits in the public sector.

At the same time, with various financial settlements the government will try to eliminate those factors which inhibit development and will strengthen those that encourage private saving, investment and exports. The introduction of the value added tax to replace a great number of existing taxes which have a negative effect on the modernization and the competitiveness of national production falls within this framework.

The government plans to introduce certain tax adjustments which will blunt the consequences of inflation, especially for the lower income groups. The form and extent of the tax reductions will be defined by the margins of the new budget. At the same time the government will further intensify and systematize the effort for more effective control and taxation of incomes of certain social groups which escape taxation and feed inflation and it will consolidate the fair participation of everybody in the required sacrifices.

In the implementation of a previous decision the government will proceed to the immediate cancellation of the tax on immovable property, increase the tax on the transfer of immovable property of great value and on that part of the price above a certain amount to be fixed later. Also the government will abolish the "evidence of rent" law [the law by which the citizens' taxable income is based on the amount of rent paid] and will modify the law on "evidence of acquisition" [a law authorizing taxation officers to demand proof of how money for acquisition of any property was acquired] in order to give every citizen the opportunity to acquire a house.

The monetary and credit policy to be implemented by the government will constitute a basic means for the deescalation and final control of inflation without long-term damage to development goals. The increase of money in circulation and of credits to the economy will be lower than the increase in fiscal national product. This will contribute to the restraint of financial income, principally in the processing professions, and to the avoidance of support for inflation.

In order to guarantee the aims and the effectiveness of the monetary and credit policies a strengthening of the stabilizing role of interest rates is envisaged which will be adjusted at shorter intervals than those in the past and corresponding to the specific conditions of the economy with their final decontrol as the ultimate aim.

At the same time appropriate measures will be taken to purify the banking system by abolishing credit arrangements which have inhibiting influences on the development of competition and the increase of productivity.

We shall also proceed with the immediate creation of an interbank purchase of foreign exchange and with the introduction of the Drachma in the European money market. These arrangements are expected to exercise a significant stabilizing influence on the balance of payments.

Finally, the foreign exchange value of the drachma vis-a-vis the average value of the currencies of the countries with which the country is carrying out transactions will be stabilized. However, as long as the value of the relevant currencies which participate in the "group" changes, the drachma's exchange value vis-a-vis the relevant currencies will also change upwards or downwards.

The government's incomes policy will aim at guaranteeing the real purchasing power of the working people because unfavorable developments in the balance of payments caused by inflation and the uncertainty of oil prices leaves no margin for more significant increases. However, within the existing framework the government will exhaust every possibility for implementing its social policy in favor of the working people always in cooperation with the representatives of the interested classes. At the same time the government is determined to intensify its efforts to compress profits, especially those from intermediary and speculative activities which feed and are fed by inflation. The systematization and where possible the automation of control over prices, which will be restricted to goods essential for the consumer, will aim at this goal.

In the area of prices it is believed that the abolition of certain restrictions and the liberal policy in the fields of production, commerce and movement of goods will contribute to the increase of supply and the arrest of inflation.

Finally, the policy of normalizing charges for public utility services will be continued because the restriction of the deficits of public utility organizations in the medium and long term exercises an anti-inflationary influence, despite the short-term repercussions it will have on the cost of living index.

Gentlemen colleagues, from the above the fact clearly emerges that the government attaches absolute priority to the stabilization of the economy because we believe that unless inflation is brought under control the effectiveness of the entire effort for rapid development will be reduced.

The second basic element of the government's economic policy will be to restrict state intervention and increase market forces. Monopolistic and oligopolistic situations which limit the supply of goods will be combatted. Of course the state will not stop interfering in economic life where this is necessary to protect the social interest but this will be pursued with the appropriate incentives and counter-incentives and not through the policing of the economy.

We believe that within this framework of the economy's decontrol from purposeless limitations and controls, which mostly do not bring the expected result, market forces will operate more normally and the increase of productivity and the reduction of inflationary pressures will be guaranteed. At the same time this policy will give greater flexibility to the Greek economy and the opportunities for automatic adjustment will increase so that we can easily deal with both the first difficulties of our accession to the EEC and with the influences of the continuing international economic recession.

For the success of its policy the government considers the cooperation of all the Greek people to be indispensable. The government's recent agreement with the productive classes regarding their self-imposed restriction of imports and limitation of prices and their promise to increase income from shipping constitute a hopeful message and a pleasant precedent which justifies favorable predictions. Responding to the above promise of the productive classes and of those dealing with shipping, which it is certain they will keep, the government assures them that it is following their problems and will be in constant and frank dialogue with them for the achievement, where possible and as much as possible, of its economic policy, the joint acceptance of which is so indispensable to democracy.

Gentlemen deputies, the progress of every society of free and responsible citizens is based on an educational system capable of serving effectively the current and future social, economic and cultural needs of the people. This is achieved through the creation of conditions of equality of educational opportunities which will allow the endowment of our youth, our greatest national wealth, with modern knowledge, with abilities and especially with ideals.

These principles inspired the efforts made by the governments of New Democracy in the field of education immediately after the restoration of democratic freedoms and especially the educational reform of the 1976-1977 period. The completion of the reform, the correction of the deficiencies and the remedy of possible errors will constitute the basic aims of the government in the field of educational policy.

The systematic improvement of programs and of textbooks for all grades of education without exception and the intensive and multilateral training of the educational personnel in conjunction with the publication of special books for professors and teachers will be the principal means of consolidating our reform effort. The government's intention is to strengthen KEME [Central Committee for Intermediate Education] to the greatest possible extent so that it can respond to this great and difficult task.

At the same time, in order to raise the educational and pedagogic level of primary and secondary school teachers without a university education, special senior schools will be established where future teachers, kindergarten teachers and instructors of physical training and domestic economy will be trained.

The utilization of the country's human forces, which constitutes the basic goal of our social and economic plan, inevitably leads us to linking the educational system with production and to balancing the flow of the student and graduate population in the various educational levels and directions. Consequently, it is necessary to develop technical and professional education so that the chronic needs of our society for specialized medium and senior cadres can be satisfied.

The government's basic goal in senior education is to raise the level of undergraduate students and to organize modern concepts of postgraduate studies, which are almost nonexistent in our country. At the same time the government considers it a primary duty for senior educational institutes to acquire a modern constitution governed by the principles of respect for independence, complete self-administration for the institutes and freedom of education and research in accordance with article 16 of the Constitution. After all, as you know, on instructions from the current president of the republic, deans of the senior educational institutes were asked to submit a complete proposal for a law on senior education before the end of June so that the new law can be the product of common consensus as much as possible.

The planning of senior education which is necessary for charting the policy to be implemented in this sector also refers to the need for reorganizing the senior educational institutes, creating new senior schools in the large regional centers of the country, merging senior educational institutes or schools with similar content of studies and developing and completing new universities. All these things should be based on modern concepts.

The educational policy in which we have proposed general guidelines can succeed only with the restoration of an atmosphere of conscious cooperation of all educational participants. The government will make every effort to create such an atmosphere and it hopes that all participants, especially teachers at all levels, parents, students and graduates, will support it because as has been stressed education constitutes a national cause and its influence on the country's development is especially significant This support is even more necessary if we take into consideration the fact that differences, which in the short term may lead to party benefits, seriously damage our educational process.

Our effort in the more general cultural area will be relevant and parallel. Our aim will be, in addition to preserving our spiritual heritage and our national character, the free movement of ideas and spiritual conquests. We shall seek the creation of a genuinely liberal cultural movement which will contribute to the expansion of democracy and to the consolidation of manifold thought and expression. The basis of our policy will be democratic intellectual dialogue and not a totalitarian monologue.

In the area of health the government will follow the viewpoint which prevails internationally that the promotion of health and prevention of disease are from every aspect preferable to treatment. For this reason it will give special emphasis to enlightenment on health issues and to the strengthening of measures which maintain health and prevent sickness.

Notable progress has been made in hospital care. New beds have been added in the capital area and regional medical schools and hospitals have been developed so that last year a reduction was noted in the flow of sick people from the countryside to the great urban centers. The development of regional sanitary services will be further intensified and in 1980 the procedures will be completed for the construction of three great university hospitals with financing from abroad and with the cooperation of Greek technicians. Also, the preparations for construction of a large Social Insurance Foundation [IKA] hospital in Aigaleo and a university hospital are proceeding quickly.

Finally the government attaches a special significance to the improvement of health services for the agricultural and semiagricultural population. The new measures for health protection which will be submitted to the chamber and for which the government will agree to discuss any serious and constructive proposals are aimed primarily at this.

Special emphasis will be given to the prevention and protection of the population's special groups which are socially or biologically deprived, such as unprotected children, old people and invalids, within the capabilities of the country's economic situation. Already the study for the protection of motherhood has been completed and we hope that during the term of the current government its implementation will gradually begin.

In the field of social security the effort to reform the large insurance funds will continue, along with the effort to improve their operation and their grants. At the same time the problem of those people who receive low pensions and of the old people who lack security will be given special attention.

Our goal will be to provide the entire active population with pensions, doctors, hospitals and medicines.

Gentlemen deputies, as I put them forth analytically the government's goals can be achieved and can guarantee the Greek people national security, social balance, political stability and economic progress, provided that three prerequisites are met.

First, that the organ that will be called upon to implement the government policy functions properly. This organ is public administration and of which the government attaches special significance to its mission.

The improvement in the effectiveness of the administration is now even more imperative because with our accession to the European Community our administrative services must cooperate and reach the same level as the corresponding services of the other member states.

We need an impartial, affectionate, eager and efficient administration. The government will continue the effort to implement a complete program of institutional and organizational measures in order to achieve the adjustment of state services to modern demands.

So that it may acquire more substantive content, we shall intensify decentralization by transferring all decisive jurisdictions from the center to the regions, thus limiting central services to obvious staff duties and to the coordination and supervision of regional organs.

We shall seek to restore the spiritual contact and the restoration of cooperation in relations between administration and those who are administered, a restoration indispensable to the good operation of democracy. The opinions, the tendencies and the needs of the citizens and of the social groups will be taken into serious consideration by the administrative organs which must respect the personality of the citizens.

We shall intensify the effort to simplify bureaucratic methods and complex procedures and we shall extend the use of automation and the development of automation methods in all public services.

Within existing limits we shall make every effort to support public servants so that they may remain unencumbered and dedicated to the service of citizens and to the objective and impartial implementation of the law. I declare that I recognize the dedication to duty and the toil of public servants. However, every isolated violation or laziness will draw legal sanctions.

The government believes that local administration organizations constitute vital centers of administrative activity and will continue their historic tradition. Therefore, good and constructive relations between local authorities and organs of the state must be consolidated. We shall offer every possible assistance to local administration organizations toward this direction.

Above all, we desire consolidation of respect for the principle of legality by administrative services. The faithful and precise adherence to the Constitution and to laws and the protection of individual freedoms should be the basis for the operation of administrative organs with court decrees as guidelines. Specifically, the compliance of administration organs with the decisions of administrative courts and with the State Council will be checked.

The task of supervision, acceleration of the speed and efficiency of public administration, a task of basic significance and absolute priority, is the responsibility of the minister to the prime minister's office.

The seriousness of the problem has led me to ask the help of the deputy prime minister in this effort. The personality, the experience and the ability of the two basic government cadres who are shouldering this task constitutes the best possible guarantee for success.

The second prerequisite for successfully confronting the country's problems is the support of all Greeks, regardless of their political position. This country does not belong either to the government or to the opposition. It belongs to all, and its problems are not the problems of the government; they are the problems of all of us. If the difficulties we are encountering demand sacrifices, the sacrifices will be offered by all in accordance with their strength. The stronger will make greater sacrifices and the weaker will make smaller sacrifices, and if we succeed it will not be a government success but a success of the Greek people. If we fail, the consequences will not be suffered only by the government. We shall all suffer them.

The third and not least prerequisite for the smooth course of the country is the maintenance of a calm political atmosphere. Since we lie in an especially sensitive area and in a period of international crisis, the establishment of an atmosphere of political tension would be a dangerous luxury because political tension diverts the attention of the country's political forces from their problems and divides the national unanimity necessary to confront the problems. I want to assure the chamber that the government and the entire government faction will respect the rights of the opposition to briefing, democratic dialogue and criticism. We specifically seek positive criticism because this will call attention to our possible weaknesses and will help us to correct possible mistakes. Our faction will be the first to give the example of moderation and it expects a similar response. After all, nothing would justify the political tension which possibly appears in preelection periods given the fact that the term of the current chamber will not end for a year and a half and the government, supported by a strong and cohesive majority, is determined to complete it.

Gentlemen deputies, despite the difficulties of the circumstances which are caused by outside factors I am optimistic about the future of the government and the country. I am optimistic because I believe in the correctness of the policy I have set forth to you and which the government intends to implement but especially because I trust absolutely the intelligence, the power of adaptation and the dynamism of our people. With this feeling of optimism I have the honor to ask the chamber's vote of confidence.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS DECIDES TO BOYCOTT MOSCOW OLYMPICS

TA221204 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1200 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] The Council of Ministers has decided against the participation of Turkish athletes in the Moscow Olympics. The Council of Ministers met under Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel at 1045. The meeting lasted until 1430. A written statement issued after the meeting said that Turkey will not participate in the 1980 Moscow Olympics.

DEMIREL PROPOSES AMENDMENT, POPULAR ELECTION OF PRESIDENT

TA211839 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Justice Party leader and Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has said that the failure to elect a president is due to the makeup of the Assembly and the lack of rules within the Constitution. Demirel noted: If the parliament is unable to elect a president, then the nation should elect one. Speaking at the joint Senate and Assembly Justice Party groups meeting today, Demirel noted that the presidential elections have reached an impasse and that the Justice Party is not to blame for this. He stated that those who have the right to elect a president within the framework of the Grand National Assembly should protect their right until the end. Pointing out that the Justice Party members do not vote for an RPP candidate and vice versa, Demirel said that it is extremely difficult for the two parties to get together and agree on a candidate from within or from outside the parliament. Demirel continued: Mutual accusations do not solve this problem. So what should we do? The Constitution does not stipulate anything. A president cannot be elected within the framework of the parliament, given the present makeup of the Assembly. What should we do? Let us ask the nation.

Noting that bloodshed is continuing in Turkey and that it is in no one's interest to perpetuate the situation or elect a president at random, Demirel added: If the parliament is unable to elect a president, then the nation should elect one. A constitutional amendment of two sentences and a seven- or eight-point election law amendment are necessary for this. We can do this within 10 days and within 15 days the nation can elect its president. At this stage I do not have a presidential system in mind. What I say is that the nation should elect the president because the nation is the origin and the source of sovereignty, national will and trust. Noting that the solution can be found in the nation, Demirel asked that his jurist colleagues meet to work on a proposal for constitutional and election law amendments. Pointing out that if an agreement is reached with the other parties, the impasse will be overcome, Demirel said: We cannot progress by discrediting each other or blaming other people. He noted that so far his party has always tried to repair the damage caused by other people and said that his party was engaged in restoring the state, which it inherited in November 1979 when there were numerous shortages and certain state institutions were ruined. Demirel announced that Turkey is not suffering from shortages today.

Addressing the joint parliamentary group, presidential candidate and Deputy from Istanbul Sedettin Bilgic said that he did not personally ask to be a presidential candidate and that his candidacy was submitted through the joint proposal of the deputy leaders of the Senate and Assembly groups. Bilgic noted that he is always willing to withdraw his candidacy if this would benefit the party in any way. A statement, which was unanimously approved at the joint group meeting, denied reports to the effect that 38 Justice Party legislators formed a separate group. The statement, which was signed by Justice Party Senate Group leader Cahit Dalokay and Assembly Group deputy leaders Oguz Aydin and Zeyafettin Karaca, noted: In view of the current conditions in Turkey, the Justice Party Grand National Assembly Group is now more harmonious than ever.

The armed attack against Tuzla Infantry School Commander Maj Gen Sabri Demirbag was also condemned at the joint parliamentary group meeting.

Ecevit Criticism

TA211901 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 21 May 80

[Excerpt] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has said that the direct election of a president in a multiparty democratic system would be tantamount to changing the entire political system. Ecevit has noted that Prime Minister Demirel seems to be unaware of this or believes that he can conceal it from the nation. In a written statement issued today, Ecevit said that Demirel's apparent ignorance of this fact is actually a deception. Noting that the game was clearly exposed, Ecevit said: It is now clearer that the Justice Party administration led the presidential election toward an impasse in order to prepare a reason and a pretext for the change in the system for which a campaign has been waged for some time. It is no longer a secret that the proposed change in the system does not aim to solve the presidential election issue. It aims to distort democracy and limit basic rights and freedoms, especially social and workers' rights. It is an incredible example of irresponsibility that at such a period of crisis a prime minister and a government party leadership should have created a presidential crisis in order to force a change in the system.

OFFICIALS CONDEMN ATTACK ON MAJOR GENERAL DEMIRBAG

TA201732 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 20 May 80

[Summary] The Office of the Chief of the General Staff issued a statement regarding the incident in which Tuzla Infantry School Commander Maj Gen Sabri Demirbag was attacked by armed terrorists. The statement says that "traitors who engage in all kinds of inhuman attacks in order to divide our country and to drag our beloved people in to civil strife will not go unpunished." The statement adds that such treacherous attacks will not deter the armed forces from carrying out their tasks day and night in a bid to ensure the prevalence of law and regulations.

Acting Senate President Mehmet Unaldi, National Assembly President Cahit Karakas, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel, RPP leader Bulent Ecevit and National Unity Group leader Fahri Ozdilek denounced the despicable attack on the Tuzla Infantry School commander and wished him an early recovery. Commenting on the incident in which the Tuzla Infantry School commander was attacked by armed terrorists, National Salvation Party leader Necmettin Erbakan said that terrorist incidents were escalating daily and pointed out that armed attacks which were directed against party officials, public prosecutors, judges and university faculty members were now being directed against the valuable commanders of our armed forces. In his statement Erbakan said that "the government seemed to be deprived of the power to prevent the terrorist incidents and that he did not notice any efforts by the government to control such incidents." Nationalist Action Party leader Alpaslan Turkes and Republican Reliance Party leader Turhan Feyzioglu said that such attacks were directed against the existence of the Turkish Republic and state.

Acting Chief of the General Staff and Land Forces Commander Gen Nurettin Ersin and Defense Minister Ahmet Birincioglu visited Major General Demirbag, the commander of the Tuzla Infantry School, at the Haydarpasa Military Hospital. Instabul Martial Law Commander Gen Necdet Urug was also with them. In a statement to a TRT correspondent on the incident, Birinciolglu expressed his regrets over the incident and said that "the main aim was to disrupt the state." He added: "The attack on Major General Demirbag has proved once more how wrong are views that terror incidents are innocent actions caused by economic and social reasons. I hope that many people will learn a lesson from such incidents--which I hope will be the last of its kind."

ITALIAN, SPANISH SOCIALISTS EXPLORE IRAN MEDIATION

AU162007 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 16 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 16 (ANSA)--Italian Socialist Party Secretary Bettino Craxi met today with the head of Spain's Socialist Workers Party, Felipe Gonzales, to explore the prospects for the acceptance on the part of the Iranian Government of a mediation role for the Socialist Internationale. It was learned that Craxi has contacted the president of the Socialist Internationale, Willy Brandt of West Germany, on the question of the American hostages held in Iran since November 4 and the socialists' relations with Iran. The entire issue is expected to be on the agenda for the Socialist International bureau meeting in Oslo scheduled for sometime during the first half of June.

LARGE DANISH MAJORITY VOTES FOR IRAN SANCTIONS

["G.A." report: "All Clear for Sanctions Against Iran"]

[Text] The Folketing yesterday authorized the government to implement economic or other sanctions against Iran because of the taking of hostages in Tehran. Some 128 members (Social Democrats, Liberals, Conservatives, Progress Party, Radical Liberals, Center Democrats, and the Christian People's Party) voted in favor of the authorization while 14 (Socialist People's Party, and left socialists) voted against, with 5 abstentions (Single-Tax Party). The opponents of the move are of the opinion that sanctions will only lead to an escalation of the conflict.

Before the final vote Arne Stinus (Radical Liberal Party) asked if it was true that the sanctions policies of the other EEC members were disintegrating. He said that it would be worth giving the matter further consideration if this were the case. "Sanctions are a peaceable tool, but they must be used rigorously," he said.

Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen said that he could not answer the question directly. He pointed out that the question of sanctions will not be discussed before the EC foreign ministers' meeting on 17 May. Only then will an evaluation of the situation be made, and the ministers will attempt to establish whether significant steps have been made toward the release of the hostages in Tehran. If this is not the case, sanctions will take effect.

SANCTIONS WILL BE OF 'LITTLE SIGNIFICANCE' TO NORWAY

LD211457 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 16 May 80 p 7

[Gunnar A. Johansen report: "Sanctions Against Iran From the End of the Month"]

[Text] Tomorrow the EC foreign ministers meet to decide what sanctions will be implemented against Iran in connection with the hostage affair at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

The Norwegian Government has decided to follow the example of the EC countries. According to information given to ARBEIDERBLADET, the government is now preparing the resolution which will form the basis for sanctions against Iran.

It was at the EC foreign ministers' meeting on 22 April that a decision was taken to implement sanctions against Iran. The EC meeting resolution states that, if no positive developments in the hostage affair have taken place before 17 May, the EC countries will implement sanctions in line with last January's UN Security Council draft resolution.

The draft resolution, which was vetoed by the Soviet Union, urged a wide-ranging trade boycott of Iran. The boycott would also include transport. As far as Norway is concerned, this will mean that transport of goods by Norwegian ships would be hit by the boycott.

The Norwegian Government also decided to delay the introduction of sanctions until 17 May. Since the resolution was adopted, no positive developments in the hostage affair have taken place. The unsuccessful American rescue action has probably lessened the chances of a negotiated solution between the United States and Iran.

As far as Norway is concerned, a trade boycott of Iran would have little significance. Our trade with Iran is minimal. However, sanctions could have a negative effect on Norwegian ships that have a regular schedule of sailings to Iran.

There is good reason to believe that sanctions against Iran could not be put into effect before the end of this month, or perhaps even in June.

SPAIN

PSOE'S GONZALEZ PROPOSES VOTE OF NO CONFIDENCE

LD211658 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1600 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Felipe Gonzalez, leader of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE], gave a speech lasting just over 50 minutes at the beginning of today's session of the political debate which started yesterday in the Spanish congress of deputies. At the end of his speech he announced that the socialist group of the chamber intended to exert its constitutional right to present a vote of no confidence in the government, basing ourselves, Felipe Gonzalez said, on a moral strength which we are now going to put into practice.

The opposition leader began his speech by stressing two basic points of reference--Prime Minister Suarez's investiture speech and the speech with which the premier opened the debate yesterday afternoon. Felipe Gonzalez, basing himself on the three basic points of yesterday's speech by Prime Minister Suarez, said that the government has no credibility and has failed in its endeavors to achieve civil freedoms and security. The government has also failed, according to the PSOE secretary general, in the two goals it set for itself in the stabilization of the socioeconomic situation--bringing down inflation and unemployment. Gonzalez also said that the government had failed in its (?educational) plans, in increasing investment, in reducing the retirement age, in controlling civil security, in improving agriculture and its housing construction program.

Dealing with the autonomy question, Felipe Gonzalez called for a restructuring of the administration to achieve local autonomy at the same time as regional autonomy. He proposed a federal state structure. After restating his views on the government's failure and its loss of credibility, Felipe Gonzalez proposed a vote of no confidence in the government.

JAPAN SKEPTICAL OF U.S. PLAN TO REDUCE IEA OIL IMPORTS

OW210547 Tokyo KYODO in English 0300 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Paris May 20 KYODO--Japan Tuesday expressed skepticism about a U.S.-advocated cut in crude oil imports by member nations of the International Energy Agency [IEA]. During discussions with U.S. Secretary of Energy Charles W. Duncan at the U.S. Embassy here, Japanese International Trade and Industry Minister Yoshitake Sasaki withheld support for the American idea. A Japanese official accompanying Sasaki quoted him as saying it was premature to decide specific figures. The meeting was held in advance of Thursday's ministerial conference of the Paris-based 21-nation agency.

Washington is trying to enlist support for a 4-million-barrel-a-day cut in the 1985 ceiling for crude oil imports set at 26.2 million barrels. Duncan stressed the need for the drastic reduction aimed at dealing with medium- and long-range oil supply shortages, the official said.

In reply to a U.S. question, Sasaki denied press reports Japan has agreed to pay $35 per barrel for crude oil imports from Iran. The reports were unfounded, Sasaki said, adding that Japan has not paid and has no intention of paying more than $32.50. The American officials indicated satisfaction with Sasaki's explanation, according to the official, international economic affairs department chief Masuo Shibata.

EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT CHAIRMAN VIEWS IRAN, EC ISSUES

["Kjol" report: "European Parliament Will Wait and See in Hostage Affair"]

[Text] The European Parliament has still not considered what definite action can be taken to help the American hostages in Tehran, over and above the resolution that the Parliament adopted some time ago condemning the hostage action.

European Parliament Chairman Simone Veil said at a press conference in Copenhagen yesterday during her official visit that the initiative which came at one point from Iran to the European Parliament was not precisely formulated, and Simone Veil did not think that the proposal in question was intended to secure the hostages' release.

The Parliament chairman also touched on the appointment of the new EC Commission and said that the European Parliament's Political Committee wants the new Commission president to discuss the composition of the remainder of the Commission with the European Parliament.

Yesterday Simone Veil had talks with Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen and Agriculture Minister Poul Dalsager and also met the Folketing Market Committee. The Popular Movement Against the EEC made use of the visit to protest yesterday against the vote next week in the European Parliament on a proposal for an "EEC Fleet." The four members of the European Parliament from the Popular Movement Against the EEC have concluded that this matter is outside the European Parliament's competence. Simone Veil said that she now also thinks that it is outside the Parliament's competence, but a unanimous presidium had no objections when the matter was put on the agenda, and therefore the vote will be allowed to go ahead.

Simone Veil's visit ends today with visits to the Freedom Museum and the Ordup collection.

KREISKY TO PAY OFFICIAL VISIT TO GREECE 27 MAY

AU221207 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] As was announced today, Chancellor Kreisky will go to Athens next Tuesday, 27 May, for a 2-day official visit. He will have talks with the new president, Karamanlis, as well as with Prime Minister Rallis. The Austrian delegation will include, among others, Director General Malzacher of the Steyr-Daimler-Puch Corporation.

SOCIALISTS CHARGE 'SECRET MILITARY SUPPORT' TO MOROCCO

AU220856 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 22 May 80 p 4

[Unattributed report: "Socialist Youth: Austrian Know-how for the West Sahara War"]

[Text] Vienna--In a press release the Socialist Youth [youth organization of the Austrian Socialist Party/SPOe] has taken a stand against the "secret military support of Morocco" by Austrian authorities. The release says in part:

"In dealing with the West Sahara question we found out that the United States, France and South Africa are rendering substantial military aid to Morocco. Unfortunately, we also found out that Austria, too, supplied large quantities of war materiel to Morocco. Protests against such deliveries were answered by the Austrian Government with a ban on military aid to Morocco. Now, however, we have learned that 32 Moroccan soldiers are undergoing military-technical training in Austria, at the Steyr works. This fact alone would be enough to induce us to launch massive protests, but the obvious two-faced game most deeply revolts us. We demand the immediate deportation of the Moroccan soldiers, discontinuation of any other aid measures for Morocco that may have been continued, unreserved support of the POLISARIO and recognition of the Democratic Arab Republic of Sahara."

STARIBACHER TO NEGOTIATE GAS DELIVERIES IN MOSCOW

AU200926 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 20 May 80 p 7

[Special DIE PRESSE report: "Additional Natural Gas From the USSR?"]

[Summary] Vienna (SUG)--According to Trade Minister Staribacher, energy problems will be the central topic of next week's session in Moscow of the joint USSR-Austrian commission, in which he himself will participate. He will open talks on a new long-term agreement on Soviet energy deliveries during the 1981-1985 5-year plan period. Moreover, additional natural gas deliveries from the USSR are to be negotiated. According to Staribacher, the extent of these deliveries will depend on whether Iran ultimately complies with its gas delivery commitments to the USSR under contracts that were concluded under the shah's regime. Negotiations between the USSR and Iran are underway but it is to be expected that they will lead to higher prices which would then also have to be paid by Austria.

The official Austrian delegation to the joint commission will for the first time also include representatives of Austrian firms--the Voest-Alpine Steel Corporation, the Heid Machine Factory, the Siemens Electrical Engineering and Electronics Company, the Voith Machine Factory, and a trading company doing a lot of business with East Europe. Moreover, Federal Chamber of Commerce Secretary General Kehrer will accompany the delegation.

LE MONDE PESSIMISTIC ABOUT VIABILITY OF NEW GOVERNMENT

LD201615 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 May 80 p 4

[Pierre de Vos dispatch: "Third Martens Government Formed in a Climate of Skepticism"]

[Text] Brussels--The ministers of five Belgian governments were sworn in before the king on the afternoon of Sunday 18 May. They were the 36 members of the new Cabinet led by Mr Wilfried Martens--a coalition of Social Christians, Socialists and Liberals who are also divided into four other executive bodies formed in keeping with regionalization: one for Wallonia, a bilingual one for Brussels, one for the French-speaking community, and one for the Flemish community. At noon on Sunday an extremely weary Mr Martens explained how difficult it had been to solve this puzzle in which each group had to have a place.

If the prime minister is tired, the political world is disillusioned. All the commentaries are the same: The new coalition has made a bad start and nobocy expects it to last very long. Both the left and the right are convinced that the third Martens government will not see the year out and that there was only an agreement between the so-called "traditional" parties to avoid early elections at the beginning of the summer on the eve of the vacation period. Throughout the negotiations to form the government there was evidence of a real dialogue of the deaf, and even after the various party congresses which gave the go-ahead on Wednesday and Thursday to the solution proposed by Mr Martens, the confusion was not lifted.

Party of Walloon Reform and Liberty leader, Jean Gol, only gave agreement with reservations, accompanied by an ultimatum since he gives "the new coalition 100 days to make the vital budgetary reorganization." The Socialists are still saying that this Cabinet with Liberal participation is "an unnatural alliance," and they declare that they will defend social achievements tooth and nail against their Liberal partners. The prime minister had already noted this after negotiations were successfully completed: "I have never seen future partners so bitterly defending such divergent interests."

Although the Social Christian-Socialist team led by Mr Martens resigned on 9 April 1980 following another crisis between Flemings and French speakers, the community problem was paradoxically the most easily solved by the new majority. Since there was complete deadlock on the capital's status, the negotiators decided to "freeze Brussels." The city will remain a state territory (despite having its own executive) directly dependent on central government and financed by an allocation, at least until further notice--this means for good according to Mrs Spaak's French-Speaking Front, the Brussels federalist party which is criticizing the other French-speaking parties for their "new capitulation to Flemish imperialism."

Some Vagueness

It was more difficult to reach agreement on austerity--the most severe since the crisis in the thirties. Unemployment has now officially reached 300,000, which is 7.5 percent of the active population. However, the experts think that the real situation is worse and that, without the "artificial" measures by previous cabinets, it would reach 500,000. The state budget is bordering on bankruptcy and the social security deficit (for health insurance alone) is 50 million [as published; presumably misprint for billion] francs (6.5 billion French francs). The Belgian franc is in danger.

Agreement was only possible by means of some degree of vagueness: Restrictions relating to the workers will only be decided in agreement with the social "interlocutors." It is a long time since there has been any talk of social "partners" in Belgium. The government is therefore limiting itself to a declaration of intent. That is what worries the Liberals.

There are 27 ministers and nine secretaries of state, 17 French-speaking and 19 Flemings, the prime minister being regarded as "linguistically asexual." On the French-speaking side the Socialist Party is sending seven delegates to the government, the Social Christians six and the Liberals four.

On the Flemish side there will be nine Social Christians from the Christian People's Party, five Socialists and five Liberals. One minister--the interior minister--is not a deputy: Mr Philippe Moureaux, who is principal adviser to [French-speaking] Socialist Party President Andre Cools. Liberal Finance Minister Robert Henrion, at 65, is the oldest member with the youngest being his assistant, Flemish Social Christian Secretary of State Jean Willocx, who is 33. [paragraph continues]

Several ministers from the outgoing Cabinet are not included. The most notable absentee will without doubt be Mr Henri Simonet, replaced as foreign minister by Charles-Ferdinand Nothomb, speaker of the Chamber and former Social Christian Party president.

The government chief explained that 22 of his ministers will have national duties and 14 others will have regional activities. The latter will gradually be "dropped" from the central Cabinet. Within the central government there will also be a "general policy committee," a kind of inner cabinet composed of six "super ministers." Mr Martens thinks it the best Cabinet to make the "Zeppelin guidable," to cite a television commentator.

The third Martens government will have a majority of 175 votes out of a total of 212 in the Chamber of Representatives and 153 votes out of 181 in the Senate.

SIMONET INTERVIEWED ON PROBLEMS FACING EEC

LD191321 Brussels LE SOIR in French 6 May 80 p 2

[Report on Serge de Waersegger interview with former Foreign Minister Henri Simonet: "EEC Must Expect Fundamental Changes"--date, place not specified]

[Text] After the Luxembourg failure the EC will never be quite the same again. "Changes are now taking place and furthermore they will increase," according to Henri Simonet, [former] foreign minister and former European Commission member who is, therefore, well placed to analyze the European situation in depth. He made such an analysis in an interview with LE SOIR.

He did this on the eve of a week during which two European council meetings--one among the nine foreign ministers this Monday and one among their agricultural colleagues Tuesday--are to determine how the Community--and especially its 8.5 million farmers--can continue to survive after the Luxembourg debacle. This is a particularly tricky question since Mrs Thatcher, in London, where she was given an ovation by all members of Parliament on her return, seems to be set in her Gaullist refusal.

The Belgian foreign minister thinks it will be difficult in future to avoid a detailed review of the Community's financing system, and this implies risks of painful reviews of some policies such as the Common Agricultural Policy.

Henri Simonet, who looked jovial with red cheeks and springlike in his blue blazer and red-and-white striped shirt, became serious when he discussed the current situation in the EC. "We must not forget that the whole subject of the exercises for the past 25 years has been to use economic convergence to lead to political convergence. And eventually the aim was to reach a joint political line expressed in joint political institutions.

"The aim was to make great strides. Behind this dynamism was a federal-type system which implied a link between the economic and financial structures which we were trying to introduce and the political end we were pursuing."

[Question] Has this changed?

[Answer] The majority of Europeans have gradually been forced to accept, probably tacitly, an implicit confederal-type philosophy.

The foreign minister thinks there are three reasons for that: first, the individual political natures of the states; second, the desire of some of them to follow autonomous policies; and, third, the problems of economic integration.

What are the results of this change? "An unavowed tendency not to be as energetic as we should be in defending existing achievements which are essentially based on the principle that we are moving toward a federal system."

Example: the system of specific resources, in other words, the European money collected by each state and handed to the European Community to finance common policies reflecting common objectives.

"Well, in Luxembourg," Minister Simonet explained, "the French Government noted the very grave danger posed by the fact that we are moving toward a confederal system in the economic and financial sphere. This is not the result of a political decision--a decision by the governments to move toward confederalism--but the result of the fact that one government, for internal reasons, rejects a number of economic and financial situations resulting from a choice, from common policies and common resources."

Heart of British Problem

This leads us to the heart of the British problem. Mr Henri Simonet explained it by the fact that the two types of common structure (agricultural and commerical) set up by the Community with a federal political outlook have had a different effect on the other side of the channel: "What works in a relatively similar way in the states which joined first, in other words, the six (Benelux, Italy, France and Germany--LE SOIR editor's note)--to which Denmark can be added--works quite differently in Britain's case.

"Indeed, on the one hand Britain is not an agricultural country and therefore does not benefit from the Common Agricultural Policy in the same way as the others. On the other hand, since Britain is still in a period of adaptation to its Common Market membership, the ties it has with the Commonwealth countries make it difficult for Britain to redirect its trade toward the continent within the EC. However, Britain contributed proportionally more than the other countries to the Community's joint income.

Painful Provision

So what is to be done? The minister sees three possibilities.

"First," he said, "an adjustment mechanism with short-term application. This period would enable Britain to redirect its trade while, at the same time, the structure of the Community budget spending would be altered. This presupposes a painful review of the Common Agricultural Policy."

This is a burning issue in rural districts. After a moment's thought the minister added: "Moreover, this problem will be raised when the Community is further expanded."

Returning to this first possibility of tackling the British problem, Henri Simonet listed the drawbacks: "This process will take time. It will only provide a partial answer to Mrs Thatcher's concern: not to be in debit with respect to the Community budget any more than France is." In terms of figures that means that London's other partners would have to share the burden of some of its deficit: the tidy sum of 1.3 billion ECU, or some 52 billion Belgian francs.

"A figure," Mr Simonet said, "which no large state can pay for long. Indeed, aside from Italy, the other large EEC states also have a deficit (it should be pointed out that the proposals made in Luxembourg by Schmidt and Giscard d'Estaing respectively would have meant for Belgium a contribution, on the one hand, of 2.6 billion Belgian francs and, on the other, some 3 billion Belgian francs--LE SOIR editor's note). Furthermore, this was rejected by Mrs Thatcher."

[Question] What about the second possibility?

[Answer] The second possibility is the institutionalized conflict sparked off by Britain. It would unilaterally reduce its contribution to what it deems tolerable. That would spark an open crisis. Unless some other solution was found, negotiations would have to be started.

What Is To Be Done?

[Question] Is that the third possibility?

[Answer] Given the state of mind of a number of European leaders, it will be difficult to avoid a fundamental review of the Community's financing mechanisms, with all the effects that will have, of course, on common policies; in other words, on the very substance of Community life.

In the foreign minister's view the immediate future on the European political plane seems dominated by whether the heads of state and government who expressed the wish that the next European Council meeting in Venice should not give further examination to the British case (leaving it to the various ministerial council meetings) agree to revise their decison or not. "If this matter is discussed again in Venice, what could form the basis of success this time? On the other hand, if it is not examined, how can we avoid open crisis during the period in which a lasting solution will have to be drawn up?"

Henri Simonet thinks that this solution "should solve the British problem without fundamentally calling into question the Community's basic principles: common market, implementation of common policies, and common financing. All this comes at a time when the Community is going to pass through a difficult phase: new expansion."

SECOND CHAMBER SUPPORTS VAN AGT CRITICISM OF SURINAME

LD190837 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 13 May 80 p 1

[Political correspondent report: "Chamber Wants Stronger Language Against Suriname"]

[Excerpts] The Hague, 13 May--The Second Chamber openly supports Prime Minister van Agt's criticism that democracy in Suriname is being eroded. During verbal consultations with the government in the permanent foreign affairs committee this afternoon, people from various sides urged the Dutch Government to pursue a more active policy.

Suriname Prime Minister Chin-a-sen yesterday described the Dutch criticism as interference in Suriname internal affairs. He has asked the Dutch ambassador to account for this. "Prime Minister van Agt's statements run counter to the plans of the Suriname Government which is doing everything possible to guarantee calm, order and personal safety inside Suriname," Chin-a-sen told the Dutch ambassador.

In the Second Chamber the Dutch concern for Suriname--despite the Suriname criticism--was defended on the grounds of the development of relations with the country, the undermining of the democratic system and the presence of Dutch nationals in the country.

KOHL CRITICIZES SCHMIDT AS 'RASH' FOR PLANNING MOSCOW VISIT

LD221222 Hamburg DPA in German 1105 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Opposition leader Helmut Kohl accused Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of clearly wanting to go to Moscow at any price. One day after indications by Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling that Schmidt would undertake his travel plans at the beginning of July, Kohl said in Bonn today that Schmidt had now moved away from previous statements on prerequisites for his Moscow visit. The chancellor had said only a few weeks ago that he would only go to the Soviet Union if it was clear that both sides would not merely repeat their well-known positions. Today the Federal Government is stressing that talks in Moscow would be useful in themselves. "Since the meeting between the French president and General Secretary Brezhnev, the chancellor must be aware that this can apply only for Moscow."

Kohl expressed the view that such talks served only the Soviet Union. The Kremlin has demonstrated to the world that the most important European heads of government are ready for talks without conditions and without a chance of any tangible results--and this despite Moscow's attack on Afghanistan, despite the Soviet "no" to disarmament talks on medium-range rockets, and despite the hard stand taken by the U.S. Government. Kohl charged that the chancellor was being rash with his "under any circumstances" travel plans. This even gave Moscow the opportunity of letting him wait as long as the Soviet leadership wanted. The Soviets could now even cancel the talks if, in their eyes, Schmidt had not complied sufficiently.

Western Powers Reject Complaint

LD221658 Hamburg DPA in German 1548 GMT 22 May 80

[Excerpts] Berlin--The Western protectorate powers have rejected the Soviet protest against the speeches by CDU chief Kohl and the CDU/CSU Chancellor Candidate Strauss at the CDU party congress in Berlin, by stating that freedom of speech in the Western sectors of Berlin would continue to be respected in the future as well. The Federal Government and the Bonn parties have also declared their objections to the Soviet note to the Western allies. A spokesman for the Western allies emphasized that it had been made clear to the Soviet side that its arguments could not be accepted.

The spokesman of the West Berlin Senat, Meyn, expressed his satisfaction at the reply of the Western allies, adding that the Senat (?shared) the Federal Government's view that there had been no violation of the Quadripartite Agreement. A Bonn government spokesman declared: "The attempt to stifle the free expression of political opinion in Berlin must be vigorously rejected."

CDU's Henrich Criticizes Protest

LD221146 Hamburg DPA in German 1112 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] Bonn--The CDU has rejected the Soviet statements. At the same time it calls on the Federal Government to "strongly oppose" the charges.

CDU spokesman Guenter Henrich spoke today in Bonn of "attacks" by the Soviet Embassy in East Berlin which were excessive and totally misleading. Moscow was again trying to question the legitimate presence of politicians from the Federal Republic in Berlin. Moscow must realize that with such overstretched attacks out of thin air against the CDU and CSU, it did the most harm to its frequently claimed principles of detente between East and West.

MEXICAN PRESIDENT LOPEZ PORTILLO CONCLUDES VISIT

Contract Signed Granting Credits

LD212056 Hamburg DPA in German 2021 GMT 21 May 80

[Text] Cologne--A consortium of German banks has granted a $300 million credit to Mexico. The contract was signed in Cologne today in the presence of Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo and many representatives of the German business community. The credit runs for 80 years and is primarily to finance public sector investments in Mexico. At an official reception earlier in the Cologne Town Hall, the Mexican president called for more intensive trade and cultural exchanges between Mexico and the Federal Republic. He then signed the city's Golden Book.

'North-South' Summit Plans Announced

LD221317 Hamburg DPA in German 1155 GMT 22 May 80

[Summary] Bonn--Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo will invite leading statesmen from industrialized and developing countries for a North-South summit in Mexico at the beginning of next year. This was announced to DPA today by Willy Brandt, chairman of the International North-South Commission and SPD chairman. The meeting, which will take place following a proposal by the Brandt commission, will also be attended by the Federal Government.

Brandt added that the conference would most likely take place in January or February 1981 and will deal with the recommendations of the North-South Commission which were published in February.

Lopez Portillo and Austrian Federal Chancellor Bruno Kreisky had discussed chances for such a summit, and in the course of a surprise meeting with Brandt in Bonn yesterday, briefed him on the results. Brandt said that all the governments which had been approached had shown interest in such a conference.

GISCARD SENDING ENVOY TO UK TO EXPLAIN BREZHNEV MEETING

LD222244 Paris Domestic Service in French 1300 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] France is continuing its campaign to explain the results of the Warsaw summit. Valery Giscard d'Estaing has sent one of his colleagues to London to inform the British on the tenor of his talks with Leonid Brezhnev.

A telephone call made yesterday by Jean Francois-Poncet to Foreign Office Secretary Lord Carrington prepared the ground for this special envoy. The minister of foreign affairs gave him a general outline of the discussions at Wilanow.

'CAREFUL' PREPARATIONS PRECEDED GISCARD TALKS WITH BREZHNEV

LD221035 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 21 May 80 pp 1,7

[Claude Vincent article: "A Long-Prepared Meeting"]

[Excerpts] Tomorrow morning Valery Giscard d'Estaing will inform the Cabinet of the tenor of his talks with Leonid Brezhnev in Warsaw; in the afternoon Jean Francois-Poncet will report to the National Assembly on these talks and today the foreign minister was due to go to Bonn to brief Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

Although Paris kept quiet before the Warsaw meeting, now that it has taken place the president of the republic clearly does not intend to keep what was said at Wilanow Castle to himself. Everybody will be able to judge whether he should or should not have gone.

Rarely has an apparently sudden meeting been so long and carefully prepared. Rarely have the pros and cons been so carefully weighed before a diplomatic invitation was accepted.

Moreover that was precisely the reason for the secrecy with which Paris surrounded this meeting right to the last minute. Indeed Mr Giscard d'Estaing did not want to commit himself on the Polish invitation until the last minute. He wanted to be free not to go if he felt that his move could be "seized upon" by the Soviet leaders and turned to their advantage alone.

In going to Warsaw finally to meet with Leonid Brezhnev, Giscard was aware that he was running the risk of criticism from those who believe in the value of punitive silence toward the USSR even though that silence was broken without any difficulty by the Muskie-Gromyko talks in Vienna. The president of the republic knew that the U.S. Government had been indirectly informed of the planned meeting from Polish sources quite a long time beforehand and he noted that the White House had made no objection. On his departure he took care to inform France's main allies after consulting Chancellor Schmidt at greater length.

France's policy has always preferred to avoid a return to the Cold War. By accepting Warsaw's invitation the president of the republic implemented that policy. In giving himself the opportunity of telling Leonid Brezhnev face-to-face that France still regards the Kabul coup as unacceptable and that the USSR must solve the crisis it has caused, Giscard knew that he was running the risk but the risk of giving one more chance to the safeguarding of peace.

LE MATIN: OLYMPICS DECISION RESULT OF GOVERNMENT 'CONFUSION'

LD230813 Paris LE MATIN in French 14 May 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Moscow Olympic Games--Head of State Disavowed"]

[Text] By deciding by an overwhelming majority to participate in the Moscow Olympic games, the French Olympic Committee (CNOSF) has placed the government and its Youth and Sport Minister Jean-Pierre Soisson in an extremely uncomfortable position at both the domestic and external levels.

Af far as this matter is concerned, the government is merely reaping the fruits of the confusion which it has sown. We are going, but...we are not going...we may go...we are no longer going and so forth. In the course of the past 6 months our authorities' attitude has never freed itself from the vagueness which has marked our diplomacy as a whole.

Now, in recent weeks, the pressures exerted by the government and the Elysee on the CNOSF have suddenly accelerated in a much more precise direction--French athletes should say "no" to the Moscow Olympic games. This recent show of determination by the government was not unconnected with the latest talks between Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Helmut Schmidt. According to FRG Olympic Committee Chairman Willi Daume, assurances were given to the German chancellor that France would not participate. Obviously, the CNOSF disagreed and did not give in to pressures. For the minister responsible, this was a hard blow. This would tend to prove the correctness of the majority leaders' longstanding contention that sport and politics are two separate spheres which should be kept apart; let us bet nonetheless that Jean-Pierre Soisson would have preferred to see this demonstration made not to his detriment... Public opinion, which already found it difficult to follow the minister's Olympic capers, will now have the pleasure of witnessing a wide split--caught, as France has been, between a government which would certainly prefer not to go to Moscow and our sports representatives who have decided to go there. What is its position?

Our German neighbors will also wonder. If they refuse to go to Moscow--and everything seems to indicate that they will--the Schmidt-Giscard tandem, which has often been represented as the only real team of European diplomacy, will undoubtedly be seriously handicapped. However, if it is true that the head of state told his friend Schmidt that he could forecast the CNOSF's decision, his image beyond the Rhine will not be improved. In fact, the sports authorities' "yes" to the Olympic games sounds like an equally resounding "no" to Valery Giscard d'Estaing. A victim of his indecision, the head of state has just been disavowed.

In addition to this first consequence, the French Olympic Committee's decision could encourage some so far undecided countries to follow suit. Even though hitherto many European nations seemed to be in favor of a boycott, the French decision may well partly reverse this trend.

Hits Government 'Indecision'

LD230815 Paris LE MATIN in French 17-18 May 80 p 2

[Editorial: "France's Gold Medal for Indecision"]

[Text] "The French Government has no intention of changing its attitude toward the question of French participation in the Olympic games," our Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet stated yesterday at the end of his talks with his American counterpart Edmund Muskie in Vienna.

To what "attitude" was the foreign minister referring? To the attitude which he had explained to our American allies, to that in whose favor he had argued when he met the Soviet leaders or to that which Valery Giscard d'Estaing put to Helmut Schmidt? Jean Francois-Poncet himself replied to this question by adding: "The French Government has not adopted any attitude..." What can be though of utterances of this kind whose incoherence has been obvious throughout? Since we have adopted no "attitude," what is the point of discussing it with anyone? France looks as though it will inaugurate the era of a diplomacy of nitwits.

In fact, it must be admitted that in the Olympic games affair the government, that is the Elysee, has not had enough elementary courage to clearly state whether it wished or did not wish the French athletes go to Moscow. In fact, since the French National Olympic Committee (CNOSF) is independent, a clear and official attitude of the government would not have prevented it from deciding the issue completely freely.

In fact--and everybody now knows this--the government exerted pressure on the CNOSF to make it boycott the games. It has failed. It could be expected that it would henceforth cease to hide behind the CNOSF. But it has not! Jean Francois-Poncet stated: "We will see whether the French Olympic Committee maintains the attitude which it has adopted or whether it comes to the conclusion that, in view of other decisions, a certain number of other considerations should be taken into account." The clarity of this statement will be appreciated....

What is the reason for the government's inability to express views on the Olympic games? At any rate, it is hard to see what advantage it could gain as a result of its indecision. Neither the White House nor the Kremlin has been taken in by this strange Saint Vitus' Dance and people in the world's chancelleries and main capitals must probably wonder what objective Paris is pursuing.

In the conduct of our foreign policy there undoubtedly are some ambiguities and wooliness which are becoming increasingly incomprehensible. We would gladly show patience if in the course of twisting and turning along this path we occasionally came across some constructive and positive result. It seems, however, that France has been losing a little more of its international prestige with every passing day.

USSR SEEN ESTABLISHING NEW 'BUFFER ZONE' WITH AFGHAN INVASION

LD230951 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 May 80 pp 1, 4

[Rene Dabernat article: "The New Soviet Buffer Zone"]

[Text] The military expedition which the USSR is carrying out in Afghanistan has now lost the local and circumstantial nature on which the Kremlin had thought it could place the emphasis. The extent and duration of this expedition, its rejection by the Afghan people and international concern are, however, extending its consequences and significance. It is not just the balance in Central Asia which is at stake. According to a preliminary assessment made in Europe it is an operation which the Soviet Union has undertaken "within the framework of a new phase in its world strategy" and which it is trying to have accepted by a regional conference (Kabul "government" plan) or even a world summit (Brezhnev plan).

The guiding principles behind this strategy are well known. First, the USSR considers that it changed the course of history in 1917 and took the head of a changed world which, without a general armed conflict against the West will, step by step, push the capitalist world toward socialism under the influence of the people's forces. Second, it regards any expansion of communism carried out with its support as natural, justified and definitive, provided it is carried out in the name of a national liberation movement however really representative the movement might be. [paragraph continues]

However--this is the most important fact today--the Afghan affair shows that the Kremlin, in the context of this strategy, is speeding up its penetration and is setting a precise target: the establishment of a new buffer zone.

The Kabul coup indeed cannot be isolated from the USSR's efforts to establish a series of bastions on the southern border of its empire and at essential points in the Third World--bastions which include principally Ethiopia, Aden and, in the wake of Vietnam, formerly Indochina. However, the USSR needs a central pivot between the African-Arab and the Asian wings of the network. It is Afghanistan which is intended to fill this vacuum. If the operation succeeds Moscow will have a lever with which it can later form the Afro-Asian buffer zone intended to complete the buffer zone which Stalin created in Eastern Europe--also by force and without an open war against the West.

Therefore the Kremlin needed a loyal satellite state in Kabul and not just "friendly" governments such as those formed by King Zaher until July 1973 and then by his cousin Prince Daoud from July 1973 to April 1978. The removal of Prince Daoud in fact marked the start of the new phase of Russian expansion into Afghanistan which was confirmed on 27 December 1979 by the ostentatious entry of Red Army troops and tanks.

However, as one of Mr Gromyko's recent interlocutors pointed out, this is not the Russian bulldozer being set in motion on a world scale with divisions launched next against Germany or Yugoslavia. It is a Marxist move in which arms in sectors far removed from the West coexist with diplomacy in the European or American sectors.

Does this mean we should disregard the local or circumstantial reasons for the intervention in Afghanistan? Certainly not. On the contrary: Some factors played a very important part and these include: repeated failures of the regimes imposed after April 1978; military desertions; rebellion of some of the population; exploitation of the shock sparked off by the seizure of the hostages in Tehran. However, the Afghan affair also illustrates the Soviet conviction that the world balance of forces is now tipped in favor of the socialist camp headed by Moscow. This conviction also permeates the four fundamental documents published in the USSR in June 1978. The first two, published in PRAVDA, related to China (13 June) and the United States (17 June). The third, devoted to Africa, took the form of a government declaration (23 June). The fourth was written by Mr Brezhnev himself and concerns Europe (Minsk speech on 24 June).

The fact that the Kremlin made its analysis of world developments known in the space of 12 days heralded a turning point, as we can now see. However this is not all. This analysis did not simply repeat the usual arguments: crisis of capitalism; inconsistencies and rivalries between the United States, Europe and Japan; unnatural Beijing-Washington collusion; danger of the arms race, especially for Germany; rise of the people's forces in the world and so forth. It also took account of the countries in which, well before the Kabul coup, the socialist camp was installed and strengthened without any Western retaliation.

The first group comprises Ethiopia, Aden and former Indochina. According to reliable sources, the USSR has in Ethiopia, at the lowest estimate, 700 tanks (T-34, T-54, T-55), 450 armored vehicles, 400 pieces of artillery, 85 fighter planes, 3 vedette boats, 1 landing ship. In addition there are at least 3,000 Russian advisers, 15,000 Cuban soldiers and 600 East German experts. In Aden the Soviet Union has 300 tanks and armored cars (T-34 and T-52), 120 to 160 MiG-17 or MiG-21 aircraft, 2 groups of Sukoy-22 and IL-28 bombers, 6 Antonov transport planes, 6 IL-38 maritime patrol aircraft, a few M-18 transport helicopters and Mogy assault helicopters, and 7 vedette or patrol boats. In Aden there are also several hundred Russian civilian advisers, 4,000 Russian military advisers, 1,000 Cuban advisers and almost as many East Germans.

Vietnam remains jealous of its independence but needs Moscow to extend its domination to the whole of Indochina. Making use of this dependence, the USSR is taking over some former U.S. bases including Cam Ranh, Da Nang and Bien Hoa. For the first time its Pacific fleet, equipped with nuclear submarines, is enjoying facilities in Cam Ranh which it was previously unable to obtain. In addition Tonkin and northern Laos house Soviet missiles. Finally the USSR is using some airports for military purposes. At present its aid to the Hanoi government approaches $1 billion per year. Its assistants, advisers and other "voluntary workers" are growing in number in South Vietnam as well as North Vietnam. Never before has Russia had such a strong base in Southeast Asia.

In none of these three cases did the Kremlin encounter Western opposition. In Afghanistan the lack of opposition was even more marked for almost 25 years. As early as 1954 the United States largely pulled back from this country by refusing to give it the arms it was requesting to try and recover some of Pashtunistan and Baluchistan from Pakistan. Khrushchev exploited this refusal in December 1955 during a short stop in Kabul at the end of a visit to India. For 20 years the USSR supplied almost all military equipment, built north-south roads (it is now clear why), trained hundreds of officers and junior officers, trained 20,000 Afghan soldiers in the Soviet Union, built a polytechnic school to rival the American University, and the school had 50,000 students to whom Marxist teaching was dispensed.

However, Afghanistan was not entirely a satellite and Moscow wanted to carry out this final step in keeping with the Afro-Asian buffer zone provided for in the context of the new phase in its world strategy. This step began with the ousting of Prince Daoud. A single party seized power, increased the number of communist cells, indoctrinated the "communist youth" and replaced the Islamic green by red. Then, on 27 December last year, came the brutal escalation of which we are all aware. However, the objective has remained unchanged from April 1978 to the present: to create an omnipresent party-state so that Afghanistan can one day become a sound tool for the Kremlin capable of one day taking over from Soviet troops at least partly.

Therefore the Afghan affair is part of an all-embracing outlook which is, according to the Brezhnev-Marchais communique of 10 January, "that of moving from capitalism to socialism." That is why many international circles are now weighing up the dangers of this affair. The Kremlin will therefore have to choose between adhering to its present objectives--at the risk of sacrificing detente and becoming bogged down in Afghanistan where the rebellion is growing--and general negotiations, especially with the West.

LIBYAN ASSASSINATION ATTEMPTS CONTINUE; 'CARLOS' TRAINING CITED

Attack on Restaurant Owner

AU220822 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 22 (ANSA)--A Libyan restaurant owner in Rome escaped an attempt on his life last night here. Salem Mohammed Fezzani, 45 and a naturalized Italian citizen, was shot at by another Libyan, Monsur Mezaroni Belgazem, who dined in the restaurant with two other Libyans. Belgazem, 25, fired three shots at Fezzani but they all missed. The assailant was caught by police after trying to flee the restaurant. Under police questioning, Belgazem said, "I was sent by the people to kill Fezzani." Rome has been the site of three murders of Libyan nationals in the last few months. Libyan citizens have also been killed recently in Britain and West Germany.

Training by 'Carlos'

AU221941 Rome ANSA in English 1920 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 22 (ANSA)--A Libyan tradesman identified as "Ali" was quoted in today's edition of the Milan daily CORRIERE DELLA SERA on the recent murder wave of Libyan nationals in Rome and other European cities. "Ali" said that the killers of the Libyan exiles--the latest was killed Tuesday in a Rome boarding house--"are fanatic youths who have no power but acquire it when they succeed in carrying out a murder." The informer also said that the killers are trained by Carlos, "the Venezuelan terrorist who now lives in Tripoli."

He said that the life of the Libyan exiles has become a nightmare in the wake of a long series of crimes. "We were more than a thousand a few months ago... In Rome there are 250 of us left, because my friends escape, seeking refuge in Morocco and Egypt, two countries that do not get along with (Libyan leader) Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi." Ali told the interviewer that the killers arrive in Rome under protection of the Libyan Embassy, perhaps carrying diplomatic passports which they later change.

The wave of Libyan murders has been getting broad coverage in the Italian press which reported today the arrival in Rome of the Italian ambassador to Tripoli, Alessandro Quaroni. Yesterday, the Italian Foreign Ministry stressed the "normality" of Quaroni's presence in Rome for consultations with ambassadors in nations with which Italy has frequent relations.

The Rome daily IL MESSAGGERO stressed "the absurd and incomprehensible facility with which the visiting killers mistake Rome for a frontier town."

Rome's IL TEMPO said that Al-Qadhdhafi says that the revolutionary committees (who plot the crimes, ed.) are 'organizations' which work on their own and that he has no control over these "custodians of the popular Libyan revolution." But the paper added that the time has come for everyone to come out in the open. "It is necessary that these people be pulled out of the shadows together with their protectors."

Rome's LA REPUBBLICA was very critical of government's stance on what it dubbed "the death squads" of Colonel al-Qadhdhafi commenting on the ambassador's call back to Rome, the papers said "faced with what is happening and the fact that Rome has become a free-fire zone for the Libyan colonel's hired assassins, there are a lot of other decisions that could be taken: Threaten a break in diplomatic relations and eventually sever them and, especially, seriously activate our counter-espionage services to uncover the Libyan gangs" the paper said.

ARAB LEAGUE OFFICIAL MEETS COLOMBO, DEFENDS GISCARD

AU230900 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 23 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 23 (ANSA)--Arab League Secretary-General Chedli Klibi has come out in defense of French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's summit talks in Warsaw this week with Soviet Leader Leonid Brezhnev. The Arab official viewed the meeting as a well-intentioned attempt on the part of the French president to ease world tensions in remarks to the press before leaving the Italian capital yesterday. Klibi flew into Rome Thursday for talks with Italian leaders on the European Nine's relations with the Arab world.

Even though the Giscard-Brezhnev meeting produced no immediate results, Klibi said that "it was important just the same because it enabled the dialogue between the West and the Soviet Union to continue". In an indirect retort to United States criticisms of the Warsaw summit, the Arab League secretary-general commented in part: "It's not that the meeting was a novelty, considering that it came in the wake of (U.S. Secretary of State Edmund) Muskie's talks in Vienna with (Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey) Gromyko and just prior to (West German Chancellor Helmut) Schmidt's scheduled summit with Brezhnev.

"Therefore it's not true that the French president's move was particularly eccentric....

"It fits perfectly well into Western policy".

Klibi also voiced pleasure for the opportunity of meeting Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo. In his departure statement, he said he particularly liked Colombo's "pragmatic approach" to the crucial problems affecting world peace.

"I too have the habit of dealing with things with a pragmatic spirit", the Arab League official said, "and that made our meeting pleasurable as well as productive".

As for the topics discussed by the two men, Klibi said that they reviewed "problems of common interest" and all matters having to do with the dialogue between the European and Arab communities. "I am very pleased to report that we shared similiar views about all major international problems," he commented. The Arab League secretary-general announced that he and Colombo agreed to hold routine consultations on all issues pertaining to Euro-Arab relations.

BERLINGUER ATTACKS GOVERNMENT STAND ON OLYMPICS PARTICIPATION

[Unattributed report: "Berlinguer: Act of Provocation"]

[Text] Enrico Berlinguer has released the following statement: "The stance adopted by the Italian Government against Italy's participation in the Olympics is an outright act of provocation, a further confirmation of its subordination to the present U.S. President. Among other things it has banned the use of the national flag and the national anthem of the Italian Republic. It is very surprising that the Socialist ministers, who as members of Parliament signed a document in favor of participation, permitted such a serious act against international detente. We trust that the Italian National Olympic Committee will autonomously resist the government's attempt to impose its decision and confirm its desire to participate in the Olympic games."

L'UNITA: OLYMPIC BOYCOTT REFLECTS FOREIGN POLICY 'REGRESSION'

[Unattributed commentary: "For a Few Votes (for Jimmy Carter)"]

[Text] So the Cabinet has fallen in line with the decision taken a few days ago at the Piccoli-Craxi-Spadolini [Christian Democratic, Socialist, and Republican secretaries, respectively] summit. But in fact neither group decided anything at all, if by a decision we mean something which is based on an autonomous analysis and free from intolerable constraints. They have merely agreed to fall in with a decision taken elsewhere for very petty--and even stupid--reasons which have nothing to do with the interests of such a troubled and lacerated world or with the will of sportsmen or the people.

The decision had already been made for them by Jimmy Carter, or rather by the staff which is organizing his election campaign. Because this is really what it is about: An election card played on the gaming table of the world and indeed with the world and coexistence among different peoples and regions as the stake. So much so that, as everyone knows, the White House promised to abandon the boycott if the Olympics were postponed a year--just long enough, in fact, for the Georgian farmer to regain the presidency.

Reading the statements by the various ministers following the historic act of courage, we found that they were based on the thesis that by deciding on a boycott we would prevent a break in the unitary approach of the Atlantic bloc and Europe. This is astounding. Where is this unitary approach (in general political terms or even restricted to the Olympics)? The characteristic factor is in fact exactly the opposite--namely, that some of the countries of the alliance and the EEC will go to the Olympics, while those which are not going have hastened to offset their decision with gestures of detente and dialogue. Thus, Mrs Thatcher has decided on the boycott but has acknowledged her Olympic committee's decision to participate; Giscard is sending his athletes and, moreover, meeting with Brezhnev; and Schmidt says no to the Olympics but is planning a visit to Moscow. In short, nobody is burning their bridges.

What about the Italian Government? The only verb it knows is to boycott (the USSR or Iran). Why? Would it be a distorted polemic to expect from it an attitude similar to that adopted by so many other Western countries and so many other political forces which feel the need and the duty to move autonomously on the international scene? We cannot understand what kind of message the governming parties think they have addressed to the country with their decision. All they have done is help to bury the Olympics now and in the future. They have helped to establish the absurd and seditious principle whereby you can only compete in countries whose foreign policy and internal regime are similar to yours and which you approve. They have added an additional reason for conflict and offense to the many existing factors causing tension. They have defied and annoyed the sporting world and the people who love and want to see sport.

And all for what? The only answer we can find is this: The Olympic affair is another sign of a change in our foreign policy, in a regressive and irresponsible direction. We are worried and also amazed. Amazed that a government that no longer includes the Social Democrats but which does include a large number of Socialists is moving backward, instead of carrying out additional positive changes in the foreign policy line which was announced--and to an extent implemented--during the period of democratic solidarity. Amazed that not only is it falling in with the U.S. stance, but basically--and this is the truth--it is opting for a particular variant in the U.S. attitudes, namely the one which forced Secretary of State Vance to resign and which is reflected in the decision to extend military commitments beyond NATO's geographical area. Does this mean that the theory that we must "always stay with the United States even when it is mistaken" has won?

Yes, we must include the Olympic boycott among the disputatious matters created by the regression which this government seems to represent and to be implementing. The serious problem in our international position--indeed, of our security and independence--is becoming a dramatic one. This is why we are loudly sounding the alarm and stating our commitment to struggle. This process must be halted before it becomes irreversible. We say this also to the sporting world and especially to young people: Let us guard peace and our security; let us demand dialogue and reflection.

PAJETTA COMMENTS ON INTERNATIONAL ISSUES IN L'ESPRESSO

LD221419 Rome L'ESPRESSO in Italian 18 May 80 pp 24-25

["F.D.V." interview with PCI Directorate Member Gian Carlo Pajetta: "But Italy Has a Bastion: Berlinguer--date, place not given]

[Text] Question: Deputy Pajetta, Hitherto the danger of another Barajevo has been mentioned only in connection with Iran. How many people believe that it is returning to the Balkans, especially after Tito's demise....

Answer: I do not believe so at all. Not only because I trust everyone's sense of responsibility, but because of my faith in the Yugoslav regime's strength, that country's steadfastness and the political intelligence of its leaders, who have shown that they can defend peace not only in their own nation but also beyond their borders.

Question: Christian Democratic Party [DC] Chairman Arnaldo Forlani has mentioned the danger of a Soviet attack, adding that we must be prepared for guerrilla warfare. And Forlani should be acquainted with the international situation. He used to be foreign minister.

Answer: Forlani spoke as someone preparing to lead guerrilla fighting from the microphones of radio New York and has reminded us that what I said about the Yugoslav leaders unfortunately does not apply to the Italian DC leaders. It would be serious and could be dangerous if Cossiga could see no further than the Sassari municipal elections and if the DC chairman, who was also once foreign minister, had Senigallia as his furthest horizon.

Question: But even Berlinguer has hinted at the possibility of pressures to try and alter the course of Yugoslav policy from outside, adding that the PCI would oppose any such attempt.

Answer: He did so in order to state that he has faith in Yugoslavia. Our desire for peace is connected with our aim to make a contribution. Unfortunately, though I believe I can be sure that there cannot be another Sarajevo at Sarajevo, the recent disastrous and absurd U.S. exploit in Iran is enough to show us that it could take place elsewhere. The Italian people should be involved in detente initiatives because, no matter where it happened, a catastrophe would directly threaten our country.

Question: In the fifties, Deputy Magnani was expelled from the PCI for saying, among other things, that the Italian Communists would defend national independence even against the Red Army. Do you believe that you could now approve such a statement?

Answer: I see no threat to Italy from the Red Army. I believe that our party has shown that it is both jealous of its own independence and able to assert it. If Italy had a prime minister and foreign minister capable of addressing Washington with the same spirit of independence and national pride in which we Communists have spoken in Moscow and Beijing and were capable of it also during a municipal election campaign, things would be better for our country.

Questions: Just over a month ago the PCI approved in the lower house a joint foreign policy motion together with the DC and the Italian Socialist, Social Democratic, Republican and Liberal parties. Have your stances diverged since then? If so, why?

Answer: Yes. Because of the U.S. pressure, and also because of hidden party--or even factional--motives concerning future or present government alliances.

Question: What is your main criticism of the new Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo?

Answer: For instance, he has gone back on the Foreign Ministry communique concerning the abortive U.S. Iran raid. That is no small matter. It is deplorable that good intentions and a show of political intelligence have been so quickly renounced by forgetting that a little courage is needed when the country's interests and even threats to peace are at stake. However, I hope that my verdict will not be irrevocable.

L'UNITA CRITICIZES GOVERNMENT ROLE IN NATO MEETING

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] The conclusion of the Brussels meeting shows--to put it briefly--that the European governments are being drawn onto a path which leads not to negotiations but purely and simply to a revival of the arms race. If you want peace, prepare for war. Is this the prevailing argument? It would simply be madness to think that. It would mean abandoning the demand--vital to Europe and the world--to work for balanced and controlled arms reductions and to seek political solutions for Iran and Afghanistan. Moreover, that was the solemn pledge made to Parliament by the Italian Government. Who authorized Cossiga to flout it? What are the Socialist ministers saying?

Of course the NATO debate was not entirely harmonious. There were various exceptions and the most striking was the FRG. We will see over the next few days, in the decision on the sanctions which the EEC is to take against Iran and in the broader contacts which will take place, whether the line which emerged from Brussels amounts to a general political choice.

It is important to add that all this seems particularly mistaken and unfounded at a time when--after long months of silence and lack of initiatives--the Warsaw Pact is finally giving signs of wanting dialogue, negotiation and an open approach and when the nonaligned countries are urging Europe to realize the need to negotiate. So why all this haste? Why not explore all the possibilities for meetings?

PCE'S MUNDO OBRERO INTERVIEWS ENRICO BERLINGUER

LD221833 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 14 May 80 pp 8-9

[Jose Boloix undated interview in Madrid with PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer: "Terrorism Can Be Isolated"]

[Text] Madrid--Showing great respect for and real and honest solidarity with the joint political plan of the PCE, PCI and other communist parties with similar stances, Enrico Berlinguer discussed the topic of relations between the parties, his tired gaze characterized by eyelids betraying the Italian Communist leader's customary silent work.

"The fundamental and principal reasons for our good relations are many," he explained to us: "This first lies in our past. The fact that the Spanish and Italian Communists were involved in their own countries in a struggle against two dictatorial, reactionary and fascist regimes. This is one of the reasons why the two parties have always had ties of mutual solidarity and mutual aid. During the Spanish Civil War many Italian Communists, antifascists and democrats struggled alongside the popular forces."

From Civil War to Eurocommunism

"And there are very prominent figures in our party, such as Togliatti, Longo, Dellittorio and many others, who had their first experience of the antifascist struggle on the Spanish battlefields, which later helped us carry out our own national antifascist resistance. That period very firmly sealed the bonds of unity between the Spanish and Italian Communists.

"But apart from this traditional fraternity both parties are pursuing a shared plan and aim, in a struggle to bring socialism to both countries and to all the West European countries, which are similar in many aspects despite particular national characteristics.

"Both parties are pursuing what has been called the policy of Eurocommunism, which we are trying to further consistently not only in our own countries but throughout the West European communist and workers movement."

Complex Italian Political Situation

The inevitably short and concise analysis which Enrico Berlinguer gave of the Italian political situation has many points of contact with the Spanish scene, apart from the logical differences. But points of contact can be revealing.

"The principal characteristics which we have managed to observe in Italian politics most recently," he explained, "are as follows, among which we include certain topics which have emerged during the past week:

"First, the fairly major blow dealt to terrorism. We believe that its effectiveness is due not only to something which we have been demanding for some time--namely, greater activity and efficiency on the part of certain state bodies, namely the courts, police, carabinieri and so forth--but also and above all to the unceasing and continuous popular mobilization carried out by the working class, in which our own party in particular has played an essential role. This has caused the terrorists to become isolated from Italy's real progressive social and political fabric.

"Terrorist activities are being rejected by the Italian workers movement and people and this has brought about a personal crisis on the part of immature politicians and terrorists who have begun to talk and to reveal the names of accomplices and leaders. This has enabled the courts and the police to act more promptly and effectively."

Terrorism Isolated

"In short, people's eyes have been opened to the real nature of the foundation of the entire aberrant ideology of terrorism, which has failed to penetrate the working class, and the sense of responsibility of the working class and the democratic institutions has been demonstrated," he said.

"As for the rest of the present Italian political situation, it is very complex from the economic and social viewpoints, and there has been a considerable deterioration in the situation.

"Frankly, inflation, the continuing crisis, the ever-present unemployment and the social crisis present a worrying picture. This reflects the general climate, but the most acute problem, which is affecting Italy most directly as the international situation deteriorates, is connected with the recently formed government.

"We believe that this Cabinet formed of Christian Democrats, Socialists and Republicans is definitely not equal to resolving the present political problems and our analyses have proved accurate."

Incompetent Government

"The present government seems completely incapable of tackling and resolving the basic problems of Italy's general situation and of guaranteeing our country's active presence on the international scene. Therefore, the opposition stance which we have decided to adopt with respect to this government is consistent with the country's and the workers' needs.

"What we need now is a government which will embrace in a united manner all the democratic forces, including the necessary representation of the PCI.

"The head of the Christian Democratic Party [DC] must now impart a thrust to the front opposed to the anticommunist policy which pursues a split within the workers movement and even among the people's forces. He therefore depends on us and we cannot remain in opposition forever, in view of the country's real needs.
